It would be right for us all, whatever views we take on the detail of the argument over Cyprus, to wish the Greek Prime Minister and the Turkish Prime Minister all success in the contacts that they are making. We do not expect these contacts to be public and to provide instant overnight headlines, but, we have a right to expect—the people of Cyprus have a right to demand—that the two prime Ministers will continue talking and improve relations until they can deliver a solution to the problem of Cyprus that enables it once again to live as one people on one beautiful island with respect for both communities.

Mr. John Marshall (Hendon, South): My hon. Friend the Member for Edmonton (Dr. Twinn) has asked me to apologise to the House for his absence. As a member of the Friends of Cyprus organisation, he would have liked to be here. However, he had to attend a family funeral.

I join those of my colleagues who congratulated our hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Shelton) on his good fortune in the ballot and on his wisdom in choosing this subject for debate this morning. Its timing could not be more fortunate, because there has just been a Turkish general election, there is shortly to be a presidential election in Cyprus and it is possible that the Greek elections will take place in 1988 rather than in 1989.

There is a danger that, 13 years after the 1974 invasion, Cyprus has been put on the back burner of foreign affairs. There are strong reasons why that should not happen. Cyprus has a strategic importance to the United Kingdom, which is emphasised by the presence of the sovereign bases there. The importance of Cyprus to our European alliance is clear, and anything that divides Greece from Turkey provides hope for our enemies and does nothing for the alliance.

The real importance of the debate goes much wider than matters of strategy, defence and real politik—it is a humanitarian subject. Whenever I have visited Cyprus, I have been impressed by the large number of people who have been adversely affected by the developments after the 1974 invasion. If we visit Nicosia and wander through the streets, we will suddenly come across sandbags that effectively divide one part of Cyprus from the other, and we then realise how artificial is the division between those two parts of the island.

Of course, there is the further fact that a large number of people have been deprived of their homes, having been driven out in 1974 from either northern or southern Cyprus. They live not in their historic homes, but in the temporary abodes where they have been since 1974. They had to leave homes in villages where their families had lived for generations, and where they had inherited their homes from their parents and their grandparents before them. I remember meeting someone from northern Cyprus who said, "Every day I can see my home, but I cannot live in it." That really underlines the tragedy of Cyprus. More than 100,000 people currently do not reside in their family homes.

It is, of course, much worse for the Greek Cypriots, who know or fear that their family homes are being occupied not even by fellow Cypriots, but by Turkish settlers. It would be as though our very own Bexley and Sidcup was occupied not by other English people but by Frenchmen. I am sure that even my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath) would object to that.

One of the real tragedies for the Cypriots is illustrated in Varosha. In 1973, it was very much the centrepiece of the tourist industry in Cyprus. Today, I am told that the hotels stand empty, rat-infested and crumbling. They are a monument to the failure of the world to persuade Turkey to disgorge the fruits of military victory.

A further tragedy was mentioned by the hon. Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George)—that 1,600 families still do not know what happened to their loved ones in 1974. They do not know what happened to their fathers, mothers, brothers or sisters—something that is quite intolerable in a civilised world.

The resilience of Cyprus is shown in its economy. In 1973, 264,000 tourists visited the whole of Cyprus. It is estimated that 1 million tourists will visit Cyprus in 1987 and they will visit the Greek sector rather than northern Cyprus. There has been a 25 per cent. per annum compound growth in tourism in Cyprus but only about 10,000 tourists from the European Economic Community will visit northern Cyprus. That emphasises the great prosperity of the Greek sector and the fact that the northern sector has become a peasent economy with very low incomes.

Clearly, the status quo is unacceptable. When people suggest that a bizonal federation is the answer to the Cypriot problem, they fail to emphasise that that would mean that many tens of thousands of people would be unable to live in their own homes. That is why the Select Committee on Foreign Affairs was very wise to suggest a system of cantons in Cyprus with Greek and Turkish communities living apart. At least many more people would live in their own homes than is currently the case.

The European Community has a positive role to play in the Cypriot problem. I remember meeting Cypriot politicians in the late 1970s. They asked when they could achieve customs union with the European Economic Community. I am pleased that a protocol was signed in October this year which will lead over the next 15 years to full customs union between the Community and Cyprus.

Reference has been made in the debate to Turkey's application to join the European Community. Like everyone else, I welcome the fact that the recent elections were generally considered to be democratic. Indeed, nine members of the European Parliament formed a delegation to watch the elections and they agreed unanimously that the elections were fully democratic.

Although we have seen democratic elections in Turkey, we must recognise that Turkey is providing the wherewithal for the Denktash regime to continue. Given the fact that there is an association agreement between Cyprus and the EEC, and given the importance that the Community attaches to human rights, it would be wrong for Turkey to be allowed to become a member of the European Community so long as it is pursuing its present policies in respect of Cyprus.

There must be a danger, unless there is some early movement in Cyprus, that partition will become institutionalised. The longer we await a settlement, the more difficult it will be to return to normality and trust between the two communities. There has been much discussion about the various constitutional proposals from time to time. The Secretary-General of the United Nations has made a series of very important initiatives. Unfortunately, at no time have both sides agreed to a particular set of proposals.

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): Will my hon. Friend give way?

Mr. Marshall: I am afraid I cannot give way. I have quite a lot still to say and I know that other hon. Members wish to take part in the debate.

Any movement towards improving the position in Cyprus relies upon a series of small steps one after the other rather than a major constitutional initiative. If there were a series of bridge-building exercises between the two communities, confidence might return to that beautiful island. We should not expect the answers to come from a series of high-flown constitutional initiatives. Clearly, the first two concessions from the Turkish community must be in regard to missing persons and Varosha. It is nonsense for that part of the island to be unoccupied. Concession in that regard could be a highly productive move in respect of tourism and building confidence between the two communities. The Greek community ought to make concessions to try to reduce the disparity in income between the two parts of the island, because the disparity is so vast that everyone who goes to Cyprus is struck by its size. Other hon. Members have referred to the fact that in the United Kingdom Greek and Turkish Cypriots can live together in peace and prosperity.

Mr. Holt: Under British rule?

Mr. Marshall: I hope my hon. Friend is not suggesting that we go back to the situation that prevailed before 1960.

Mr. Holt: I wonder whether my hon. Friend will tell us what he means by "a return to normality". Does he mean a return to British rule during the invasion or the period after the invasion? What is normal in this intransigent situation?

Mr. Marshall: We would like the normality which prevails in the United Kingdom, where Greek and Turkish Cypriots can live together in peace and harmony. That surely must be the prayer of all of us, including my hon. Friend who seems to be very good at making sedentary observations. That must be the prayer of the whole House.

1.5 pm

Mr. Donald Anderson (Swansea, East): I congratulate the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) on his feeling and knowledge about the tragedy of Cyprus. I certainly concur with his view that the problem would be best addressed by confidence-building measures and by small steps, rather than by expecting a big bang, which would be unlikely to occur, knowing as we do the depth of intercommunal suspicion, the geostrategic problems of the island and the long-standing problems between Greece and Turkey in the eastern Mediterranean.

The hon. Member, like all preceding speakers, drew on a reservoir of experience of the island. All hon. Members have striven for consensus, although some clearly lean to one or other side of the communal divide. It is my pleasure also to congratulate the hon. Member for Streatham (Mr. Shelton) on his selection of the subject, although I was concerned at his statement that it had been his intention to choose as his subject the poll tax, but that he had been mightily leaned upon by the Whips, who indicated to him that dire things would happen were he to continue with that course. I am most concerned that the Government are seeking to use a Friday, which has traditionally been a private Members' day, for their own ends. Is this another example of the way in which this authoritarian Government are seeking to dominate the procedures of the House?

Mr. Shelton: The hon. Member is talking nonsense. He does not always talk nonsense, but he was talking nonsense then. If he looks at Hansard, he will see that I said that the Whips suggested to me most courteously—that was the phrase I used — that there may be a Division on the poll tax, because the Labour party might be sufficiently misguided as to put down an amendment, so we might have had to have a vote. Purely for my own welfare in the Smoking Room of the House of Commons over the next few months, I did not wish to call in my colleagues on a Friday afternoon to vote on an amendment. I was certainly not leaned on; there was no authoritarianism at all. The hon. Member is talking absolute nonsense.

Mr. Anderson: I accept that the hon. Member was spoken to with total courtesy, but he cannot re-run the proceedings of the House and claim that the Whips did not intervene in a mafia-style operation with an offer he could not refuse, even had he wanted to. Hence it is to our benefit that we have a debate on Cyprus, moved in a felicitous way by the hon. Member. He has provided us with an opportunity to consider what is happening in Cyprus.

The wording of the motion is acceptable to the Opposition. Therefore, we hope that the House as a whole will be able to send a clear signal to all the parties concerned. The Labour party has set out its position from time to time in the clearest of terms. For example, in 1983 we said:

> "We support genuine guarantees for the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus, and the pursuit of intercommunal discussions sponsored by the UN for as long as both communities are committed to those talks."

The then spokesman for the Labour party, my right hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey), said at that time to the Friends of Cyprus:

> "Labour believes in a free, united, independent Cyprus —with no occupying foreign troops. We want to see all the Cypriot people living in one nation under the government of their choice, with a guarantee for all Cypriots of peace and protection for human rights. We want all Cypriot refugees to be able to return to their homes."

After UDI and the referendum, Opposition Front Bench spokesmen have been ready to set out their position, which is based on principle.

Following the proximity talks in 1984, the Secretary-General of the United Nations said that the prospects for a settlement were reasonable, and in January 1985 he told the Security Council in somewhat jubilant tones that he expected the meeting in that month

> "to conclude an agreement containing the necessary elements for a comprehensive solution to the problem, aimed at establishing a Federal Republic of Cyprus."

The hon. Member for Streatham properly set out the failure of both that initiative and the subsequent initiatives of the Secretary-General. Progress was not made. What is happening on the island can be characterised as drift, stalemate and the failure of the Secretary-General of the United Nations to make serious progress. I advise those hon. Members who dissent from that view to read the Secretary-General's last report. Its terms are negative and sad. The Secretary-General is personally very much on top of events in Cyprus. He knows very well what is happening there and he has the confidence of all the major players on the stage.

I invite hon. Members to look at the Secretary-General's report for the period 1 December 1986 to 29 May 1987, which was delivered to the Security Council on 29 May 1987. It makes very depressing reading. It says that no progress was possible, that the Secretary-General had pursued his efforts to find a way to overcome the existing impasse and that he had suggested a period of informal discussion, which might help to bring about progress, but that both sides had been unable to make progress. In effect, the Secretary-General said that both sides reiterated the positions that they had adopted in respect of the 1986 proposals.

In October 1987, the Minister of State said that we must still rely on the Secretary-General's initiatives. That refrain becomes a little less credible if we honestly come to the belief—the last report of the Secretary-General tends to confirm this—that he is unlikely to make any serious progress on his current initiative.

[Mr. Anderson]

There appears to have been a hardening of attitudes and, although the mediation of the Secretary-General has not broken down, he has done no more than keep the two sides together in a process of discussion. The last resolution of the Security Council in June 1987 — resolution No. 597 — rather despairingly requested the Secretary-General to "continue his mission of good offices, and calls upon all parties to co-operate with the peace-keeping force."

We all know that even the contingents to the peace-keeping force are under threat; the Swedish contingent is pulling out by 1 January 1988.

During the debate in October 1987, the Minister stated her belief that support of the Secretary-General's mission represented the most effective way of pursuing our goal in Cyprus, and she said that we are not alone in that belief. In the light of the current stalemate, we are bound to ask whether that remains a wholly tenable position and, if the current stalemate continues, at what point the Government will be prepared to take some initiatives. Otherwise, there will be considerable suspicion in the House that the formula of relying on the Secretary-General's good offices is being used as a cover for inaction on the part of Her Majesty's Government, for dragging their feet and refusing to consider any new initiative.

We recognise the complexities of the problem — the intercommunal and international relations aspects. The House has achieved a basic consensus. We agree that United Kingdom interests are involved for historic, human and military reasons and because of our contribution to the United Nations force, which last year cost us £27 million. We further agree that Britain, as a guarantor power, and for the reasons outlined, has, or should have, a role to play in the resolution of the conflict in Cyprus.

We should be most careful to do nothing that might be construed as according any form of recognition to the Administration in north Cyprus. The Minister of State, I am sure inadvertently, fell into that trap during the debate in October when she spoke about north and south Cyprus, as if one were dealing with two Administrations with equal validity.

We must remember that there is a republic of Cyprus, which is a member of the Commonwealth, and it is to that entity, and that alone, that we should accord any formal relations. We must be very careful, in terms of trade or any other relations, to do nothing that could be construed as recognition. I noticed, for example, that my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) referred to "President Denktash". That is the wrong way of addressing Mr. Denktash, and it accords a spurious recognition to the Administration in the north.

As to such recognition, the Minister may have noticed that in June 1986 the Christian Science Monitor quoted what it called "western officials" as saying that recognition — that is, the recognition of the regime of the Administration in the north — was inevitable in a few years' time. It claimed that several countries, notably Bangladesh, Indonesia and some Gulf states, had said that they would recognise the Administration if the United Nations initiative was seen to fail. That imposes certain constraints on us and makes it necessary to find an appropriate successor to the Secretary-General's initiative if it becomes clear that it is unlikely to produce a solution. Obviously, we have to bear in mind the objective of preventing any permanent partition in the island.

A key feature of the situation is the Turkish invasion and subsequent consolidation. Whatever may have been the legal and practical justification for the invasion — there are two ways of interpreting the treaty of guarantee — there can be no justification for consolidation of the position subsequent to the invasion. It is creating facts that make it more difficult to find a long-term solution to the problems of the island.

At the end of any process, there are certain principles that have to be upheld. For example, the invading Turkish army must withdraw. Several hon. Members have mentioned the problems of the settlers who provide some of the electoral support for Mr. Denktash. They probably now form no less than 20 per cent. of the residents of the Turkish Cypriot part of the island. There must be a settlement that involves justice for the refugees of both communities but, in terms of numbers, that must relate principally to the Greek Cypriot refugees.

There must be security guarantees for both communities. We must not allow a situation to recur such as that in 1974, which was able to justify the intervention because of the legitimate fears of the Turkish Cypriot community at that time. It is not for us to prescribe any form of internal constitution, but a unitary state seems less and less possible, given the facts.

Several hon. Members have mentioned the fact that there may be an opening of windows of opportunity in respect of making progress. That point was made by the hon. Member for Hendon, South (Mr. Marshall) and the hon. Member for Haringey——

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. David Mellor): I think that the hon. Gentleman means my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi).

Mr. Anderson: I am delighted to have that co-operation from the Minister.

The changes that have occurred or are in prospect include the Turkish elections. All friends of Turkey welcome the elections. Major reservations still remain about human rights, emergency powers and prisoners of conscience, but it is clear that Mr. Ozal clearly enjoys wide and popular support within Turkey. There is now a more open and genuine expression of opinion and a major step has been taken on the road to democracy within Turkey. Mr. Ozal has been given an opportunity several years before the next election, and he can decide whether to use it constructively in respect of building bridges with Greece and seeking to find a solution to the Cypriot problem. My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) quoted Mr. Ozal from the time of the election. He said that he is keen to improve relations with Greece.

The other new factor is the coming elections in Cyprus next February. If the result is conclusive, the leader who emerges will be in a stronger position in coming negotiations.

A number of hon. Members have referred to the Community and the Turkish application for full membership which is mentioned in the motion. That will give us and other Community members some leverage in respect of the situation in Cyprus. The motion says that we should show our concern about the island now that Turkey has applied to join the Community.

Judging by past statements, the Government's position appears to be that there is no nexus between Turkey's application to join the Community and the illegal occupation of Cyprus by Turkish troops. Surely that position is wholly untenable. We know the problems that are anyway likely to be posed by Greece in respect of that application. Now that Turkey has applied for membership, and given the known policies of Mr. Ozal, we cannot ignore the leverage that the EEC may have. If the British Government are serious about a settlement in Cyprus, the Turkish occupation is naturally relevant and it is a clear obstacle to progress on the Turkish application.

I know from my experience of diplomatic usage that one would not expect that to be trumpeted from the rooftops, but Britain and other members of the Community should make it clear to the Turkish Government that if they wish to improve their relations with Greece and reach a constructive settlement of the Cyprus problem — it places an economic burden on Turkey to have to support the northern part of Cyprus — they cannot ignore the European context and their wish eventually to join the Community.

Given that the context has improved as a result of the Community application by Turkey, the Turkish elections and, one hopes, the elections in Cyprus in February next year, how do we make progress? Clearly we cannot rely indefinitely on the Secretary-General's good offices if it becomes clear that they are not producing results. That would be a gross injustice to the refugees. As I said, one of the sadder facts is that time is not on our side. As time passes, new facts are established. The Turkish Cypriot community will increasingly lose its identification as Cypriots and the settlers will be seen to be putting down roots so that it will become more difficult to have them return to the mainland. By our inaction, we are supporting the continuance of the status quo and the permanent partition of the island.

My hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Erdington reminded us of the tantalising phrase used by the Minister at the end of the debate on 23 October:

"We have contingency plans to cover the fact that, sadly, it"— the international conference—

"might fail. I hope that we will not need to put them into action and I am sure that my hon. Friends will understand that those contingency plans need to remain confidential." —[Official Report, 23 October 1987; Vol. 120, c. 1112]

Clearly, there is a strong hint that the Government are coming to the conclusion that the current initiatives are not working and that something else needs to be tried.

I hope that the Government are prepared to take the House into their confidence to some extent. The Government have ruled out the idea of an international conference, proposed by the Greek-Cypriot community and opposed by the Turkish-Cypriot community. They have ruled out other possible initiatives. When will the Government be a little more positive and reveal what they have in mind? Do they rule out, as a matter of principle, any initiative on a guarantor power basis? Are they saying that the European Community has no role in finding a solution to the conflict on the island?

It may be said that the United Nations' initiative is not succeeding, but an initiative on a regional basis, involving the European Community and recognising the links of all the relevant parties within it, might be a more fruitful approach. Have the Government ruled out a European Community initiative as a matter of principle? If not, what are their positive proposals? Do they believe that there is leverage within the European context? Does the Minister consider that the Community has a special role? As yet, the Community has not been seriously brought into play.

The background is the illegality of the Administration in north Cyprus and the injustices, largely relating to the dispossessed Greek Cypriot refugees. That background requires not folded arms or sheltering behind the formula of the Secretary-General's initiative — that good offices must continue to be the best prospect — but serious concern and a willingness to take other initiatives.

Mr. Stuart Holland (Vauxhall): I trust that I am not interrupting my hon. Friend's peroration. In as much as it is not clear quite what the Government have in mind, has it occurred to my hon. Friend that perhaps the British Government are considering making it plain to the Government in Turkey that even their application to be considered for membership of the European Community will be opposed by Her Majesty's Government until real progress is made towards removing troops from Cyprus? It is anomalous and a double standard that this application should be allowed to proceed and then, perhaps, if Turkey joins the Community, there will be a trade-off by removing some troops or reducing some commitment. The application itself could be opposed.

Mr. Anderson: I would welcome the Minister's response to that suggestion. It is clear that Britain and the European Community are well placed to find a constructive end to the de facto partition on the island. We should not shirk that responsibility.

1.32 pm

The Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office (Mr. David Mellor): I am glad to have the opportunity to intervene in the debate. My only regret is that it is I, and not my right hon. Friend the Minister of State — the right hon. Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker) — who is replying to it, because she has responsibility within the Office for this area. As I think hon. Members will have seen from the newspapers, she has been on a long and arduous mission to southern Africa. She arrived back just this morning: hence my appearance here. I regret that I am not as well immersed in this topic as some hon. Members who have spoken and am not as knowledgeable of it as I am of those areas of the world for which I carry responsibility. I shall do my best to reply to the points. If my level of expertise proves inadequate, I shall refer to my right hon. Friend for an authoritative view.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Shelton) on his good fortune in winning the ballot and on the manner in which he opened the debate. He set it in a historical context, and it is interesting that, on a highly contentious subject, all those hon. Members who referred to his speech did so with approval. He was followed by the hon. Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) who is much respected and liked by hon. Members of all parties. He said that, despite the differences between the views of individual hon. Members, the House should be united in its desire to see some progress in Cyprus and some repair of the damage done by more than 20 years of separation.

I agree wholeheartedly, and that is the Government's position. Indeed, it has been the view of all hon. Members who have spoken. Although inevitably our debate has reflected the divisions in Cyprus which make it so difficult for progress to be made, and have made that difficult over such a long period, the debate has been conducted in a good atmosphere, and I have no shortage of points to which to reply.

As my right hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey had the opportunity to set out the Government's overall position a few weeks ago, and because other hon. Members wish to speak, I shall not repeat the points that she made. Instead, I shall try to focus on points on which I can give further clarification because that should be helpful and should enable me to sit down in good time so as to enable those hon. Members who have sat patiently through the debate, waiting their turn, to have the opportunity to speak. It would be unfortunate if they were unable to do so.

Because of our historic connection with Cyprus, we are perhaps more aware than any other country, outside the two that are especially concerned with the dispute for ethnic reasons, that the division of Cyprus is tragic and wasteful. We must bend every sinew to try to ensure that there is a peaceful, just and lasting settlement. Indeed, that is what we are doing. Our position is to try to see a settlement reached by giving every possible support to the United Nations initiative. I should make it absolutely clear that that initiative is designed to bring about a unified federal Cyprus. We support that. We do not recognise the so-called independent state in northern Cyprus, nor shall we do so.

I advise the hon. Member for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson), for whom, as he knows, I have boundless admiration and affection, that I cannot help feeling that he made a slightly bad point in referring to my right hon. Friend's comments during that Adjournment debate. All that she said was:

> "The division between the north and south of Cyprus, as it is sometimes colloquially described, weakens Cyprus in all sorts of way and it weakens the Nato Alliance."—[Official Report, 23 October 1987; Vol. 120, c. 1109.]

My right hon. Friend gave a geographical description of the realities of the division, and it is a bad point on the part of the hon. Member for Swansea, East to suggest that my right hon. Friend was somehow institutionalising that, or suggesting that the British Government support it. We do not. We seek a unified and federal Cyprus. My right hon. Friend was properly forthright in saying that she wished that the 1986 initiative of the United Nations Secretary-General had been accepted by both sides. That is the Government's position.

We have tried to help the Secretary-General in every way. Indeed, he has been kind enough to say how much he values our help. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has met President Kyprianou in London no fewer than five times since the start of the United Nations initiative and has had talks with the Secretary-General about Cyprus on several occasions. There are frequent high-level meetings with all parties in which we try to bring home our views in support of the Secretary-General's initiative. We believe that there is still plenty of room for making progress on that initiative and that he offers the best prospects of progress towards settlement.

It must be understood that any progress that has been made during the past few decades has always taken place within the framework of the United Nations. The record of initiatives outside that framework, without the co-operation of all the parties, has always been poor. The Secretary-General's initiative remains the best prospect. Indeed, he has just appointed a new special representative, Mr. Camilion, from Argentina. Obviously, it will take Mr. Camilion some time to take stock of the situation and consider how to move forward, but he should be supported in that effort.

Again, in a spirit of amity towards the hon. Member for Swansea, East I must point out the irony that, as the representative on earth of my right hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey this morning, I am compelled to defend the Government's support for the United Nations initiative. Yet when I return to the safer—in terms of my knowledge—but equally precarious—in terms of the difficulty of finding a solution—area of the Gulf war, I am berated by the same hon. Gentleman for refusing to support a United Nations naval force. There is an element of opportunism in the hon. Gentleman's comments.

Mr. Anderson: Surely it is the Minister who is now making a bad point. I am speaking of effectiveness. The whole Gulf initiative has spread over a much shorter time span than have the good offices of the United Nations' Secretary-General in respect of Cyprus. I simply asked, and ask again, whether the Government, as a result of the passage of time and the rather depressing reports of the Secretary-General, have decided that his initiative is on the point of being played out. If so, what other initiatives do they have in mind?

Mr. Mellor: No. Far from being played out, the Secretary-General's initiative is taking on a new lease of life with the appointment of a new special representative. The Secretary-General is not to be blamed for the failure of his initiative, which got a long way in 1986; it is more a sign of the intractability of the problem.

When people talk of a fresh initiative, there is always an element of hucksterism, because every politician worth his salt goes round with several fresh initiatives on every conceivable human problem falling from his pockets in the hope that the elucidation of the initiative is sufficiently attractive for people not to worry about the long-term inadequacies of the proposal. No matter who takes the initiative, whether the Government, the United States, the EC, or the Commonwealth Action Group, our view is that any such separate initiative would only cut across the Secretary-General's initiative and would not start from at least the position of hope of the Secretary-General's initiative, which both parties said they wanted and both states which support both parties said they wanted. That is why we believe that it is right to continue to support that initiative.

I reject the hon. Gentleman's implication that this is somehow just a fig leaf to hide our nakedness and unwillingness to think about the issue.

Mr. Anderson rose——

Mr. Mellor: I will give way, but the hon. Gentleman, who spoke for a long time, is simply making it less likely that I can allow others to speak, so this is his last bite of the cherry. I say again: please, please, please, may the good Lord give him the merit of consistency. The next time he starts lecturing me on United Nations initiatives on the middle east, I shall remind him of some of his comments this morning.

Mr. Anderson: If the Government are so confident about the initiative, why, oh why, did the Minister mention the contingencies?

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey was responding to a direct question about whether the Government had given any thought to what might happen if the Secretary-General's initiative failed. We do not believe that it will fail; it must not be allowed to fail. My right hon. Friend believes, as I do, that there are no parameters on the human imagination. Naturally, all the guarantor powers are giving some thought to what might happen if in future there were a vacuum. It would be irresponsible to do otherwise, and it would be extraordinary if we had not.

The hon. Member for Birmingham, Erdington (Mr. Corbett) put the point much more attractively. He did not use this as a weapon against the Government, but suggested that those comments might have given rise to some misunderstanding. The point was made with his customary fairness which, I am glad to say, is not merely confined to those Home Office issues on which we used to reach more agreement than was perhaps comfortable for our respective standing on either side of the great divide. All that my right hon. Friend was trying to do was to reassure the House that, of course, we look ahead. The Government's commitment is entirely to the Secretary-General's initiative, because that represents the best way forward. Anything that cuts across the Secretary-General would be unhelpful and would not get our support. We hope that we will not need to think in terms of a further initiative outside that framework.

In the time remaining I shall respond to some of the matters raised in the debate and I shall start with some of the interesting points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Streatham. We are aware of the grave problems caused to very many people by partition. We do not have the locus standi to make representations about people who are not British citizens, but we pursue with vigour the claims by British citizens. Indeed, one of my constituents was quite gravely damaged in respect of his enjoyment of his property rights. The Turkish Cypriot claims commission has made about 350 awards to British citizens. The Turkish Cypriots say that some claims must await a political settlement. That is regrettable, and we shall continue to press our case.

My hon. Friend spoke about the draft framework of agreement of March 1986. That does not deal in detail with questions about the withdrawal of troops or the freedom to move, settle and own property. It reserved discussions on these items to working groups, with the proviso that the settlement was to be accepted only as a whole. We hope that that adequately safeguards all positions. Once again it is a matter for regret that this was rejected by one side.

In that context, I was asked about the bearing that all this has on Turkey's application to become a member of the European Community. It would be wrong for us to make any comment about the merits of Turkey's application in advance of receiving the commission's opinion. That is the proper way forward. I do not use that as an evasion and I make it clear to the House that the question of Turkish troops is a matter of great concern to the Government and we raise it regularly with the Government of Turkey. It was raised by my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary when the Turkish Foreign Minister came to London in July. We have always made it clear that the withdrawal of Turkish troops must form part of any comprehensive future settlement.

I was also asked about tanks, in an intervention by my hon. Friend the Member for Bexleyheath (Mr. Townsend). He has been here for much of the debate and no one has done more to ensure that the issue of Cyprus is kept before the House. It was he who instigated the Adjournment debate on the matter in October.

We raise the matter of tanks at every opportunity, and when my right hon. and learned Friend the Foreign Secretary raised it with the Turkish Foreign Minister in July, he was told that this upgrading was part of a programme that involved the whole Turkish army. The Turkish Foreign Minister also spoke about recent arms purchases by the Cyprus Government. We understand that the Turks have recently withdrawn some tanks. I say clearly that they should reduce the number still further, and we shall continue to urge them to do so.

My hon. Friend the Member for Streatham and other hon. Members spoke about Nicosia airport. As my hon. Friend said, there are now airports in both parts of the island. We would certainly welcome any project that had the support of both sides and which brought them together in practical co-operation. Plainly, practical co-operation is a commodity of which there can never be too much in the present unhappy situation.

The hon. Member for Tooting (Mr. Cox) made a number of interesting points, especially when he spoke about Turkish settlers to which other hon. Members have also adverted. We believe that the issue will have to be dealt with in the context of an overall settlement. The hon. Gentleman and one or two other hon. Members make it seem as if there can be no other approach to the issue than theirs and that the problem is merely one of the colonising of a part of Cyprus with immigrants from Turkey. When the issue is described in those terms, that course of action may seem irresistible, but there is another element that makes the matter more complicated. I shall raise it in the interests of those who read the report of the debate and not because the Government take a contrary view to that which has been expressed by the hon. Member for Tooting. I wish them to appreciate, as we have had to do, that the matter is not so straightforward as some would suggest.

The Turkish Cypriot authorities say that some of those who are now counted as settlers are Turkish Cypriots who left the island in the troubled times of the 1960s and who have exercised their right to return. Others came to the island early on, when they were needed to help restart economic activity, and have since married into Turkish Cypriot families. There are others who are seasonal workers, who come and go. I put that on record merely to show that this is a somewhat more complicated matter than some would imply.

The hon. Member for Tooting talked about trade with northern Cyprus. It is true that we continue to trade with it, and the hon. Gentleman criticised us for doing so. The terms of article 5 of the European Community-Cyprus association agreement provide that member states trading with Cyprus should not discriminate between nationals or companies in Cyprus.

I must disagree with the hon. Gentleman when he implied that a trade embargo would bring about progress in Cyprus. On the contrary, we think that it would be wrong to try to punish individual Turkish Cypriots in that way. Indeed, we think that it would be counter-productive. Such a course would merely increase the disparities between the two communities. We know that GNP in the southern part of the island—I shall tread carefully in making these descriptions because I do not want them to be used against me in a future debate, when who knows who might be responsible for replying to it—in the republic that we recognise is three or four times that in the north, which exists only because of an occupation and independence that we do not recognise. An embargo on the north would serve only to increase the north's dependence on Turkey.

We hope that the United Nation's Secretary-General's efforts will be successful. Unfortunately, there is little evidence to suggest that either side is prepared to make the effort necessary to build up the trust and confidence that is needed if any permanent solution is to be found. This would be true whosever hat was tossed into the ring as a mediator or who came as St. George to the rescue.

Too many of the comments made by those on both sides in Cyprus seem more concerned with obtaining support for their entrenched positions and bringing pressure on each other rather than anything more constructive. It is time for both sides to try to reacquire the habit of continuous and constructive co-operation that marked the earlier stages of the intercommunal talks. We think that Mr. Camilion's appointment is a challenge to which both sides must respond. Our role, in common with other members of the international community, is to encourage and support both sides in making difficult decisions and compromises, without which no solution can be found.

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): First, I must offer my apologies to the hon. Member for Streatham (Mr. Shelton) for having been unavoidably delayed in getting to the House this morning and for having missed most of what he had to say. I wish warmly to congratulate him on selecting this topic for debate. It has offered the House an opportunity to discuss at length and in some detail the problems of an island for which Britain has a special affection and responsibility, and to do so at greater length than was possible in the all-too-brief Adjournment debate on Cyprus some weeks ago.

I first became acquainted with the problems and the sadnesses of Cyprus through my constituents, many of whom are Cypriots from both communities. Some of them suffered grievously in 1974. For example, one had a home that he had built on his family's land at the place where he was born, but which was subject to occupation by the invading forces. Since 1974, he has not been able to return to his home. He has not received any compensation for the loss of that home, and has had to make an entirely new life in Britain. He is but one of many who have been similarly affected.

I have, however, become much more closely and directly acquainted with Cyprus because, two months ago, I had the opportunity to visit it and to see at first hand the current position. I do not think that anyone could possibly fail to be moved by the sight of the green line that divides the island. To come down a busy shopping street in the middle of Nicosia—the capital city—and be confronted with a troops station, an area of wasteland patrolled by the United Nations with barbed wire making an impenetrable barrier, can only make one very careful and sad about the state of the island.

Looking down from the Troodos mountains in the area around Morfu — the greenest, most beautiful and productive part of the island—and then to talk to those who used to live there and can no longer return, is a moving experience. One can look down on the ghost town of Famagusta from the dividing line, and know that no life goes on in many parts of it and that its former residents cannot return there. From most parts of Nicosia, one can look up and see the Turkish flag that has been inscribed in stone on the hillside above that town.

To see that at first hand and to experience directly what it means to have a bitterly divided island, is something for which I am most grateful. It has certainly dramatically altered my thinking on Cyprus——

Mr. George: My hon. Friend has spoken poetically and with great feeling about the suffering on one side of the island. Does he think that his process of self-education would be enhanced if he had the opportunity to talk to people on the other side of the island? He would find there some 103 villages whose people were swept out between 1964 and 1974.

While my hon. Friend can cite many instances of suffering on one part of the island—all of which I endorse—is he aware that the whole island has suffered? If any blame is to be apportioned it should not be—as he appears to be suggesting—largely in one direction; it must be widely apportioned.

Mr. Smith: My hon. Friend has anticipated some of my arguments. I certainly do not wish to apportion blame entirely to one side. I happen to believe that the greater part of the blame must lie with the invading armed forces, but there has been tragedy on both sides of the communal divide in Cyprus.

Many Turkish Cypriots have suffered, and they suffered before 1974. When trying to establish a solution, we must ensure that all Cypriots, both Greeks and Turks, can feel entirely safe, protected and fulfilled within the solution. I have found very few Greek Cypriots who disagree with that analysis. If I had the opportunity—I would welcome such an opportunity—to talk to people in the northern part of the island, I suspect that there would be no overwhelming disagreement with that ultimate aim. I am sure that my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, South (Mr. George) agrees with that aim.

The hon. Member for Dorset, West (Mr. Spicer) clearly stated that Britain has a special responsibility in these matters. We are the former colonial power and were one of the guarantor powers under the constitution. As the hon. Member for Dorset, West rightly said, the British Government did nothing when the 1974 invasion occurred. I freely admit that that was the wrong decision. Intervention could have prevented what has subsequently become a long-running tragedy.

What do we want to achieve? There must be substantial agreement among hon. Members about the ultimate aim. There must be an undivided island, with full freedom of movement for all Cypriots everywhere in the island. The existence of the green line and the restrictions that it places on people's movements, is the overwhelming and dominant fact of life in Cyprus today.

The removal of that division must be one of the elements of any solution. As part of that solution, it is important that people are regarded as Cypriots, not as Greeks or Turks. They must be regarded as part of a united island of Cyprus. To achieve that, and to ensure that the rights of minorities within the island are protected —that must be part of a solution—the proposals that have consistently come forward over the past decade and a half for a federal solution as the constitutional objective must be the right way forward. It is a considerable tribute to the Greek Cypriot community that it has consistently accepted the idea of a federal solution as something it could support if its position were safeguarded.

There must also be international guarantees. We must ensure that the guarantees are worth more than those written into the original constitution. However, other steps must also be taken. There must be a genuine effort to investigate the cases of missing persons. About 1,600 Cypriots are missing and many families do not know what has become of relatives or what happened to them in 1974. That still rankles with many people and has left many families torn, divided and embittered. It is important that those cases are investigated. It is a pity that there has not been more co-operation with the efforts of the United Nations to investigate those missing Cypriots, especially from the authorities in the northern part of the island.

There must be a solution to the problem of refugees returning to their homes, and to the issue of the settlers. While I accept from the Minister that some settlers who have come from mainland Turkey to the north of the island have a genuine connection with Cyprus, many have not. In discussions to find a solution, we must resolve what will happen to those settlers and to the property they occupied, which formerly belonged to others.

Thirdly, and most importantly, the withdrawal of foreign troops is absolutely crucial to any solution. On that point I disagree with what my hon. Friend the Member for Walsall, South said about the 1986 proposals from Perez de Cuellar and their acceptance by Mr. Denktash. The presence of foreign troops on the island meant that the Cypriot Government was not able to accept the proposals which were accepted by the Denktash regime. Foreign troops from both sides must be removed entirely from the island before there can be any solution which will ensure a free-moving, protected and integral federal Cyprus.

The key lies not just in the continuing and valiant efforts of the Secretary-General; as much pressure as possible must be brought to bear on the newly elected Government of Turkey to ensure that they are prepared to withdraw Turkish troops. That message must be made crystal clear to Mr. Ozal and his Government. Our Government are in a very strong position to bring such pressure to bear, as Turkey wishes to join the European Economic Community and become part of the European community of nations. We must seize the opportunity to reinforce the message about the withdrawal of troops.

Everyone who goes to Cyprus must be struck, as I was, by the disparity between the two economies. I have nothing but admiration for the success of the Cypriots in the south. While I accept that they have the advantage of the sun, which brings tourists, the economy, which has a growth rate of 6 per cent. a year, unemployment at 2 per cent. and inflation at 3 per cent., must be the envy of even our self-congratulatory Chancellor of the Exchequer. That success has been achieved in the past 15 years, at the same time as one third of the population has been rehoused, and the south of the island provides all the electricity to the north entirely free. In those circumstances, it is an economic miracle. On the other hand, the north is still economically depressed. That is a tragedy, especially bearing in mind that in 1974 the north had about 70 per cent. of the island's economic resources. It is important that we look at how the economies have developed.

I ask the Minister whether he will ask his colleagues in the Department of Trade and Industry to investigate the tax position of the Polly Peck company. Polly Peck is using resources that were seized when the north of Cyprus was invaded. I understand that it claims immunity from United Kingdom taxation under our "no double taxation" policy. I understand that it pays no tax in northern Cyprus either. Given the most recent substantial profits of the Polly Peck company, it is important to establish under which taxation regime it ought to come. If Polly Peck is not paying tax in the north of Cyprus, we have to ask why the no double taxation policy is being maintained for Polly Peck and why no corporation tax is due on the company's British activities. I hope that the Minister will draw the attention of his colleagues in the Department of Trade and Industry to that fact. It may be worthy of investigation; the Government may be forgoing tens of millions of pounds in tax.

I draw attention also to British-owned property in northern Cyprus, to which the owners do not have access. I understand that there has been considerable disagreement between Mr. Leonard Fairclough, the owner of the Salamis Bay hotel, and the authorities in the northern part of the island. Furthermore, the properties of British American Tobacco in Cyprus include the building in which the parliament of the so-called Turkish republic of northern Cyprus meets. British property owners have rights in northern Cyprus. I refer not just to those who have lost their homes but also to those who have lost access to commercial properties and the income derived from it.

I should have thought that that issue would have concerned a Government who believe in market forces as sincerely as this Government appear to do. The Government ought to be pursuing those matters, and I am surprised that they are not doing so. This debate may encourage the Government to take an interest in them.

We must make every conceivable effort that we can to bring about a just resolution of the problems that face Cyprus. We must bring unity to the island and ensure the removal of all foreign troops. We must give a warm-hearted people back their homes, their freedom of movement and their remarkably beautiful homeland.

2.12 pm

Mr. Matthew Carrington (Fulham): This has been a very useful debate, which has highlighted many of the problems that face the unhappy island of Cyprus. My hon. Friend the Member for Streatham (Mr. Shelton) is to be congratulated on having introduced it, thereby giving the House an opportunity to discuss in detail the problems of Cyprus. Those problems are shared by many of our constituents. I am sure that I am not alone in having constituents who came to this country from Cyprus, or who have families or property there. They have suffered grievously from the problems that have beset Cyprus during the 13 years since the island was invaded. But they suffered before the invasion because of the conflict between the Turkish and the Greek Cypriots. It is difficult for us to imagine their sufferings during the last 20 or 30 years.

The problem goes back before the time, when we fought against EOKA. It goes back to when there was already conflict between the Greek and Turkish settlers on the island. It led to Cyprus being brought into the British Empire. Disraeli returned with peace and honour from a conference to solve the Turkish problem and produced Cyprus out of the bag as a way of ensuring that we could defend the entrance to the Suez canal.

My only reason for mentioning that is that today Cyprus is a key strategic location to monitor what is happening in that part of the Mediterranean and the middle east. As long as Cyprus is an area of potential conflict between the Greeks and Turks, and as long as they see that as the crystallisation of their mutual dislike for each other, the problems in the Aegean sea will never go away, despite the friendly noises that emanate from time to time from Athens or Ankara. There is always potential for a change of regime in Greece or Turkey, which could spark a major conflict between the two countries.

Turkey considers itself to be a member of the European family, and I understand that at some time it would like to join the Common Market. In reality, it is more strongly allied to the middle eastern countries, partly through the historical conquests that the Turks went in for under the Ottoman empire, but, more strongly these days, because of the religious connection between the bulk of the population of Turkey and the strongly religious countries that form the bulk of the middle east.

Turkey's role is pivotal to the solution of the Middle East problem. Turkey recognises that, as do many of the Gulf countries, which are so critical of finding a solution to the conflict in the Gulf.

Cyprus is part of that problem, and it is part of the solution to the tragic conflict in Lebanon. Cyprus has played a role there, largely because of its geographical position, but one that in itself complicates the search for a solution to the dispute between the two nationalities on the island.

We must consider in detail what has happened in the past, as we have in the debate, and in a way that brings to the fore the traditional historic problems of the island. We must try to discover the reason for those problems and the reason for the mutual antagonism between the Turks and Greeks on the island. This tragic dispute has built up a large measure of mutual distrust between the two populations. We know from our own experience as constituency Members that, away from the island, the two communities can live happily together. The conflicts of the island do not carry over to their lives here.

What has led to that mutual disregard and mutual problem? It is an historic problem that has resulted from the dominance of the Greek community, which is partly based on numbers but also, as we heard from the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith), on the ability of the Greek community to prosper while the Turkish community has always failed to do so. Thus, there has not only been a national and religious separation between the two communities; there has been a growing economic separation. It has been growing not only since the invasion but long before, and had its roots way back in the developments of the 1950s and 1960s.

The difficulty is deep. The distrust was fostered by the Greek community when it tried to seek union with mainland Greece. That was the trigger point which led to the invasion by the Turkish troops in 1974. That invasion was deeply to be regretted. It was quite wrong and possibly, as we have heard, could have been stopped at the time. I was not terribly closely involved with that situation but I was involved in the middle east and my view is that the problems involved in stopping the invasion are easily understated. I suspect that the determination of the Turkish Government to invade Cyprus was strongly held and that they would not willingly have backed down from something they had perhaps wanted to do for 10 years — to put their troops on to the island to solve the problems once and for all.

It is no good us looking closely at history in the hope of finding a solution to the present problem. What has happened has happened and, regrettably, it cannot be undone. We have to look forward to find a solution. Greece is a member of the Common Market and Turkey is a member of NATO. Turkey has ambitions to join the Common Market, but I am sure I am not alone in believing that the Common Market would be wise to look carefully before it extends its borders to incorporate Turkey. I do not say that for any reason other than a purely economic one and, possibly, because of the relationship between Turkey and the middle east.

Once a country such as Turkey becomes a member of the Common Market, the likelihood of being forced to bring in countries such as Morocco, Tunisia and possibly even Algeria would increase, and the pressure to do so would become much more difficult to resist. We may find that the Common Market would cease to be a cohesive political and economic community—if it is not that at the moment, at least it has some hope of becoming one —and would become much more politically diverse. It would be more difficult to provide for the consensus we need if we are to develop the structure of the EEC institutions.

Cyprus, sitting as it does between Greece and Turkey, is a problem for which we have to find a solution. That raises the question of what shape the solution should take. We have heard of the various proposals that have come forward from the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Broadly speaking, they amount to some form of federal government inside the island. We have heard from the Select Committee the proposal to go one step lower down and develop cantonal government inside the island, presumably on the Swiss model. Both those proposals have considerable objections to them.

The two communities used to live closely together. To separate the two is as difficult as separating any other communities, in that it could give rise to injustices as to who is to move out and who is to move in. That would lead to disputes between families and communities which will live on long after everybody has forgotten the basis for the disputes. We are faced now with a de facto partition of the island which has led to a de facto federal system, although not a federal Government. By force of arms we have two separate countries inside the island. Rightly, the northern Government is not recognised by the British Government. Nevertheless, in terms of economic and military power, it exists as effectively as if it had been set up under a proper legal process.

There has been no solution to the serious problem that affects my constituents, as I am sure it affects other hon.

Members' constituents, of what is supposed to happen to the property inside either of those two parts of the island. We have not even begun to find a solution to that problem. It is not a problem of economics alone. It is not a question of the Turkish or Greek Government saying to those who were dispossessed in 1974, "We will compensate you for what you lost and enable you to start up somewhere else." The problem is much more emotional than that.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Hornsey and Wood Green (Sir H. Rossi) said, someone who has been farming a piece of land for years and whose family has been farming it for generations is emotionally attached to that land; it is historically his home. No amount of compensation can reconcile him to the loss of that land.

Economic factors may well dictate that those who have been displaced come to terms with it in the management of their affairs. However, I doubt whether many of them have come to terms with it in their emotional attitude to those who displaced them, whether Turks or Greeks. That is the major difficulty. We cannot go in and impose solutions from outside — any more, I fear, than the Turkish or, indeed, the Greek Government can now impose a solution. We need to find a solution acceptable to both the Greek and the Turkish communities in Cyprus that will reconcile their irreconcilable differences. It will take a long time to find such a solution. In the meantime, the best that we can hope is to give the Cypriots a period of tranquillity, peace and relative economic prosperity to provide the hope of a reconciliation of the two communities in the future.

The United Nations initiative perhaps goes some way to producing those conditions. It allows the possibility of the two communities running their own affairs and coming together in a federal structure of government inside the island which will allow for economic compensation to be made and for the communities slowly to learn to trust each other as they have not trusted each other—certainly in living memory and perhaps for the past 100 years.

That trust will take a long time to build up. The process needs to be given time not just by the United Nations coming in and providing a basis for a settlement and for troops to police any disputes that may occur. It must be given time by all of us assisting Cyprus and assisting north Cyprus to catch up with the economic prosperity of the south of the island. Unless the two halves can come together economically, the envy and greed that exist behind the injustices and moral outrage on the surface will never die down and time will never be allowed to heal the wounds and the divisions between the two communities.

We need to provide external stability. As a country with long historic links with the island, which still has bases there—the island is still of major strategic importance to us, to NATO and to the Western world—we need, in conjunction with America, which has a great influence on Turkey, to provide stability and economic assistance to both parts of the island. When the federal structure of government is in place and when the Cypriots have reached the stage at which there can be elections for the federal Government as well as for the local Governments, we can enable the island to overcome the economic disadvantages of the north which is being propped up largely by the influx of money from Turkey, which Turkey can ill afford.

My suggestion to the Government is that we need strongly to support the Secretary-General's initiatives. We need to give all the encouragement that we can and bring pressure, through NATO and the EEC, on Athens and Ankara to work towards a solution. We need to provide the back-up of economic support.

Mr. Holt: Does my hon. Friend agree that in such delicate situations it does not help when the British Government make positive statements——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

BBC (Injunction)

2.30 pm

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn and St. Pancras): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I should be grateful if you could give us some help. In his efforts to protect the interests of the House earlier, Mr. Speaker agreed to grant a private notice question on the Government's injunction against the BBC Radio 4 programme, because the Government had refused to make a statement. In deference to Mr. Speaker's efforts to protect our interests, we did not want to prolong the questions following that private notice question, especially as private Members' time would have been eaten away.

We have been pressing for the Attorney-General to make a further statement, not just because of what he said in his reply, but because he was talking about the culmination of a number of substantial efforts by the Government to interfere with the independence of the BBC. This is not an isolated incident. There have been political appointments to the board of governors and, rather more extraordinarily, political appointments at a lower level in the BBC, where in effect Government appointees are seen as spies on what is going on. We have seen overt pressure from the chairman of the Tory party——

Mr. Richard Holt (Langbaurgh): Name one.

Mr. Dobson: If the hon. Gentleman will wait, he will hear.

We have also seen the Government's efforts to prevent the Zircon film from being shown to Members. We have seen the raids on the BBC in Glasgow, which were related to that. We are in danger of the rest of the world seeing the BBC's reputation as so besmirched that it becomes the British State Broadcasting Corporation.

The Attorney-General said this morning that the Government had to intervene so late in the day because they had read about the nature of the programme in the gossip column — the "Peterborough" column — of The Daily Telegraph. We should like the right hon. and learned Gentleman to explain why, if the Government behave with such vigilance when they see references in The Daily Telegraph to spy programmes, they did not respond when they read the pre-reviews in the weekend newspapers on the programme's content.

One reference stated that the first programme would examine the roles of MI5, MI6 and the Government's communication headquarters and that next week it would cover "yesterday's spies and today's politicians." The Observer assured us that what would be broadcast today would be "an opening delve" behind the scenes of MI5, MI6 and GCHQ and the question would be: "Why do we need them?"

All the information that needed to be available for the Government to mount any legal action has been available to them for a long time. The Opposition find it difficult to believe that the security services did not know that there was to be a programme about the security services. If they did not, they are totally incompetent. We should like to know, Madam Deputy Speaker, whether you have had any representations from the Leader of the House or the Attorney-General to the effect that they intend to make a statement, preferably today or, if not, on Monday.

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): I have heard the hon. Gentleman's long point of order. He will understand that the Chair is not responsible for the lack of early response which he claims that the Government could have made. However, I can tell him that Mr. Speaker has not received any application from either the Leader of the House or the Attorney-General to make a statement.

Ms. Joan Ruddock (Lewisham, Deptford): I should like to underline some points about the timing and contents——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. May I guide the hon. Lady? She must make a point of order and not a debating point. Will the hon. Lady please make a direct point of order to the Chair?

Ms. Ruddock: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. This is further to the point of order raised by my hon. Friend the Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson). I believe that the Government have a duty to make a statement to the House about the banning of that programme. I believe that because I was a participant in the programme and know something of its content.

My invitation to appear on the programme was given to me verbally in September. It was followed up by an open letter that came through the post to the House of Commons. At every stage, this matter was completely open and available to everybody, and I was free to tell everybody that I was participating. The programme covered an exploration of matters that are absolutely fundamental to the House of Commons, such as whether the citizens of this country have a right to know the way in which this country is governed, and whether the media, and especially the BBC, are free to inform the citizens of this country——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady is not making a point of order. I shall give her another minute to come to a point of order. I know that she has a lot to say and if, within a minute, she comes to a point of order, I shall try to deal with it.

Ms. Ruddock: Thank you, Madam Deputy Speaker. I repeat that, because these are fundamental matters, we have the right to know. Therefore, the appropriate representative of the Government must make a statement so that we can understand. What we have been told is clearly inadequate and inaccurate and does not serve the purposes of the House of Commons. It does not reveal to us the reason for the banning of the programme. That suggests that the Government will be politically embarrassed by something in the programme and that it is not a matter of state——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Lady has stated a matter of opinion, which, I fear, is not a point of order. However, she will have heard me say that it is not for the Chair to request or require Ministers to come to the House to make a statement. The Chair must wait for that application and request to be made.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): Further to the point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. The House recently debated what I believed to be a fundamental transgression of justice, when the pass of my research assistant Mr. Ronan Bennett, was suspended by the House. Many allegations were made at the time about the security services and the need to take the lid off them.

I think that you will agree, Madam Deputy Speaker, that it is disturbing that, when the BBC was apparently about to take the lid off the security services and their undemocratic behaviour, the Government have sought to use draconian powers to prevent those programmes from being broadcast. My point of order to you, Madam Deputy Speaker, is this. If the Government are not prepared to apply through a Minister to make a further statement to the House, or to arrange for a debate in Government time on the security services, will you advise us by what means we can ensure, immediately or as soon as possible, that a full debate is held on the question of the control, or lack of control of the security services and the way in which public money is being spent by the Government to prevent the BBC from broadcasting information about the security services in just the same way as they prevented the broadcast of the films about Zircon, and the way in which they are spending vast sums of money to prevent the publication in this country of Peter Wright's book on the security services?

Madam Deputy Speaker: The hon. Gentleman must not attempt to drag the Chair into debate. This is not a matter for the Chair. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will note that the Leader of the House is in his place and may well have noted his comments.

Mr. Holt: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) said that the programme was intended to blow the lid off the security services——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. That is not a point of order. I am dealing with specific points of order and I have been fairly generous. Mr. Skinner.

Mr. Holt: I have not yet reached my point of order——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I have called Mr. Skinner.

Mr. Holt: On a point of order——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I must ask the hon. Gentleman to resume his seat. I shall return to him. I can hear only one voice at a time.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): According to section (4) of Standing Order No. 11, which deals with Friday sittings,

"At eleven o'clock Mr. Speaker may interrupt the proceedings in order to permit questions to be asked which are in his opinion of an urgent character and relate either to matters of public importance or to the arrangement of business, statements to be made by Ministers, or personal explanations to be made by Members".

It goes on and on, and I shall not read it out.

Earlier today, the Speaker was placed in a somewhat embarrassing position. It would have been straightforward and easy for the Government to comply with Standing Order No. 11 and tell the Attorney-General to make a statement about the freedom and liberty of the British people in relation to the gagging and censoring of the BBC by a party whose friends own and control most of the press, and which has a majority of 100 in the House. The Speaker was placed in a predicament from which he could hardly escape. Although he allowed several questions on the private notice question, because the matter was of such major public importance, he could not allow questions to continue much beyond half an hour.

You will recall, Madam Deputy Speaker, that several weeks ago we had a similar situation on not such an important matter. The Attorney-General had to be brought to the House at 2.30 pm to explain himself and several hon. Members took the opportunity to ask him questions. With the censorship and gagging of the BBC—God knows where it will end with this Government—and with the apparatchiks stuck inside the BBC who somehow could not tell the Government about this programme that was about to be broadcast on Radio 4——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the hon. Gentleman coming to his point of order?

Mr. Skinner: Yes. In accordance with Standing Order No. 11, it would have been far better for this pathetic Government to tell the Attorney-General to make a statement. Because he has not made a statement but has put the Chair in this predicament and been dragged here kicking and squealing for a private notice question, he should be brought here now.

Hon Members: Now.

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. There are no procedures by which any Minister can be brought to the House now. [Interruption.] Order. I have heard the hon. Gentleman's point of order and he is correct in saying that under Standing Order No. 11 a private notice question can be asked or a statement made at 11 o'clock. Mr. Speaker wisely chose to accept the private notice question.

Mr. Holt: In accordance with our Standing Orders, we had a private notice question this morning and the Attorney-General came to the House and answered it. There is absolutely nothing further to add. Hon. Members will recall that, if the BBC had made available the information sought by the Official Solicitor, the Government would not have needed to seek an injunction, nor would we have needed a private notice question. All these points of order are wholly spurious, including mine.

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): I wish to raise a different point of order, but I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) that the Speaker has been placed in an embarrassing position. It may have been because of the atmosphere at that time that I was unable to make myself understood and I should like to raise the issue of an hon. Member's ability to represent the interests of his constituents and others who refer matters to him or her as a Member for Parliament.

When we had problems in the past about obtaining clear answers to clear questions directed at Ministerial Departments and when Mr. Speaker received complaints about that, he said that there were other ways of investigating the issues. Very wisely, he never specifies those but says that other hon. Members may well advise the unfortunate Member who is in difficulty. One of those ways is the investigative journalist, and by gagging investigative journalists the Government are restricting the ability of hon. Members — especially Opposition Members—to represent their constituents.

Madam Deputy Speaker: I have heard the point of order made by the hon. Gentleman. This is becoming a debate, and I shall now accept only direct points of order.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): If the Attorney-General chooses to come to the House to discuss this matter, will it be in order for Conservative Members to raise with him the unhealthy obsession of the Opposition and perhaps some people in the BBC with our own security services, while they do not seem to be interested in the activities of the Russians?

Madam Deputy Speaker: We will see what happens when the time comes.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): Further to that point of order. I appreciate the difficulties that you are in, Madam Deputy Speaker, and I do not wish to add to them. I know that Mr. Speaker was in similar difficulties earlier. This is not the first time that something like this has occurred when a matter of considerable public interest has been raised and when it has been impossible for the House to discuss matters in the form of a ministerial statement—even when those matters have been widely discussed outside the House in the media and among people generally.

My point of order is, would it be in order for the Leader of the House, who is present, and whom perhaps I can address through you, Madam Deputy Speaker, to make some statement about the affairs that were discussed this morning by way of a private notice question? Perhaps he could give an assurance that, in future when a matter of grave public concern that is clearly of interest to the House is raised outside the House, he will use whatever good offices he can to ensure that the appropriate Minister comes to the Dispatch Box?

Madam Deputy Speaker rose——

Mr. Banks: My point of order——

Madam Deputy Speaker: I thought that the hon. Member had made his point of order.

Mr. Banks: I was going to conclude my point of order be saying that what we witnessed this morning was the Opposition doing their job and that it is generally accepted that we do that adequately and well. We had to raise on a private notice question a matter that should have been the subject of a ministerial statement. The Attorney-General spoke about the horse leaving the stable. It is not the horse that we are concerned about, but the mess that is left in the stable, and that is why, to make sure——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. I have got the hon. Gentleman's point of order, which was, would the Leader of the House make a statement? The answer is no. Points of order are for the Chair to deal with and I shall deal with them.

Mr. Stuart Bell (Middlesbrough): This is a point of order specfic to you, Madame Deputy Speaker, about the events of this morning. This is not the first time that we have seen a steady erosion of the rights of the legislature in the face of the Executive. They have consistently refused to come to the legislature and explain themselves and hold themselves accountable. It is made clear in the pages of "Erskine May" that one of our privileges in the legislature is freedom of speech.

My specific point of order to you, Madame Deputy Speaker, is that the usual channels exist. Mr Speaker this morning, and you this afternoon, are constantly placed in embarrassing situations. The way out of that embarrassment is through the usual channels that Mr. Speaker has, you may have to explain to the Government that it is not good enough for the legislature to be treated in this fashion.

Madame Deputy Speaker: I am sure that that point of order has been heard on the Treasury Bench and in all parts of the House.

Hon. Members: Come on, make a statement.

Madame Deputy Speaker: Order. I call Mr. Allen.

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): Further to that point of order, Madame Deputy Speaker. I had the great privilege of being one of the draftsmen or authors of the very renowned document on the security services that currently constitutes Labour party policy for debates. Of course, that was before I entered the House. As a new Member of the House, I had obviously assumed that the security services could be discussed in the House. I find that I cannot table questions at the Table Office——

Madame Deputy Speaker : Order. This point of order does not at all relate to this matter.

Mr. Allen rose——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman should listen to me for a moment. Unless his point of order directly relates to this matter, I must ask him to resume his seat.

Mr. Allen: There is no departmental Select Committee overseeing the security services, and we cannot even examine the moneys that are allocated to those services. Therefore, we depend wholly upon the freedom of the press, so-called — [Interruption] — to examine these matters. I find now that we cannot even listen to a BBC radio programme. I was looking forward to the programme, as I cannot ask questions in the House on security matters, I thought that I might learn something from outside. I ask that the Leader of the House or the Attorney-General — again, there is no departmental Select Committee to oversee the work of the Attorney-General—make a statement to Parliament rather than through the pages——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. There has been no application made to Mr. Speaker for a statement today.

Mr. Chris Smith (Islington, South and Finsbury): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I appreciate fully the difficult position in which Mr. Speaker was placed earlier this morning as a result of the Government's failure voluntarily to make a statement. Mr. Speaker generously allowed more time than he would normally have done for a private notice question. However, I and several of my colleagues who wished to question the Attorney-General were unable to do so because of the time constraint which Mr. Speaker was under.

There are major issues at stake involving the relationship between the Government and the media and the Government and their own servants, civil servants. Also involved is the degree of accountability to which a Government and their actions can be held by the general public in a democracy. These are all important issues, and one of the mechanisms that is open to us to pursue them further is to apply for an emergency debate on Monday.

I ask you, Madam Deputy Speaker, whether Mr. Speaker or yourself will be able to view favourably an application, if it is tabled on Monday, for an emergency debate to discuss these grave issues which arise from the Government's——

Madam Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. Gentleman's concern but he has raised a rather hypothetical point. The hon. Gentleman must wait until Monday.

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): Will the tape of the programme that the Government have prevented from being broadcast be made available to hon. Members so that we can make a reasoned judgment about the programme, either through the good offices of the Government in their contacts with the BBC, if they have any, or through Mr. Speaker's Office? If the tape is made available to hon. Members themselves, will they be permitted to play it in the House?

Madam Deputy Speaker: That is not a matter for the Chair. It is certainly not a matter to which the Chair can respond.

St. Saviour's School, Ealing

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Neubert.]

2.53 pm

Sir George Young (Ealing, Acton) rose——

Mr. Frank Dobson (Holborn amd St. Pancras): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. We all recognise the predicament in which you, and Mr. Speaker found yourselves this morning. We, too, are in a predicament. Of all the possible justifications that the Attorney-General might have advanced for yesterday's court action, I do not think that anyone in his wildest dreams believed that he would say that it was based on an item in a gossip column in a Tory newspaper. That is why we are pressing, rather unusually, for a further statement. Neither you, Madam Deputy Speaker, nor Mr. Speaker, can require a Minister to make a statement, but can you confirm, Madam Deputy Speaker, that if a private notice question were to be submitted on Monday and accepted by Mr. Speaker, the Attorney-General would then be required to make a statement?

Madam Deputy Speaker: That is somewhat hypothetical, as I explained earlier. I recognise the seriousness of the situation and I have no doubt that any private notice question submitted would be considered extremely seriously.

Sir George Young: I welcome this opportunity to bring to the attention of the House the position of St. Saviour's Church of England first school in my constituency. I do so with some optimism, as I recall the decisive intervention of my hon. Friend the Minister when, on a previous occasion, I raised with him the need for a new building at Twyford school, which is also in my constituency. I hope that the case of St. Saviour's will provoke the same favourable response.

Earlier this week, the House gave a Second Reading to the Education Reform Bill, which is designed to make the system more responsive to the wishes of parents and to raise standards. In 15 minutes today, my hon. Friend the Minister could achieve those objectives for St. Saviour's without the hassle of having to put a Bill on the statute book.

I wish to provide some basic background information. St. Saviour's became a first school in September 1974, having been an infants' school since 1861. The site could not be enlarged at that time as the boundaries of the Ealing town centre scheme had not been finalised, so the additional children had to be accommodated in temporary huts erected in the playground. The site, which was already substandard under the school premises regulations of 1972, then became even more so. In 1981, new school premises regulations were published, with which, as an existing school, St. Saviour's must comply by 1991. Under those new regulations, the site and the building are substantially substandard.

By 1982, the town centre scheme had been finalised and it was then possible for the council to define the site for the school extension. Three years ago, the land was transferred to the education committee for the purposes of St. Saviour's, and ever since then has been lying as waste ground, while conditions at the school continue to deteriorate.

[Sir George Young]

In 1983, the governors — in consultation with the local education authority, the diocesan board and the Department of Education and Science area architect — instructed architects to draw up a development plan for the school. That was then submitted to the DES for approval in the building programmes for 1985-86. That submission was refused. Further submissions for the building programmes for 1986-87 and 1987-88 were also refused. They have been resubmitted for 1988-89, and as I speak they are sitting in my hon. Friend's in tray — hence the opportune timing of the debate.

The London borough of Ealing has designated the development as its top priority among the bids from local voluntary schools. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and my hon. Friend were successful, a few weeks ago, in obtaining additional resources for the education programme in the public expenditure round. I have no doubt that they could not find a better project in which to invest those additional resources than the much delayed building programme at St. Saviour's.

I want to describe some of the problems at the school, which I have visited on many occasions. I have already mentioned the temporary huts that were put up in 1974. Quite naturally, they are progressively deteriorating and there is a growing cost in maintaining them. When it rains or snows, because those temporary huts are in the playground the children who need to use the facilities in the main school get wet. There is no library at the school as there simply is not room for one. Therefore, no library skills can be taught, nor can a wide variety of reference books be made available to the children.

The main building, which dates back to 1861, has a highly dangerous spiral staircase, on which several by-elections have almost been caused. Quite rightly, that must be replaced for safety reasons. There is no medical room, and any ill child must stay in a stock room. The administration area is inadequate—there is not sufficient room in the staff room for each member of staff to sit down at any meeting. There is only one adult lavatory. The head's office must be shared, which makes it difficult to hold confidential discussions with parents. The playground is very substandard in quality and quantity. There is an acknowledged need for a nursery unit as there is no nursery school in any of the Church schools in the borough. There is nowhere for parents to meet.

It is much easier to show the problems than to describe them, so the parents and teachers have prepared a brochure — which I handed to the Secretary of State a few weeks ago — which gives a visual representation of the problem that speaks for itself. In a nutshell, the school is desperately overcrowded, especially in the administrative area. Those are not the sort of condition in which teachers should teach and children should learn in the 1980s.

Despite the difficult conditions, it is an excellent school. It is very popular and is over-subscribed. The reasons for that are entirely to the credit of Angela Mark, the head, the staff, the governors and the parents, who have created a popular, cheerful and successful school under rather difficult conditions. They have already raised £38,000 towards the rebuilding project and are raring to go. However, they cannot possibly proceed without support from the Department of Education and Science. Of course, the cost rises each year. Therefore, the parents and the Friends of St. Saviour's find themselves shooting at an ever-moving target.

The parents and teachers have been patient. They are not militants and they have made their case to me persuasively and forcefully. They are aware that the economy of this country is picking up. They look around west London and see visible prosperity because the Government's economic policies are working. It is becoming very difficult for the local Member of Parliament to explain why, year after year, funds are not made available for this worthwhile project.

The parent body, the Friends of St. Saviour's to which I have referred, is totally committed to the school. There is an active parent-governors body and good support is given to the many extra-curricular and social events organised at the school. My hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway), many of whose constituents have children at the school, has asked to be associated with the plea that I am making this afternoon.

I want to sum up my case to my hon. Friend the Minister. The site and the buildings are substandard according to the Government's education regulations. There is an acknowledged need for a nursery school on the site. The land for the school is now available and presently lying as waste ground on the edge of a very successful and environmentally pleasing town centre. The plans are available and the scheme is ready to go. The parents and governors are very committed and will raise their 15 per cent. share. The local authority and the diocesan board support the rebuilding of the school and local people vote confidently in favour of the school by over-subscribing to it year after year.

If there is one school which represents all that the Government and the Conservative party stand for in terms of standards, parental commitment and the rest, it is St. Saviour's. I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will be able to give the parents, governors and myself the assurance we seek, that the building programme will not be delayed further.

3.2 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Education and Science (Mr. Robert Dunn): I begin by congratulating my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young) on obtaining this Adjournment debate on the voluntary aided capital programme and, in particular, the proposed building work at St. Saviour's school in Ealing. I am glad of the opportunity to reply. My hon. Friend has spoken eloquently on behalf of the school, but this is by no means the first time that he has raised this issue. His active and continuing support for the school typifies my hon. Friend's keen concern for the interests of his constituents. I ask my hon. Friend to thank those at the school who were responsible for preparing the silver brochure which graphically and pointedly shows the range and variety of problems that the school faces and has faced for some time.

My hon. Friend spoke of the problems faced by the staff and pupils of St. Saviour's. Before I reply to those points, I should like, if I may, to touch briefly on the general issues of national policy which underlie this question, since this background will contribute to an understanding of the position of St. Saviour's.

There are in England almost 25,000 primary and secondary schools within the state system, maintained by local education authorities which meet their running costs. Most of these — rather over two thirds — are county schools, provided by the local education authorities. The remainder, known as voluntary schools, were provided by voluntary bodies — principally the Church of England and the Roman Catholic Church. This arrangement, introduced by the Education Act 1944, is known as the dual system. Voluntary schools make a very important contribution to the maintained sector of education. They bring variety to the provision of schools and they extend the range of educational choice available to parents for their children. The Government are strongly committed to the preservation of the dual system and the fostering of voluntary schools.

There are different types of voluntary school, but the largest category—to which St. Saviour's belongs—is that of voluntary aided schools. These are distinguished from voluntary controlled schools—the next most numerous type — by the greater powers possessed by their governors and by the division of responsbility for certain capital building and repair work. In brief, the governors are responsible for external repairs and for the greater part of capital building work, and they are entitled to seek from the Department a grant of 85 per cent. of the cost to them of such work.

The funds available to the Department for disbursement to governors are, however, limited. My hon. Friend knows that a fundamental element of the Government's economic strategy is the achievement of a sustained reduction in the rate of inflation. Only in this way can we generate the economic growth that is needed, and which is happening, to underpin the provision of state services. In order to achieve this, it is essential that public expenditure must be limited: expenditure on education, by both central and local government, cannot be exempt from the need for restraint.

In distributing the resources which are available for the voluntary sector, priorities therefore have to be decided and choices—often difficult choices—must be made. I should like, if I may, to outline the approach we take here. Each year the Department invites all local education authorities to submit details of their plans for capital expenditure in the following financial year at the county and voluntary schools in their areas. In aggregate, these plans always exceed what the country can afford. We are therefore faced with the difficult task of deciding between competing voluntary aided school projects. In doing so, our first priority is necessarily to meet continuing expenditure required for projects which have already started—committed expenditure, in other words.

Having met committed expenditure, our next priority must be to programme new projects which result from published statutory proposals which have been approved by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under section 13 of the Education Act 1980. They are normally of two kinds: either the proposal is to establish a new school which is needed to provide new places in areas of population growth—this is known as "basic need"—or it relates to a reordering of provision in an area where the school population is declining, perhaps by amalgamating two or more schools so that a proportion of the surplus places can be taken out of use. Approval of such proposals places upon the proposers a statutory duty to implement them by a specified date. If building work is required in order to implement the proposals, it has to be programmed to avoid the risk of the proposers being unable to fulfil that duty.

The third priority, after such "committed" and "statutory" expenditure has been allowed, is for work which, for convenience, I will refer to under the blanket title of "improvement". Projects of this sort include minor alterations or extensions to existing school buildings; replacements of failing or unsatisfactory structures, such as outside lavatories or aging "temporary" accommodation; and work intended to bring a split-site school on to a single site.

Regrettably, we are always faced with many more worthy projects in this category than can be accommodated within the available resources, and hard choices have to be made on the basis of the urgency of the need and the general condition of the school buildings in question. In making these assessments, we draw upon the views of the maintaining local education authorities and, where appropriate, upon the expertise and experience of the Department's officials. We also have to bear in mind the implications of the projects in terms of capital expenditure in future years.

For the current financial year, committed expenditure took more than two thirds of the available resources for capital work at voluntary aided schools. Governors' plans for expenditure on projects to start during the year totalled nearly five times the balance of resources available for new work. Meeting the priorities I have outlined therefore used up all the funds available for new work and, in those circumstances, many schools have inevitably had to be disappointed.

A small reserve has been retained to cover those projects which are dependent on statutory proposals, which were awaiting my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State's decision when the allocations were announced. No other reserve is held, but, as a normal part of the management of resources, my Department regularly monitors the progress of expenditure on projects at aided schools. If this monitoring shows that understanding is likely, it will enable us to authorise the start of further new projects.

Turning now to St. Saviour's, may I say that I take very seriously the representations made by my hon. Friends the Members for Ealing, Acton and for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) and others about the needs of the school. I am in no doubt about the difficulties pupils and staff are facing. I am sure that my hon. Friend will understand that our inability to programme the project so far is not the result of pervesity or lack of knowledge about the school's case, but is a difficult decision of the sort that must be taken when what is desirable exceeds what is possible. As my hon. Friend may well be aware, Ealing local education authority has again put forward the project at St. Saviour's for inclusion in the Department's programme of starts for 1988-89.

All authorities' plans are currently under consideration, and allocations for capital expenditure at county and voluntary schools are expected to be announced later this month. My hon. Friend will understand, I am sure, that I am not in a position to give any assurances at this stage about the likelihood of programming the work at St. Saviour's. He will, I know and hope, accept the assurance I can give that the points that he and others have so eloquently made will be taken fully into account before decisions are made. Again I congratulate my hon. Friend on obtaining this Adjournment debate.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at eleven minutes past Three o'clock.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Housing

Mr. Key: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, how many housing units the Church Commissioners own, lease or rent; and, of these (a) how many are currently occupied and (b) how many are vacant (i) prior to being let, or repaired or refurbished or (ii) prior to being sold.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners' property investments include 5,607 housing units as follows:

	Number
Occupied	5,478

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

"Spycatcher"

Mr. Campbell-Savours To ask the Attorney-General what were the costs to public funds of the recent application to the High Court and Appeal Court for a delay in the trial of Attorney-General v. The Guardian and The Observer in relation to the "Spycatcher" book.

The Attorney-General: The cost to public funds is not yet known.

Mr. Evan Evans

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General for what reason the Director of Public Prosecutions rejected a request by police investigators to examine the bank accounts of Mr. Evan Evans, a defendant in the alleged conspiracy to kidnap leaders of the African National Congress; and if whether he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The hon. Gentleman has been misinformed. No such request was made.

Legal Aid

Mr. Battle: To ask the Attorney-General what representations the Lord Chancellor has received on the White Paper "Legal Aid in England and Wales: A New Framework"; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 13 November. The Government have received representations expressing a range of views on the various aspects of its White Paper on legal aid.

Official Secrets Act 1911

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General what criteria are used when deciding whether or not to grant immunity from prosecution under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 to persons writing books about the security or intelligence services.

The Attorney-General: My policy in relation to the granting of immunity from prosecution in any case is the same as that of my predecessor. He stated, in a reply of 27 January 1986 to a question from the hon. Member for Middlesbrough (Mr. Bell), that his policy was to authorise an assurance being given to a witness that he would himself not be prosecuted only if he was satisfied that it was unlikely that the witness would otherwise be willing to give a full and truthful account of what he knew, and that it was necessary, if the true facts were to be established or, as the case may be, if evidence was to be obtained which might permit proceedings to be instituted against others, that the witness should give that account. Such an assurance was always conditional upon his telling the truth. As my predecessor explained, it is often a relevant consideration that there is no prospect of criminal proceedings being instituted against an individual, whatever his own anxieties on that matter, or that there is no evidence against him upon which such proceedings could be founded other than what he himself may say.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General if immunity from prosecution under section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911 has been granted since 1979 to any author publishing books on the work of the security or intelligence services.

The Attorney-General: No.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will arrange for a complete transcript of the Appeal Court hearing of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings to be placed in the Library.

The Solicitor-General: Arrangements have been made for a full transcript to be placed in the Library following delivery of the Court of Appeal's judgment and reasons.

PRIME MINISTER

Crewe and Nantwich (Visit)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit the Crewe and Nantwich constituency with a view to discussing its inclusion in a new list of assisted areas.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. The designation of assisted areas is a matter for the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who has no plans, at present, to review coverage of the assisted areas map.

Select Committee on Science and Technology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to the answer of 10 November, Official Report, columns 161-2, what steps she is taking to secure the re-establishment of the former Select Committee on Science and Technology; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Lord Privy Seal to the hon. Member for Chislehurst (Mr. Sims) on 16 November 1987, at column 770.

Security

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister if she has received any representations concerning the implications for security of the publication of "Web of Deceit" by Mr. Chapman Pincher.

The Prime Minister: I take it that the hon. Gentleman is referring to "A Web of Deception" by Chapman Pincher. I have not received any such representations, as far as I am aware.

Business Rate

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Prime Minister if it is now intended that a uniform business rate should be introduced throughout the United Kingdom; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 17 November 1987, at column 469.

Council of Europe

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Prime Minister if she will announce the composition of the United Kingdom delegation to the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe.

CIVIL SERVICE

Government forms

109. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made in his Department on the initiative to improve the language, design and relevance of Government forms.

Mr. Luce: Government Departments are making good progress. In the last two years 11,000 forms have been scrapped, and a further 20,000 have been improved. A copy of the latest progress report on this work has been placed in the Libraries of Parliament.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Africa (AIDS)

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information is available to the Overseas Development Administration about the spread of HIV infection and AIDS in African countries; what recent requests for United Kingdom aid have been made; and what response the Overseas Development Administration has made to such requests.

Mr. Chris Patten: Accurate information on the spread of HIV infection is not available. The World Health Organisation estimates that for every AIDS case, 50 to 100 people may be infected with the virus. At 11 November 1987, 36 African countries had reported 6,298 cases of AIDS to the WHO.

The WHO is taking the lead in mobilising and co-ordinating external assistance for AIDS control programmes in developing countries. We have so far provided £3·25 million to support its work. In addition, the ODA has recently participated in donor meetings in Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda and has agreed to assist their national AIDS programmes.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out in the Official Report details of United Kingdom medical and other assistance to countries in Africa (a) to seek to control the spread of AIDS, (b) to assist in the treatment of patients suffering from AIDS and (c) to assist in the prevention or treatment of other diseases.

Mr. Chris Patten: We believe that support for programmes co-ordinated by the World Health Organisation is the most effective way of helping developing countries to combat AIDS. We have already contributed £3·25 million to the WHO's special programme on AIDS, which is working with 44 African countries. In addition, we have pledged bilateral support for WHO-co-ordinated AIDS control programmes in Kenya, Tanzania and Uganda. Some equipment, training and information materials have been supplied elsewhere in Africa.

In the absence of a vaccine or a cure for the disease, information and education programmes offer the best hope of limiting the spread of the infection. In recognition of this, Her Majesty's Government and the WHO are holding a world summit of Ministers of Health on programmes for AIDS prevention in London in January 1988. We are sponsoring a number of African delegates to the summit. We are also providing £1·6 million to the International Planned Parenthood Federation to help provide its educational materials on AIDS; Africa is a priority for this work.

The ODA spends about £38 million a year on health and population programmes designed to strenthen health services in developing countries. The provision of manpower is a key element in our health assistance programmes in Africa. In 1986 we supported over 100 doctors, nurses and other health workers in the region.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Pakistan (Enriched Uranium Capacity)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent communications he has received from Mr. Richard Kennedy, President Reagan's ambassador-at-large on non-proliferation, on Pakistan's enriched uranium capacity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have had no recent communication from Ambassador Kennedy on this subject.

Racial Discrimination (Entry Clearance Officers)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what procedures exist for the investigation of complaints of racial discrimination, including cultural discrimination, on the part of entry clearance officers.

Mr. Eggar: Any complaint of any nature about the conduct of staff overseas is fully investigated at senior management level appropriate to the seriousness of the allegation. If necessary, the head of post himself will undertake the investigation and report to London.

EEC (Sugar Quotas)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's position regarding the imminent negotiations on sugar quotas to the EEC.

Mrs. Chalker: On 22 October the Commission opened negotiations with the ACP on the guaranteed prices to apply to cane sugar deliveries from the ACP states listed in Protocol 7 annexed to the third ACP/EEC (Lomé) Convention during the 1987-88 delivery period. The Commission is negotiating on the basis of a mandate agreed by all member states, including the United Kingdom.

Chine Kit (Hong Kong Futures Exchange)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his replies of 9 November, Official Report, columns 16-17, why the firm Chine Kit was suspended from trading on the Hong Kong futures exchange; whether any of the staff or officials of the Hong Kong futures exchange or the Hong Kong stock exchange have any connection with any of the 33 firms currently being sued by the Hong Kong Futures Guarantee Corporation; whether these firms have been suspended from trading on the Hong Kong stock exchange; and what interest Mr. Ronald Li has in the firm Chine Kit.

Mr. Eggar: Chine Kit Ltd. was suspended from trading on 27 October because it had failed to pay margin calls. The company subsequently paid the calls and was reinstated on 29 October. We are not aware that any staff of the futures exchange or the stock exchange are connected with any of the 32 firms being sued by the Hong Kong Futures Corporation. None of these firms has been suspended from trading on the Hong Kong stock exchange. The Hong Kong companies registry records that Chine Kit Ltd. has a paid-up share capital of 2,000,000 HK$1 shares, of which 1,999,997 are held by Mr. Ronald Li.

Malaysia (Cecilia Ng Choon Sim)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will protest to the Malaysian Government about the detention without trial of many Government critics and in particular about the arrest of women's rights campaigner Cecilia Ng Choon Sim; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The Malaysian Prime Minister has stated that the recent detentions were necessary in a situation of increased ethnic tension to prevent a slide into public disorder. We hope that circumstances will soon permit the release of those detained.

Cambodia (Peace Negotiations)

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to support the initiative by Prince Sihanouk of the Democratic Kampuchean Coalition and Hun Sen of the Government in Phnomn Penh in Paris in December to begin the process of negotiating for peace.

Mr. Eggar: We welcome any moves which lead to genuine progress towards a peaceful resolution of the conflict in Cambodia, consistent with our long-held wish to see the withdrawal of Vietnamese forces and freedom for the Cambodian people to determine their own future.

EMPLOYMENT

Shop Stewards

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether time off in lieu is available to shop stewards undertaking training courses at Government expense; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Section 27 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978, which provides for time off for employees who are trade union officials to receive training relevant to their duties, does not differentiate between officials whose training is assisted by Government grant and officials who receive assistance from other sources.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish figures for unemployment in Southwark and Bermondsey constituency expressed as a percentage of the percentage rate of unemployment in Great Britain for each year since 1983;

(2) which parliamentary constituencies in England had a higher percentage rate of unemployment than Southwark and Bermondsey for each year since 1983.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available. Unemployment rates are not calculated for areas smaller than travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many parliamentary constituencies in England have had (a) an increase or (b) a smaller percentage decrease in unemployment than Southwark and Bermondsey over (i) the past three years (ii) the past two years and (iii) the past year.

Mr. Lee: The following information is available from the Library. On 8 October 1987 the numbers of parliamentary constituencies in England where the unemployment figures show an increase or a smaller percentage decrease in unemployment than the Southwark and Bermondsey constituency over the past three years, two years and one year were 14, 54 and 58 respectively.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in employment in manufacturing industry in the United Kingdom, Scotland and Wales since 1979; and what information he has as to comparable figures in other manufacturing countries.

Mr. Lee: Between June 1979 and June 1987 (the latest date for which comparable figures are available) the percentage changes in the numbers of employees in the manufacturing industries for the areas specified are as follows:

	Percentage change
United Kingdom	−29
Scotland	−34
Wales	−34

Some of the decrease in the figures will be the result of the reclassification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, computer services, and road haulage, previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by sub-contractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the move from manufacturing to service sector employment.

Annual average figures for other manufacturing countries have been published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development and the latest available are for 1985. In the period 1979 to 1985, the percentage changes in the numbers of employees in the manufacturing industries of six principal countries are as follows:

	Percentage change
United States	−8
Canada	−5
Japan	9
France	−14
Germany	−9
Italy	−10

The shift in employment from manufacturing to service industries is happening in most other developed industrial nations. Manufacturing employment expressed as a percentage of all employees in the United Kingdom in 1985 was higher than in Canada or the United States.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Grants

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to decide whether he will publish his review of student financial support.

Mr. Jackson: The Government hope to publish proposals for consideration in the first half of next year.

Miss Sharon McGleave

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) why the qualifications of Miss Sharon McGleave, BA, (Hons), MA, PGCE, have not yet been recognised as teaching qualifications by his Department;

(2) on what date he received copies of O-Level English language and mathematics certificates from Miss Sharon McGleave, presently employed as a teacher in St. Thomas More upper school, Bedford; and on what date he requested these copies;

(3) how many times his Department sought from Queen's University, Belfast, verification of the teacher training qualifications of Miss Sharon McGleave, presently employed as a teacher in St. Thomas More upper school, Bedford; how many times such information was received; and what was the nature of that information.

Mrs. Rumbold: Applications for qualified teacher status from people trained outside of England and Wales are considered initially under paragraph 2(b) of schedule 5 to the Education (Teachers) Regulations 1982. To be acceptable, the course of initial teacher training pursued must be comparable to one available in England and Wales at the same time. In respect of courses completed after 1 September 1984, the applicant must also have attained the standard in English and mathematics required to obtain grade C at GCE O-level. Confirmation of Miss McGleave's training and qualifications were sought from the Department of Education in Northern Ireland on 10

September. A response was received on 6 October. At the same time, information, which had been requested direct by Miss McGleave, was received from Queen's University, Belfast. As the responses did not make clear that she met the mathematics requirement, Miss McGleave was asked on 22 October to provide copies of her GCE O-level certificates. These were received on 4 November and Miss McGleave was notified on 20 November that she is a qualified teacher in England and Wales.

Education Reform

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received about the future teaching of home economics in relation to the proposed national curriculum; and what was the nature of those representations.

Mrs. Rumbold: By 13 November some 8,500 individuals and organisations had responded to the Government's consultation document on the national curriculum. These representations have covered, among other issues, the place of home economics in the national curriculum. Respondents have expressed concern about the time available for home economics and its status as a subject within the national curriculum. In addition to these written representations, I have held a meeting with the United Kingdom Home Economics Federation, which expressed the same concern.

Seismic Movements

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Offical Report the levels of seismic movements which have occurred in each Scottish region in the past 10 years.

Mr. Jackson: Seismographs operated by the British Geological Survey have detected and located natural and mining-induced earthquakes in the past 10 years as follows:

Region	Number of earthquakes located	Number of earthquakes with Richter magnitude of 2 or more
Borders	50	1
Central	182	9
Dumfries and Galloway	37	5
Fife	51	0
Grampian	3	0
Highland	193	48
Lothian	871	7
Shetland	1	0
Strathclyde	118	18
Tayside	45	3
Total	1,551	91

Earthquakes that have a Richter magnitude of 2 or more can often be felt; seismic movements below this level are not usually noticeable.

The distribution of seismograph stations has varied in recent years, and with it the ability to detect and locate seismic events. Prior to 1980 only one seismograph was operated north of Dundee on the Scottish mainland.

Shop Stewards

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will give a breakdown by age of the numbers of people attending shop steward training coures in the latest year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has about the incidence of (a) Trade Union Congress regional education officers being asked to advise upon the selection of candidates for tutors on shop steward training courses which are government-funded and (b) Trade Union Congress personnel sitting on the interview or selection panel for such vacancies;

(3) if he will give a breakdown by subject of the numbers of shop stewards undertaking training courses at Government expense; and if he will make a statement;

(4) if he will estimate the total number of working days lost due to shop stewards' attendances at Government-funded training courses in any one year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available to my right hon. Friend.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether colleagues participating in Government-funded courses for shop stewards are required to provide a balanced curriculum and system of visiting speakers: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The memorandum of arrangements governing Government funded trade union education and training courses specifies in detail the subject areas which eligible courses must cover. It also requires the Trades Union Congress to seek departmental approval of any proposals for additions or amendments to the content of courses. A system of visiting speakers is not specified.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make it his policy to phase out the grant currently paid to the Trade Union Congress for the training of shop stewards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: A decision on continuation of the grant to the Trades Union Congress is taken annually by my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Education and Science and Employment. They determined earlier this year that the grant should continue for the financial year 1987-88.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the total level of Government grant paid to the trade Union Congress in each of the last five years for which figures are available for the cost of training courses for shop stewards; and what is the purpose for which this is intended.

Mr. Jackson: Total grant paid to the Trades Union Congress in each of the last five years was as follows:

1982-83	1,598,570
1983-84	1,545,725
1984-85	1,542,239
1985-86	1,695,510
1986-87	1,704,000

Public funding, introduced in 1976, is intended to enhance the quantity and quality of education and training of trades union representatives, and so to gain a better informed work force and improved industrial relations.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many shop stewards have undertaken training courses at Government expense in each of the last eight years.

Mr. Jackson: This question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is satisfied that the fees charged by colleges for running shop steward training courses cover the cost of those courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The fees charged by colleges for running shop steward training courses are a matter between the colleges and the trade unions. They are not directly related to the Government's rate of grant.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there is a requirement for colleges undertaking shop steward training courses at Government expense to have their subject matter approved first by the Trades Union Congress; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The memorandum of arrangements governing Government funded trade union education and training courses specifies in detail the subject areas which eligible courses must cover. This includes democracy at work; the role of members and representatives in industrial relations, including negotiation and consultation; health and safety issues; and the importance of economic realities in the functioning of industry and commerce. The Government expect the Trades Union Congress to ensure that the courses funded meet the requirements of the memorandum of arrangements.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the use of Government-funded shop steward training courses to promote the unionisation of school children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Government funding is made available to unions affiliated to the Trade Union Congress or registered as non-affiliated trade unions for the education and training of representatives of these unions. It is not available for the promotion of trade union activities. If my hon. Friend has information that such funds are being used to promote the unionisation of school children, my right hon. Friend would be concerned to know about it.

Speech Therapy Training

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to promote the setting up of speech therapy training in (a) north Wales, (b) south-east Wales and (c) south-west Wales; what moneys he will make available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The South Glamorgan Institute of Higher Education currently provides a four-year degree course in speech therapy. The institute attracts students from all parts of Wales and offers opportunities for training through the medium of English and Welsh. The Department is currently undertaking a review of the future requirements for and implications for the provision of speech therapists and other staff disciplines in the context of a manpower resource planning exercise for the NHS in Wales.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many small firms loan guarantee schemes exist in Clwyd and in the Deeside travel-to-work area.

Mr. Peter Walker: Responsibility for the loan guarantee scheme rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. To date, 832 loans, totalling £26·12 million have been guaranteed under the scheme in Wales. Information on individual local authority and travel-to-work areas would be available only at disproportionate cost.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many enterprise allowance schemes are operative in (a) Clwyd county and (b) the Deeside travel-to-work area; and will he make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of enterprise allowance schemes operative on 10 November 1987 in the counties of Clwyd, Gwynedd and Powys is 1,812. Figures for smaller areas can be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Collieries (Derelict Land)

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales by when he expects all significant colliery derelict land to be removed in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Current projections suggest that existing dereliction at colliery sites is on course to be cleared substantially by the late 1990s. It should be possible to refine this estimate when the results of the 1988 derelict land survey are available.

Jobcentres

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many vacancies have been notified at the Milford Haven and Haverfordwest job centres for work on trawlers since 1 January 1986.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is not available.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in each month since 1 September 1986 in each county in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is set out in the table. No sheep were monitored in Gwent, Mid, South or West Glamorgan.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY°

HOTOL

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations he has received in the past month concerning the HOTOL project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Some 31 representations have been received in the past month. The Government have funded a two-year proof of concept study on HOTOL with the costs being shared on a 50:50 basis between Government and industry. This study by British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce is now nearing completion. The companies involved have agreed to continue working at their own expense while discussions take place to determine the next steps.

Space Research

Mr. Stern: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on current levels of funding for United Kingdom space research.

Mr. Butcher: The total public expenditure provision for 1987-88 for civil space research and development is £112 million, including some £75 million which is expected to be spent through the European Space Agency.

Falkland Islands (Post)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what action he is taking to improve postal deliveries from Britain to civilians working in the Falkland Islands;

(2) what representations he has received on the time taken to make postal deliveries from Britain to civilians working in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Butcher: This is a matter for the Post Office. A petition received last month by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister from the civilian work force at Mount Pleasant airfield about their deliveries of mail from Britain has been forwarded to the Post Office, which I understand is looking into the matter.

Manufacturing Trade

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total deficit of the United Kingdom in manufacturing trade on the overseas trade statistics basis in the most recent 12 month period for which figures are available and what percentage of the total was in respect of trade with the European Economic Community.

Mr. Butcher: In the 12 months to September the deficit on our trade in manufactures was £10·8 billion with the other members of the Community and £9·5 billion overall. Forty six per cent. of our exports and 56 per cent. of our imports are with the Community.

Ship Radio Licences

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster who he proposes will check on the display of ship radio (VHF) licences; and how this enforcement will be funded.

Mr. Butcher: My Department's radio investigation service is responsible for inspecting ships' radio licences. This work is funded from licence fees.

Tariffs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what tariff or non-tariff restrictions there are on imports into the United Kingdom of (i) instant coffee, (ii) tobacco, (iii) cocoa butter, (iv) margarine made from soyoil and (v) other processed agricultural products from (a) Commonwealth and (b) non-Commonwealth developing countries; what is the purpose of these restrictions; and what proposals Her Majesty's Government or the European Commission have made to revise or abolish them.

Mr. Butcher: There are no specific non-tariff restrictions on imports into the United Kingdom of the products listed. Imports from all sources into the European Community are subject to the appropriate levels of duty laid down in the common customs tariff of the Community. A copy of the tariff is available in the Library of the House.

International trade in agricultural products, processed or otherwise, if one of the topics for discussion in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, when existing tariffs and equivalent measures will be subject to review. The Community has already put forward negotiating proposals designed to improve market access for tropical products.

Furniture (Safety)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if he has any plans to introduce legislation to prohibit the advertisement, sale, importation or manufacture of furniture made of those materials which are inherently dangerous; and if he will make a statement; (2) if he has any plans to introduce legislation for the permanent display of a safety classification system on furniture, in a form easily understandable by consumers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: In reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Gloucester (Mr. French) on 6 November I promised a statement in December about responses to consultation on the code of practice for upholstered furniture. The points raised in the two questions will be covered by that statement and in more detail by the draft regulations which I shall circulate for consultation as soon as possible in the new year.

Gas and Electricity Disconnections

6. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the number of gas disconnections in each of the last three years; and what was the percentage change for each year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Disconnections are a matter for the gas and electricity industries and I have asked the chairman of British Gas plc and of the Electricity Council to ensure that the hon. Members have the information requested.

9. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many disconnections of gas and electricity supply have been made in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Disconnections are a matter for the gas and electricity industries and I have asked the chairmen of British Gas plc and of the Electricity Council to ensure that the hon. Members have the information requested.

CEGB (Financial Framework)

14. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss the financial framework of the board.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board frequently to discuss a range of issues.

Combined Heat and Power

17. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has had discussions with local authorities about the operation of combined heat and power schemes.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I recently met members and officials of Sheffield city council at the launch of Sheffield Heat and Power Ltd. This company is responsible for implementing a new district heating scheme in that city. I am also planning to visit Leicester CHP next week.

52. Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to meet the Combined Heat and Power Association to discuss the promotion of combined heat and power schemes.

20. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about the level of staff costs in the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: The Electricity Council's annual report for 1986-87 shows that total staff costs amounted to £1,958·7 million.

26. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many of his Department's staff are currently working on the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: There are currently 21 members of my Department working specifically on the proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry. This figure includes clerical and secretarial staff.

27. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what increase in income he estimates the electricity supply industry will enjoy in the financial years 1988-89, 1989-90 and 1990-91 as a result of the recent price increases announcement.

Mr. Parkinson: The electricity supply industry's external financing limit for 1988-89, which represents the industry's net cash income after capital expenditure, is for a repayment of £1,040 million. The net effect, taking account of a higher level of capital expenditure and payment of tax, is £163 million lower than the corresponding figure for 1987-88 and is consistent with the increase in the industry's financial target. It is not the Government's practice to publish these forecasts for more than one year ahead.

33. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent representations he has received about his proposals for privatising the electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received representations from electricity consumers, unions, other nationalised industries and other interested parties and will take these into account when considering proposals for the privatisation of the industry.

36. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has received any representations from the public proposing differential solutions for the various segments of the industry arising from the preparations to privatise the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received representations from the public proposing a range of options for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry. I shall take these views into account when drawing up plans for privatisation.

42. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his latest timetable for the proposed privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I am developing proposals and work is proceeding on time. Decisions have not been taken and it would be premature to announce a timetable. However, I anticipate putting details of our proposals to Parliament in the first part of next year.

43. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about the implications for nuclear power of the proposed privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has received representations from electricity consumers, unions, other nationalised industries and other interested parties about a wide range of issues related to the proposed privatisation of the electricity supply industry, including the implications for nuclear power. He will take these views into account when drawing up proposals for the industry.

45. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current rate of return on investment for the electricity supply inustry; and what is the proposed rate of return for the industry for 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Parkinson: The present financial target is an average rate of return of 2·75 per cent. on net assets, calculated on a current cost accounting basis, over the three years 1985-86 to 1987-88. In the last financial year, 1986-87, the return achieved was 3·17 per cent. In order to achieve the financial target, the industry is aiming for a return in 1987-88 of 2·45 per cent. In my statement to the House on 3 November, I said that the Government and electricity supply industry had agreed financial targets of 3·75 per cent. in 1988-89 and 4·75 per cent. in 1989-90.

48. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the projected level of investment in the electricity supply industry to the year 2000.

Mr. Parkinson: Investment to replace aging capacity and to meet new demand is essential if the electricity industry is to continue to provide customers with a reliable and efficient system of supply. On current forecasts of demand the CEGB envisages that up to 13 gigawatts of new capacity may be needed by the end of the century. Demand forecasts are of course kept under review and, within this framework, orders for individual new power stations will be placed on their merits.

The figure of £45 billion, which is at estimated outturn prices, derives from estimates prepared by the electricity supply industry. It indicates the scale of expenditure that may be required to meet the demand forecasts in full. On the same basis, the figure also includes substantial investment in the national grid and in other existing assets, together with investment in new capacity which may be under construction by the end of the century but not commissioned by then.

Investment on this scale will provide substantial opportunities for British industry to win orders and expand business.

50. Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to be able to announce the vesting date for the privatised electricity supply industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames) earlier today.

61. Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from the electricity supply industry about the method of privatisation of the industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I have regular meetings with the senior management of the electricity supply industry to discuss our proposals for the privatisation of the industry. I shall take their views into account before making any decisions.

65. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current rate of return on capital in the electricity supply industries in the several member states of the European Economic Community; and what is his estimate of the rate of return on capital in the United Kingdom's electricity supply industry in 1988-89.

Mr. Parkinson: It is not possible to make a direct comparison of rates of return in different countries, due to substantial differences in accounting practices. The financial target for the ESI in England and Wales is for a current cost rate of return of 3·75 per cent. on net assets in 1988-89.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the ratio of capital debt to income in the electricity supply industry in each year since 1975.

Mr. Parkinson: The ratio of long-term borrowings at 31 March to turnover for the year then ended in the electricity supply industry in each year since 1975 has been as follows:

Year
1977	1·35
1978	1·08
1979	0·97
1980	0·86
1981	0·73
1982	0·58
1983	0·50
1984	0·42
1985	0·33

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the income derived from an average rate of return for the electricity supply industry of (a) 2·45 per cent. (b) 3·75 per cent. and (c) 4·75 per cent.

Mr. Parkinson: These figures represent the electricity supply industry's expected rates of return in the three years to 1989-90. I therefore refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the similar question by the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on 23 November 1987.

Supply Policy

21. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what priority he accords to diversity of supply in determining the Government's energy policy.

Mr. Parkinson: I can confirm that encouraging diversity of supply is a key element in the Government's energy policy.

Coal Industry (Productivity)

22. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest figures for productivity in the coal industry; and what were the comparable figures 10 years ago.

Mr. Michael Spicer: For the week ending 31 October, average deep mined revenue output per man shift was 3·72 tonnes, an increase of some 70 per cent. on the average of 2·19 tonnes for 1977-78.

Opencast Sector

23. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of the opencast coal sector.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Opencast coal is one of the cheapest forms of energy available to this country. It is not for Government to set targets, but it is clearly in the national interest to maximise production where that can be done in an environmentally acceptable way. I therefore welcome British Coal's plans to increase opencast production above its present levels where possible.

There is inevitably concern about the impact of opencast mining on the environment. British Coal share that concern and its restoration techniques and its techniques for minimising disturbance while mining takes place are second to none. I would hope that those who oppose opencast mining would look carefully at what British Coal has achieved.

Opencast coal is also important for British Coal's deep mines. It enables some deep mine production, which would otherwise be unsaleable, to be made acceptable to customers; and it generates profits which can be used to finance investment in improving deep mine productivity.

Electricity Requirements

24. Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to publish estimates of future electricity requirements for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Parkinson: Estimates of future electricity requirements are the responsibility of the electricity supply industry. The Electricity Council publish adopted load forecasts for England and Wales each year.

British Coal Enterprise

25. Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many jobs have been created in the east Midlands with the help of British Coal Enterprise.

Mr. Michael Spicer: By the end of October British Coal Enterprise Ltd. had helped create a total of 1,524 job opportunities in its midlands region. I regret that sub-regional figures ae not available.

Electricity Prices

29. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much he envisages electricity prices having to rise in 1989-90.

Mr. Parkinson: The increase for 1989-90 will be a matter for the electricity industry to decide, in the light of the financial target it has agreed with the Government. It is too early to say what such an increase might be, but it is likely to be significantly less than that for 1988-89.

34. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received protesting at the impact of increased electricity prices upon pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend has received representations from pensioners' organisations and is making arrangements for a discussion.

46. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the average price of electricity in England and Wales compared with France, West Germany, Japan and the United States of America expressed as pence per kilowatt hour.

Mr. Michael Spicer: In its latest "International Comparison of Electricity prices" the Electricity Council calculated the average price of electricity in 1985-86 at 4·78p/kWh in France, 6·18p/kWh in West Germany, 10·51p/kWh in Japan and 6·08p/kWh in the United States of America. The average price in England and Wales was 4·65p/kWh.

56. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from industry about the proposed increase in electricity prices.

Mr. Parkinson: Most of the representations I have received from industry have been based on premature speculation about the effect of the increase in electricity prices on industrial tariffs. Tariffs for individual classes of consumer are a matter for the electricity industry to decide, but rises in industrial prices are not expected to be significantly higher than the overall average.

63. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the intended levels of consumer electricity prices upon privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: Privatisation, by introducing competition and increasing efficiency, will have a beneficial effect on prices.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he has any plans to discuss the proposed increases in electricity prices with pensioners' organisations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) today.

Continental Shelf (Orders)

30. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will review his Department's statistical analysis so that United Kingdom oil companies are differentiated from companies with United Kingdom offices in the published tables of orders placed on the United Kingdom continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: No.

CEGB (Reorganisation)

31. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has met the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss the recent structural reorganisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The reorganisation of the CEGB into a two-tier management structure was completed in April and I have not had cause to discuss it with the chairman.

Fuel Prices

32. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much (a) electricity, (b) gas and (c) coal prices have increased since June 1979.

Mr. Parkinson: The percentage movement in the average price of each fuel to the domestic and industrial sectors between June 1979 and June 1987 was as follows:

	[4]Domestic		[5]Industrial
	Real	Nominal	Real	Nominal
Electricity	+5·0	+92·3	[2]−9·5	[2]+66·8
Gas	+21·7	+123·1	[3]−8·3	[3]+68·9
Coal	+10·0	[1]+101·6	−5·6	+74·0

Notes:
[1] Includes coke.
[2] Provisional.
[3] Estimated.
[4] Per cent. change in average price between months of June 1979 and October 1987.
[5] Per cent. change in average price between quarters ending June 1979 and June 1987.

The figures are derived from data published or to be published in "Energy Trends" and the "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics". The period covered for the industrial sector is to the end of the second quarter of 1987: the latest period for which dates is available.

Conservation Policies

35. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has for the improvement of conservation policies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I recently announced a review of the work of the Energy Efficiency Office to assess strategic options for the future. I hope to consider that assessment by the end of the year.

Electricity (Nuclear Generation)

37. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the returns on capital investment in electricity generated by nuclear power.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The electricity supply industry is required to earn a 5 per cent. real rate of return on its new investment programme as a whole. The rate of return on each new generating project must reflect this requirement.

Wind Power

39. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has for the further development of wind power following his recent visit to Orkney.

Mr. Parkinson: Following my recent visit to Orkney on 10 November to inaugurate the 3 MW, 60 metre diameter wind turbine generator, my Department will continue to press ahead with its research and development programme on wind energy which is intended to provide a basis for commercial exploitation of this renewable resource by the late 1990s.

The programme will include extensive monitoring of the experimental Orkney machine as well as support for the design and construction of a 55 metre diameter 1 MW wind turbine generator to be erected at the CEGB's Richborough site in Kent. This machine is being designed and built by James Howden & Co. of Glasgow; the project costs are shared between my Department, the CEGB and the European Community.

Gas-gathering Systems

40. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on future gas-gathering systems in the United Kingdom sector of the continental shelf.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I have received no formal proposals for new projects, although I understand that a number of gas-gathering schemes for the central North sea are under preparation by the oil companies and others. I will give careful consideration to any such scheme which are put forward with the objective of ensuring the full development of our gas reserves without delay and without unnecessary duplication of infrastructure.

Energy Efficiency (Government Departments)

41. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action he is taking to encourage energy efficiency in Government Departments' buildings.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The permanent secretaries in charge of Departments have recently agreed to set up an energy management panel for the civil estate to advise them on consumption trends and action needed to ensure that cost-effective improvements in energy efficiency are made. The panel is actively supported by the Energy Efficiency Office and the Property Services Agency. I shall be taking a close interest in its progress.

Bradwell Power Station

44. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by what date the Central Electricity Generating Board expects to implement the recommendations of the nuclear installations inspectorate in relation to the safety of Bradwell power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 29 October 1987, at column 374.

CEGB (Generation Monopoly)

47. Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to be in a position to announce whether the Central Electricity Generating Board will retain its monopoly of electricity generation after privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: I am developing proposals for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry; no decisions on the future structure have been taken. However, I have said that the electricity supply industry will not be privatised as a monolith. I intend to introduce as much competition as possible into the industry and am looking at the scope for so doing.

Norwegian Gas Imports

49. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the impact of renewed plans to import Norwegian gas on the pace of United Kingdom continental shelf gas development and related industrial activity.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I am not aware of any plan for new imports of Norwegian gas. The oil companies are being outstandingly successful in finding and developing new United Kingdom reserves. By bringing new United Kingdom gas supplies to the market without delay and on competitive terms the oil companies working on our continental shelf are strengthening their position in the home market and providing important opportunities for the offshore supplies industry.

Electricity Industry

51. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the estimated value of the publicly owned electricity industry (a) using current cost methods and (b) using historic cost methods.

Mr. Parkinson: The net assets employed by the electricity supply industry—England and Wales—as at 31 March 1987 were £37 billion on a current cost accounting basis and £14 billion on a historical cost basis. These figures do not necessarily represent the valuation which will be placed on the industry by the market.

Renewable Energy Sources

54. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next expects to publish an estimate of the potential for electricity generation by renewable energy sources.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A detailed assessment of the potential for electricity generation by renewable energy sources has recently been undertaken by the chief scientist's group at the Energy Technology Support Unit as part of a comprehensive appraisal of United Kingdom energy research, development and demonstration. This appraisal of a wide range of different energy technologies considered to be relevant for the United Kingdom was published in July as energy paper 54. The background papers prepared by ETSU for this study have also been published as ETSU R43: these contain estimates of both the technical potential and the potential contribution for all renewable technologies. Copies of both publications are in the Libraries of the House.

As I said in the House on 30 October, as reported at column 623, we are currently preparing detailed strategy papers for each of the renewable technologies currently in our programme. These will be published next year and will incorporate any appropriate revisions to earlier assessments of potential contribution from the renewable technologies. Copies of these papers will also be placed in the Library of the House.

Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunication and Plumbing Union

55. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met the general secretary of the Electrical, Electronic, Telecommunication and Plumbing Union; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I have met the general secretary on a number of occasions since I took office. A range of issues have been discussed.

Coal Supply Contract

57. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has about progress on reviewing the financial contract between British Coal and the Central Electricity Generation Board in preparation for the lapse of the present coal supply contract; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the industries are considering continuing the present agreement covering the supply of coal—which was firm for the first two of its five years—for a further year. No final agreement has yet been reached.

Electricity Generation and Supply Industries

58. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has recently discussed the future of the electricity generation and supply industries with the Electricity Council.

Mr. Parkinson: Yes. I meet Sir Philip Jones regularly.

Energy Industries (Competition)

59. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps he is taking to improve competition in the energy industries.

Mr. Parkinson: I shall continue to seek practicable means of stimulating competition in the energy sector. The creation of greater competition is a major element in the proposals I am developing for the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Energy Efficiency Review

60. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what progress is being made with the energy efficiency review.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) earlier today.

Chief Inspector of Nuclear Installations

62. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he next plans to meet the chief inspector of nuclear installations.

Mr. Parkinson: I met the chief inspector of nuclear installations in October and I have arranged to keep in close touch.

Gas Explosions

64. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to how many gas explosions there have been in the last eight years; how many deaths and how many injuries have been sustained; how many claims against British Gas have been made as a result; and how many are still outstanding.

Mr. Peter Morrison: This is a matter for British Gas plc. I have written to the chairman of British Gas, asking him to reply to the hon. Member.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent discussions he had with trade union representatives of the people working in the electricity sector.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend met the Electricity Supply Trades Union Council on 1 October and has also had meetings with individual union representatives to discuss a range of issues. Further meetings are planned.

Sellafield

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, Official Report, 2 November, column 533, he will set out the reasons why he will not publish weekly records, backdated to 1 January, of the throughput nuclear materials on the Windscale B 205 Magnox reprocessing line.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 21 October 1987, at column 750.

Central Electricity Generating Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what consideration he has given to the effects on the Central Electricity Generating Board participation in Nirex of the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The participation in Nirex by the successor company or companies of the Central Electricity Generating Board will depend on decisions about the future structure of the electricity supply industry, which have yet to be taken.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Divis Flats

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to ensure adequate provision for community and educational facilities in the redevelopment of the Divis flats complex in Belfast.

Dr. Mawhinney: A long-term development plan for the rationalisation and improvement of primary school facilities in the Divis flats area has been approved by the Department of Education involving the amalgamation and replacement of St. Finian's boys' and St. Vincent's girls' primary schools by a new co-educational primary school; the amalgamation of St. Joseph's boys' and girls' primary schools, Slate street, and the provision of improved facilities; and a review of the provision at St. Comgall's boys' and girls' primary schools, Divis street, in the light of demographic trends.

Additionally, one new 50-place nursery school was opened in November 1986 and a further one is planned.

The complex has adequate provision in terms of secondary school facilities and there are no plans to replace the existing Divis flats community centre.

Community Initiatives

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which body within his responsibility is responsible for funding community initiatives on planning and design matters in Northern Ireland; and if he will list those organisations in receipt of such funding.

Mr. Needham: No single body is charged with funding community initiatives on planning and design matters in Northern Ireland. Community and voluntary organisations can make use of a number of existing schemes or sources of support, which have a more general application, to finance planning and design work in relation to buildings or the environment. In addition the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland pays grant each year to community technical aid (Northern Ireland) which was established as an environmental technical aid service to provide the community with development and environmental technical aid skills.

Anglo Irish Intergovernmental Conference

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what programme of special measures in the policing field were identified as mentioned in paragraph 3.2 of the joint statement of the Anglo-Irish Conference of 11 March 1986; and if he will list for each subject contained in the list of cross-border social and economic co-operation appended to the joint statement of 11 March 1986 the meetings which have taken place and the agencies and numbers of officials involved.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 13 November 1987]: As I said in reply to a question from the hon. Gentleman on 29 June, it has not been our practice to make public details of discussions in the conference, beyond what appears in the joint statements issued after conference meetings which I have placed in the Library. However, as statements covering a number of meetings held after 11 March 1986 record, the two sides have continued to work together on a programme of special measures to improve relations between the security forces and the community.

The information the hon. Gentleman seeks about meetings on cross-border social and economic co-operation is not kept centrally and could be assembled only at disproportionate cost. Meetings have been held in some of these fields over many years.

I and my colleagues remain ready to discuss with the hon. Gentleman, and other elected representatives of constitutional parties, Government policy on these and other matters.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the programme of work which has been established to consider the machinery for the further discussion of legal matters, including the administration of justice, which is mentioned in the joint statement issued following the first meeting of the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference on 11 December 1985.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 13 November 1987]: As joint statements issued after later meetings of the conference make clear, groups of officials were set up to discuss extradition, the possible harmonisation of areas of the criminal law and the search for measures to enhance public confidence in the administration of justice. They have reported to the conference from time to time.

Commercial Explosive

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of commercial explosive recovered in Ulster during 1985, 1986 and 1987 to date can be traced back to the Republic of Ireland; and if he will define this in terms of weight.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on 12 November at column 315.

Maghaberry Prison

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many prisoners Maghaberry prison was built to accommodate; and how many it houses;

(2) what role Maghaberry prison was planned to fill; and if he will make a statement about its present and future use.

Mr. Stanley: There are two prisons on the same site at Maghaberry, one for women and one for men. The former was built to house all the female prisoners and young offenders in Northern Ireland. It has been fully operational since March 1986 and will continue to be used to hold female inmates, both those sentenced and those on remand. It was designed to accommodate 56 inmates and currently holds 39, who represent the total number of female prisoners in Northern Ireland.

The men's prison on the same site was planned to provide accommodation for convicted prisoners of all types and security categories. A gradual build-up of the population has started and it is intended to include a range of short and long-term prisoners. It was built to accommodate 432 inmates and currently houses 38. It is anticipated that the prison will have around 100 inmates by mid-February 1988 with the build-up continuing thereafter.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Gyrodactylus Salaris

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions his Department has had with the Irish authorities about precautionary measures to prevent the spread of the salmon disease gyrodactylus salaris.

Mr. Gummer: Scientists of my Department and of the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland are in touch with officials in the Republic of Ireland and I understand there is no evidence of the parasite gyrodactylus salaris in salmon stocks there. The Republic continues to operate very strict health certification and licensing controls in respect of imports of live salmonids and salmonid ova. The prohibition on imports of live salmonid fish into Great Britain, to which I referred in my reply to my hon. Friend on 16 November at column 431 applies to imports from the Irish Republic as to other countries.

Sugar Industry

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how Her Majesty's Government intend to safeguard the employment prospects of employees in the sugar industry in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are seeking to ensure that the interests of the United Kingdom sugar industry are fully protected in the current review of the Community's sugar regime in the Council of Ministers. We are also pressing for measures to place the cane refining margin on a more satisfactory basis.

Crabs

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether Scottish-based boats fishing in Northumberland waters will be bound by the proposed increase in the minimum landing size of crabs on the same basis as boats from Northumberland.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 20 November 1987]: I have no plans at present to increase the minimum landing size for crabs, although I am aware that there is some interest in this possibility in the north-east of England.

Any proposed increase would be discussed with the industry and due consideration given to the position of Scottish boats, in consultation with my right hon. Friend's Department.

DEFENCE

RN Armament Depot, Beith

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all contracts awarded for construction work at the Royal Naval armament depot, Beith, since 1979, including for each contract (a) the commencement and completion dates, (b) the nature and purpose of the construction, (c) the name of the prime contractor and (d) the value of the contract.

Mr. Sainsbury: A large number of construction contracts have been awarded during this period and it is not possible to provide much of this information without disproportionate effort. The following information is available for major construction contracts in the last three years:

Description	Start Date	Completion Date	Prime Contractor
Spearfish Administration Building	November 1984	November 1986	Shand Ltd.
Spearfish fuel store	January 1986	August 1986	W. G. Barr Ltd. (Scotland)
Spearfish Integrated Weapons Complex	November 1984	November 1986	Shand Ltd.
Spearfish Non-Explosives Work Shop (NEWS)	December 1984	October 1986	Wimpey
Spearfish Engine Processing Plant (inside NEWS)	August 1987	October 1987	How Engineering Ltd.
Spearfish Leak Test Decontamination Facility	July 1985	April 1987	M. J. Gleeson
High Voltage distribution system	August 1985	April 1986	N. G. Bailey
Upgrade fire main	November 1985	October 1986	W. J. Barr Ltd.
Fuel drench system	March 1987	May 1987	Booth Park Projects

It is not our practice to reveal contract prices which remain a matter of confidence between the Department and the contractor. However, the overall value of the construction programmes listed above is approximately £20 million.

In addition, minor works valued at £1·71 million were undertaken between April 1978 and March 1987.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects construction of the integrated weapons complex at the Royal Naval armament depot, Beith, to be completed.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no integrated weapons complexes under construction at Royal Naval armament depot, Beith. Two have been provided, the last one being completed in November 1986.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the role of the Royal Naval armament depot, Beith, in the Spearfish torpedo programme;

(2) if he will list the functions and activities of the Royal Naval armament depot, Beith.

Mr. Sainsbury: Royal Naval armament depot, Beith stores, maintains and supplies a range of missiles, torpedoes and ammunition for Her Majesty's ships and submarines. This will include Spearfish when it enters service.

NATO Depot, Fairlie

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all contracts awarded for construction work at the NATO mooring and support depot, Fairlie, since 1979, including for each contract (a) the commencement and completion dates, (b) the nature and purpose of the construction, (c) the name of the prime contractor and (d) the value of the contracts.

Mr. Sainsbury: A number of construction contracts have been awarded during this period and it is not possible to provide much of this information in the detail requested without disproportionate effort. However, the following information is available for major construction contracts in the last three years:

Description—Improvements to fender units
Start date—November 1985
Completion date—July 1986
Prime Contractor—Kier (Scotland) Ltd.

It is not our practice to reveal detailed contract prices which remain a matter of confidence between the Department and the contractor.

In addition, minor works valued at £200,000 were undertaken between April 1978 and March 1987.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the functions and activities of the NATO mooring and support depot, Fairlie.

Mr. Sainsbury: The depot is used for the maintenance of moorings, storage of salvage equipment and as a logistic support base for vessels of NATO nations operating in the Clyde area.

Territorial Limit

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been noted in the location of Warsaw pact intelligence-gathering vessels around the United Kingdom following the entry into force of the 12-mile territorial limit.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our practice to comment on security matters of this kind.

Flying (Canada)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if training carried out by Royal Air Force Tornados from Goose bay, Canada, includes simulated nuclear attacks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Royal Air Force aircraft, including Tornados stationed at Goose bay in Canada, are flown on a wide range of training sorties to ensure that the pilots have the necessary expertise to enable them to fulfil all possible wartime roles.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information is being provided by his Department to the Canadian federal environment assessment review office in connection with its environmental assessment panel reviewing military flying activities in Labrador and Quebec.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information was provided by his Department to the Canadian Public Health Association in connection with its recent study on the health effects of increased flying activity in the Labrador area.

Mr. Freeman: My Department has provided the Canadian Public Health Association with unclassified data on noise levels of Tornado and Harrier aircraft.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum permitted number of low-level training sorties by Royal Air Force aircraft from Goose bay, Canada, under the provisions of the February 1986 United Kingdom-United States-Federal Republic of Germany-Canada multinational memorandum of understanding on use of the facilities at Goose bay.

Mr. Freeman: There is no maximum permitted number of low-level training sorties by Royal Air Force aircraft from Goose bay, Canada, under the provisions of the February 1986 multilateral memorandum of understanding.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many low-level training sorties have been carried out by Royal Air Force aircraft from Goose bay, Canada, in each year since 1979; and what proportion of the total in each year was accounted for by (a) Vulcan, (b) Jaguar, (c) Harrier, (d) Tornado, (e) Buccaneer, (f) Hercules and (g) other types of aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: The number of low-level training sorties that have been carried out by Royal Air Force aircraft from Goose bay, Canada, in each year since 1979, by aircraft type, is as follows:

Proportion by aircraft type	Year	Total number of low level training sorties
98 per cent. Vulcan, 2 per cent. Buccaneer	1979	272
100 per cent. Vulcan	1980	263
99·6 per cent. Vulcan, 0·4 per cent. Hercules	1981	291
59 per cent. Vulcan, 40 per cent. Buccaneer, 1 per cent. Hercules	1982	127
64 per cent. Jaguar, 36 per cent. Tornado	1983	249
100 per cent. Tornado	1984	106
100 per cent. Tornado	1985	340
100 per cent. Tornado	1986	1,609
100 per cent. Tornado	[1]1987	1,626

[1] Up to 20 October.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the maximum permitted number of Royal Air Force aircraft to be deployed at any one time for tactical low flying training at Goose bay, Canada, under the provisions of the February 1986 United Kingdom-United States-Federal Republic of Germany-Canada multinational memorandum of understanding on the use of the facilities at Goose bay.

Mr. Freeman: Under the provisions of the February 1986 multilateral memorandum of understanding, the Royal Air Force is permitted to station up to 20 combat aircraft for flying training operations at Goose bay, Canada, at any one time. RAF transport aircraft, which transit to Goose bay in support of routine operations, are also permitted to conduct low-level training flights.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes have been made to the provisions affecting British forces in the February 1986 United Kingdom-United States-Federal Republic of Germany-Canada multinational memorandum of understanding on use of the facilities at Goose bay, Canada, since its original signing in 1986.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations have taken place with the Canadian authorities since 1986 with a view to increasing the amount of Royal Air Force low-level flying training conducted at Goose bay, Canada.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Air/Sea Rescue

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to publish the results of the evaluation exercise into the possible transfer of air/sea rescue contracts from the Royal Air Force to Bristow's; and if he will make available copies of the evaluation results to right hon. and hon. Members who have Royal Air Force bases within their constituencies.

Mr. Freeman: The Government will announce their decision on this complex question as soon as possible. The reasons for the decision will then be made public.

Aircraft Noise

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what research is being undertaken to establish whether 70dB 12 hr LAeq contours can include noise levels from static aircraft prior to take-off.

Mr. Freeman: No research is required. The LAeq index takes into account all noise from aircraft operations, including the noise emitted by static aircraft prior to take-off.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report the total amount of grant awarded to date by his Department to residents in the vicinity of Royal Air Force, Lossiemouth who have been eligible for sound insulation grants.

Mr. Freeman: To date, some £39,000 has been paid in grants under the noise insulation grant scheme at RAF Lossiemouth.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish in the Official Report details of the nature of the survey to be undertaken by the Royal Air Force Institute of Community and Occupational Medicine at Royal Air Force, Lossiemouth early in 1988; and whether there will be any changes in procedures from those used in previous surveys.

Mr. Freeman: The aim of the noise survey will be to check the position of the average 70dB(A) noise contour in relation to Lossiemouth town. To this end, six measurement sites in the town have been chosen and agreed with Moray district council. The only change in procedures is that the microphones will be placed on masts well above the ground to avoid noise reflection and shielding from buildings.

Exercise Purple Warrior

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria were used in deciding on the hiring of ferries for use on Exercise Purple Warrior; what approaches were made to United Kingdom ferry operators; and what are the reasons for hiring overseas ferries for use on the exercise.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The choice of ferries to be hired for use in Exercise Purple Warrior was determined on the customary basis of availability, suitability and cost and, subject to these considerations, of giving preference to United Kingdom ferry operators. Approaches were made by the Government ship broker and the Government freight agency to United Kingdom and foreign ferry operators. Foreign flag ferries were hired because only two United Kingdom ferries were offered, of which one proved suitable for use. In peacetime, it is for ferry operators to make a commercial judgment on how to employ their vessels.

Weapon Procurement

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on discussions between the chief of defence procurement and his French counterpart, Jacques Chevallier, with regard to possible collaboration in weapon procurement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Government are committed to increasing equipment co-operation within the Alliance and officials have a regular discussions with their counterparts in all other NATO countries. In September, the chief of defence procurement and Mr. Chevallier presided over a joint Anglo-French conference aimed at identifying practical steps to achieve better value for money by extending the use of open competition, reducing duplication of development programmes and increasing interoperability. Discussions on these matters are continuing.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail the lines of possible collaboration which have been discussed between his Department and the French Ministry of Defence regarding the joint development of nuclear and conventionally armed cruise missiles.

Mr. Sainsbury: As regards conventionally armed cruise missiles, the United Kingdom, France and five other nations have signed a memorandum of understanding setting out the broad principles for the possible collaborative development and production of a modular series of air-launched stand-off weapons and a request for proposals has been issued to Industry.

The details of our discussions with the French Government on nuclear matters are confidential.

Dartmoor National Park

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to which areas and for what periods the public is denied access to the Dartmoor national park because of military live firing.

Mr. Freeman: The range danger areas at Okehampton, Merrivale and Willsworthy, which cover some 10 per cent. of the area of the Dartmoor national park, were open to the public on a minimum of 289, 198 and 197 days respectively, during the course of 1986.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much of the Dartmoor national park is owned or leased by his Department for military training.

Mr. Freeman: Some 1,398 hectares are owned by the Ministry of Defence or 1·5 per cent. of the total area of the Dartmoor national park. A further 12,734 hectares are held on lease or licence.

Willsworthy Camp, Dartmoor

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about his proposals for the replacement of Willsworthy camp, Dartmoor.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence proposals to replace Willsworthy camp on land recently acquired at Higher Beardon farm, Lydford, were submitted to the Dartmoor National Park Authority on 19 October, and we are following normal planning procedures.

The proposals do not affect one way or the other the general question of military, including live firing, use of Dartmoor for which essential requirement a need will remain.

The Willsworthy ranges are a vital part of the Dartmoor training area where the Army has been training since the last century. Willsworthy was purchased for military use nearly 90 years ago. The ranges were recently modernised, although this decision was taken only after it had been established that it would not be practicable to move them outside the national park. A camp will continue to be needed in the Willsworthy area to provide temporary shelter throughout the year, not a barracks as some reports have suggested, for the many soldiers, including service women, young cadets and those in the TA, using the Willsworthy, Okehampton and Merrivale ranges. Okehampton training camp could not be used for this purpose mainly because it is too far away to provide ready access to shelter from the harsh and rapidly changing weather conditions on the moor.

The reason for seeking to relocate at Higher Beardon is that the present camp is old and poorly constructed and the facilities it provides are wholly inadequate. It is, moreover, an eyesore. If agreement is not forthcoming for Higher Beardon, the camp will remain at the present site.

While Willsworthy camp is well located for military purposes, we believe it would be in the best interests of the national park to move the camp to a less conspicuous position off the high moor so that the existing site can be cleared and returned to open moorland. The new camp, which would cover a much smaller area than the present one, would comprise a single storey building, to provide basic facilities only, constructed in local stone and slate to be in sympathy with its surroundings. It would also be set in a natural hollow substantially hidden from view. The Dartmoor National Park Authority would, of course, be consulted on the detailed design aspects.

The planning procedures allow for our proposals to be considered at a non-statutory public local inquiry if necessary and if my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment so determines.

Nuclear Weapons

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will list the number of nuclear weapons withdrawn from deployment by NATO in Europe (a) as a result of unilateral decision by NATO, (b) as a result of bilateral negotiations with the Soviet Union and (c) as a result of multilateral negotiations with the Warsaw treaty organisation, in each case since 1957.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Since 1979 NATO has unilaterally reduced the total number of nuclear warheads deployed in Europe by 2400. Information is not readily available on all the detailed changes which took place to the European stockpile prior to 1979. There have to date been no withdrawals of nuclear weapons as a result of bilateral or multilateral negotiations.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his reply of 2 November, at columns 552-3, regarding households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rate by the community charge, he will give figures of the estimated amount of money gained by gainers and lost by losers.

Mr. Lang: It is estimated that gains and losses from the community charge would amount to about £100 million; this is equivalent to an average loss of about £2 per week for each household that loses and an average gain of about £2 per week for each household that gains.

Roads and Bridges

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the Government spending programme on roads and bridge maintenance will be allocated to Scotland; and which major Scottish roads and bridges will benefit.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend will announce in December his decision on the allocation of funds to the transport programme. Fuller details will be published early next year in "Public Expenditure to 1990-91: A commentary on the Scotland Programme". Spending on maintenance is allocated to individual roads and bridges according to need as established by regular inspections.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the locations being considered for the proposed radiation monitoring network stations in the Highlands and Islands.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: North of a line from Oban to Montrose, the locations under consideration are:

Oban, Fort William, Mallaig, Diabaig, Benbecula, Stornoway, Lochinver, Dounreay, Kirkwall, Lerwick, Dalcross, Lossiemouth, Aviemore, Tummel Bridge, Dyce and Montrose.

"Prosecuting Sexual Assault"

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to implement the recommendations contained in the report "Prosecuting Sexual Assault" issued by the Scottish Home and Health Department; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. and learned Friend gave to the right hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Millan) on 28 October 1987, at column 144.

Intermediate Treatment Centres

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total amount of his Department's budget allocated to the establishment of intermediate treatement centres in each of the last five years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Intermediate treatment projects have been supported by the following grants under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968.

1983-84	431,000
1984-85	385,000
1986-87	501,000

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of intermediate treatment centres currently in existence in each regional authority, indicating any instances of where such centres are run jointly by regional social work departments and voluntary organisations.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Intermediate treatment work is carried out in different ways and different establishments. I shall write to the hon. Member about the range of provision made in Scotland.

Grampian (School Meals and Milk)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many children in Grampian region will lose entitlement to free school meals and free welfare milk after the Social Security Act 1986 is fully implemented in April 1988; how many of these children attend schools for those with special educational needs; and when he anticipates meeting representatives of Grampian regional council to discuss the implications of the implementation of the Act.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The children's rates of family credit will take account of the cost of school meals and, overall, I expect that more pupils will be assisted under the new arrangements than qualify under family income supplement now. I understand that Grampian regional council has estimated that about 1,700 children from families in receipt of family income supplement who currently qualify for free school meals will lose that entitlement. Information on the type of school these children attend and in relation to the numbers of children in receipt of free welfare milk is not held centrally. My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet with representatives of Grampian regional council regarding this matter.

Grampian (Cataract Operations)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the current numbers of people awaiting (a) cataract removal and (b) joint replacement operations within the Grampian health board region, together with equivalent figures for 1985, 1980, 1975 and 1970.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

SSHA Tenants

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has given or intends to give a guarantee to Scottish Special Housing Association tenants that rent levels may be subject to an independent fair rent assessment in the proposed new housing legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 20 November to the hon. Member for Motherwell, North (Dr. Reid).

Multiple Occupation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide his best estimate, by local authority area, of the number of homes in multiple occupation and the number of people living in them.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Statistics, by local authority area, on the number of houses in multiple occupation and the number of people living in them are not available and there exist no reliable figures on which to base up-to-date estimates.

Violence and Indecency

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the recorded number of (a) crimes of violence against the person and (b) crimes of indecency in Scotland for each of the last eight years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is given in Scottish Home and Health Department statistical bulletins 2/1985 "Recorded Crime in Scotland 1984", 2/1986 "Recorded Crime in Scotland 1985" and 4/1987 "Recorded Crime in Scotland 1986", copies of which are in the Library.

Crime Detection Rate

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail the crime detection rate in Scotland for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Clydesdale (Mr. Hood) on 5 November 1987 at column 876.

Police (Numbers)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many police officers there are in (a) the Dundee district authority area and (b) Scotland as a whole on the latest available figures; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 30 September 1987 police strength in Tayside police was 1,004. The total figure for Scotland was 13,468. Corresponding figures for earlier years are as shown:

Year	Tayside police strength	Scotland police strength
1979	941	13,214
1980	970	13,261
1981	953	13,194
1982	964	13,214
1983	961	13,208
1984	967	13,225
1985	968	13,304
1986	1,000	13,428

The deployment of manpower within Tayside police is a matter for the chief constable. His annual reports for 1985 and 1986 show the strength of the force's central division (which is conterminous with Dundee district) as 427 and 446, respectively.

Homelessness

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give figures for the total number of homeless families and individuals in Scotland for each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 6 July 1987 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Garscadden (Mr. Dewar) at column 31.

Housing Estate Improvements

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to give consent to district councils wishing to incur expense in carrying out improvements on housing estates where the quality of life is less than satisfactory.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Housing capital expenditure consents are determined, within the total resources available, on the basis of authorities' relative needs. In assessing these needs, my right hon. and learned Friend takes particular account of councils' own housing plans and capital programmes, and he would expect these programmes to reflect the most acute problems in each local authority area. It is, however, for authorities themselves to determine the priorities for expenditure within the resources allocated.

Private Tenants

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any proposals to allow private sector tenants to choose a local authority as a landlord.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Hypothermia (Pollok)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people have been recorded as having died or suffered from hypothermia in Glasgow, Pollok constituency in each year since 1980.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not readily available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Tree Planting (Caithness and Sutherland)

Mr. MacLennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to the proposal of the Nature Conservancy Council that there should be a moratorium on tree planting in Caithness and Sutherland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I hope to make a statement on this matter in the near future.

Self-Employed Persons and Small Businesses

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met Scottish representatives of the National Federation of Self Employed and Small Businesses; and when he next expects to meet them.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend last met Scottish representatives of the federation in March 1986. Although he has no plans at present to meet them in the immediate future, we are in regular contact with the federation on a number of issues of concern to it.

Health Authorities

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent the SHAPE recommendations have been implemented within Glasgow, Pollok constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally on a constituency basis.

Mental Health (Pollok)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what facilities are available for community care with regard to mental health within Glasgow, Pollok constituency.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not held centrally on a constituency basis.

School Boards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, how he proposes to assess the merits of the response to his consultative document on school boards so as to judge the degree of support for the ceiling powers proposed.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I will consider carefully all the responses made on our proposals.

Footballers (Offences)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many professional footballers have been charged in courts with offences relating to their conduct on the field over the past 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding reply 20 November]: The information requested is not held centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Homes Insulation

113. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the level of Government expenditure on homes insulation programmes.

Mr. Waldegrave: Provision in 1987-88 for the homes insulation scheme in England is £16·5 million. My right hon. Friend also recently announced extra spending power of nearly £45 million for local authorities to tackle housing needs this year, which will include additional provision for homes insulation. Some of the resources made available to local authorities by Estate Action are also targeted towards insulation measures. More generally housing authorities are free to determine their own priorities for the insulation of their housing stock within the financial resources available to them. Responsibility for these matters in Scotland and Wales is for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals to amend the Housing Act to permit local authorities to discriminate in the provision of housing for the homeless in favour of long-term residents of that area.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is for local authorities to decide in the light of their duties under the Act how to secure accommodation for homeless people and how to allocate tenancies of council dwellings.

Markets

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will implement the recommendations of the Royal Commission on market rights and tolls 1891 that it is desirable to put an end to the system under which no person is allowed to hold a market within a certain distance of an already existing market.

Mr. Howard: No. Given the further development of regulatory and administrative controls over markets by public legislation since 1891 it would be inappropriate to implement the recommendations of the Royal Commission as they stand. However, I am considering whether there should be changes to the system to which my hon. Friend refers.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will review the rules, laws and customs governing retailing to markets particularly in the inner cities; and when they were last reviewed.

Mr. Howard: No. Such a wide-ranging review would involve many aspects of retail trading outside the Secretary of State's responsibilities. Local authority powers to operate markets were last reviewed in connection with the Food Act 1984.

"Tenants' Choice"

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make provision for tenants to have legal assistance and representation under the provisions of "Tenants' Choice" for the negotiation of terms with a new landlord by secure tenants.

Mrs. Roe: It will be open to any tenant to seek legal advice or representation if he wishes at any stage in the procedures under "Tenants' Choice".

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will extend the period of consultation scheduled for consideration of "Tenants' Choice".

Mrs. Roe: All comments which we receive on the paper "Tenants' Choice; the Government's proposals for legislation", will be considered carefully whether we receive them before or after 4 December.

Women's Aid

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the potential dangers which women seeking refuge from violent men may face if Women's Aid refuges are obliged to register as a collective address upon the poll tax register.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker) on 12 November. We have received about two dozen letters from Women's Aid groups.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends that non-payment, deferred payment, or part payment of the poll tax will disqualify a person from voting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I have made clear repeatedly that registration for, and payment of, the community charge will be quite separate from electoral registration. No person will be disqualified from voting for any reason connected with the community charge.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in full the data on which was based the claim in his Department's news release number 460 of 12 November that introducing local income tax would, on average increase income tax by 6p in the £; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The total amount assumed to be raised from local income tax (LIT) was the net yield of domestic rates in England in 1987-88 (£8,100 million) less an amount attributable to rebates (£1,500 million). This was divided by the estimated yield of an extra 1p on the standard rate of income tax in England (£1,100 million), to produce an average LIT rate of 6p.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the way in which the poll tax will be levied on full-time students in higher education doing (a) first degree courses and (b) higher degree courses.

Mr. Howard: Full-time students will be liable to pay only 20 per cent. of the community charge and will be treated as having their sole or main residence in the places where they are resident for the purpose of undertaking their courses.

Houses (Multiple Occupation)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities in England and Wales which have been visited by the environmental health officer seconded to his Department to advise on houses in multiple occupation since his appointment.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department's environmental health adviser has, to date, visited environmental health departments in the following English local authorities (his remit does not extend to Wales).

Bournemouth
Bradford
Brighton
Bristol
Cheltenham
Colchester
Derby
Exeter
Gloucester
Hove
Ipswich
Kensington and Chelsea
Leicester
Manchester
Nottingham
Oxford
Peterborough
Plymouth
Poole
Redbridge
Southampton
Southend
Westminster
York

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about initiatives on houses in multiple occupation undertaken by the Institution of Environmental Health Officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department is kept informed by the institution of its initiatives, details of which the hon. Member can obtain from the institution.

Berrywood Road, Duston

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to make the appeal against refusal of planning permission for proposed residential development on land at Berrywood road, Sunston, Northampton, the subject of a local public inquiry.

Mr. Ridley: No. Both the appellants, Northampton Old Grammar School Foundation, and the local planning authority, Northampton borough council, have agreed to this appeal proceeding by way of an exchange of written representations and a site visit by the inspector. I am satisfied that the planning merits of the case can be satisfactorily assessed in this way.

Green Belt

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to lift development restrictions on green belt sites, such as gravel pits and disused factories.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. We remain committed to green belt policy as set out in DOE circular 14/84, which applies to all types of site in green belts.

Local Authority Finance

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in rank order the budgeted spending per head over GREA at ratepayer level for English local authorities, on the same basis as the criteria announced on 17 November in respect of the phasing-out of domestic rates.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is listed as follows:

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will report the annual expenditure of the Merseyside development corporation each year since its establishment; and if he will detail, also on an annual basis, the size and proportion of their funds spent on the Wirral side of the Mersey.

Mr. Trippier: The annual expenditure figures for the Merseyside development corporation are shown. They exclude staff, office and estate management costs.

Year	MDC (£ million)	Wirral Area (£ million)	Per cent.
1981-82	3·944	1·069	27
1982-83	18·781	0·144	1
1983-84	28·968	0·643	2
1984-85	24·980	1·105	4

Pollution

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards the principle of a 50 per cent. reduction in emissions of heavy metals, phosphorus and nitrogen compounds into the North sea within 10 years.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government accept that there is a strong case for reducing to a minimum inputs of the most dangerous substances, including certain heavy metals, to the aquatic environment generally. I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave on 18 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) announcing new proposals to achieve this.

So far as phosphorus and nitrogen compounds are concerned, any ecological problems in the North sea caused by inputs of these nutrient substances appear to be confined to certain localised areas. The Government believe that there is a case for seeking to reduce inputs to these areas. However, these substances are not currently posing problems in United Kingdom coastal waters.

We shall be discussing these matters with Ministers from other North sea states at the second international conference on the North sea in London on 24 and 25 November.

Birds of Prey

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has anything to add either to his reply of 16 November or to that of 5 November, Official Report, column 858, with regard to the number of licences issued in 1986 for taking merlin and sparrowhawks out of the wild.

Mr. Moynihan: My reply of 5 November, at column 858, gave the number of licences issued for falconry by species of avian predator, and the number of birds taken by those species over a five-year period. My reply of 16 November gave the number of birds of prey taken from the wild under licence during 1986. In 1986 no licences were issued to take merlins from the wild; 45 licences were issued to take sparrowhawks from the wild, and 39 sparrowhawks were taken.

Housing Action Trusts

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment where he plans to establish the first housing action trusts.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has yet to reach any decisions as to where the first housing action trusts might be. It is, however, expected that HATs will be established in London and elsewhere.

Homelessness

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has plans to introduce legislation to amend the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act 1977 and its successor statutes so as to redefine the definition of priority homelessness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have at present no plans to do so.

Condoms

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department is aware of any research recently undertaken into the biodegradability of condoms.

Mr. Moynihan: We are unaware whether any research has taken place recently. Whilst potentially assisting with disposal and processing, biodegradability may adversely affect performance.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken by his Department to alleviate the problems caused by condoms in sewerage treatment works.

Mr. Moynihan: Operational management of sewage treatment works is the responsibility of the water authorities like other materials, such as rags, plastics and so on, condoms are removed from sewage by screening at the inlet to the treatment works. I have had no representations from them that they have any specific problems in dealing with condoms at their works.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary for the Environment what advice his Department gives to environmental health officers about the handling of used condoms.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply of 10 November 1987, at column 107, about advice to local authorities on the disposal of clinical waste. Waste Management Paper No. 25 also advises on collection of such waste, although it does not deal specifically with used condoms.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what has been the number of jobs created in each urban development corporation in each year since 1981;

(2) what has been the number of jobs created in each urban development corporation (a) in professional employment, (b) in clerical employment and (c) in manual employment in each year since 1981;

(3) what has been the number of jobs created in each urban development corporation (a) full time and (b) part-time in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

	London Docklands DC Jobs attracted[1] (cumulative)	Merseyside DC Total jobs[2]	Net increase since March 1981
March 1981	—	1,500	—
March 1982	1,000	—	—
March 1983	3,500	—	—
March 1984	3,860	1,735	235
March 1985	5,700	1,945	445
March 1986	8,000	2,185	685
March 1987	over 10,000	[3]2,492	992

[1] LDDC figures are new jobs attracted to the area and do not include part-time jobs.
[2] All jobs in MDC area, including part-time jobs.

In addition, there are some 1,500 to 2,500 temporary construction jobs in LDDC's area and some 700 to 1,000 in MDC's area at any one time. Regular data on categories of employment are not collected.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the total number of jobs lost in each urban development corporation in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Some 3,355 redundancies were notified in the London Docklands Development Corporation's area between 1981 and March 1987.

Merseyside DC records net employment in its area. The figures given on employment are net of jobs lost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been (a) the actual increase and (b) the percentage increase in tourism in each urban development corporation in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Both LDDC and MDC have promoted projects and events aimed at attracting tourists and other visitors to their areas, but aggregate figures for the increase in tourism are not available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been (a) the actual increase and (b) the percentage increase in the use of derelict land in each urban development corporation in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Some 445 acres of derelict land and water have been reclaimed by Merseyside DC to date. This is 51 per cent. of MDC's total area which was almost wholly derelict in 1981.

Some 930 acres of derelict land have been reclaimed by London Docklands Development Corporation to date. This represents 37 per cent. of approximately 2,500 acres estimated to be derelict in the LDDC's area in 1981.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the expenditure on promotions by each urban development corporation in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Expenditure figures for LDDC are contained in annual reports, copies of which are laid before the House.

Expenditure on publicity and promotions by MDC:

1981-82	31
1982-83	354
1983-84	603
1984-85	719
1986-87	565

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the rise in land prices, by each urban development corporation in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: Land price indicators in UDC areas have depended on particular local factors—location, land use, progress made in regeneration—which vary significantly within the area. No single measures of movements in land prices are available for either UDC.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the increase in land used for warehouse development in each urban development corporation in each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not readily available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the schemes undertaken in each urban development corporation by (a) start date of the scheme, (b) length of duration of the scheme and (c) the size of financial input by (i) private sector finance and (ii) urban development corporation finance and (d) the numbers of jobs created by each scheme, for each year since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the expenditure by each urban development corporation each year since 1981 on (a) land acquisition, (b) land reclamation, (c) roads and transport, (d) environment, (e) services, (f) other and (g) total expenditure.

Mr. Trippier: This information is given in each UDC's annual report, copies of which are laid before the House.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the amount of investment in (a) housing development, (b) office development, (c) light industry, (d) business units (e) retail (f) warehousing (g) other and (h) total for each urban development corporation in each year since 1981 by (i) private sector investment and (ii) urban development corporation investment.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available in this form but information about investment and development is given in the UDCs' annual reports, copies of which are laid before the House.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the amount of investment by (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector in each urban development corporation by years from 1981.

Mr. Trippier: The information is as follows:

	London Docklands DC		Merseyside DC
	Private sector investment £ million	LDDC[1] investment £ million	Private sector investment £ million	MDC[1] investment £ million
1981-82	483	60	—	4
1982-83			—	18
1983-84		51	3	29
1984-85	338	45	5	25
1985-86	361	58	4	24
1986-87	1,060	72	6	20

[1] Investment defined as total UDC expenditure less administration, estate managment, community and industrial support.

Local Government Elections

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of those who are eligible to vote in local government elections are (a) domestic ratepayers, (b) spouses of domestic ratepayers and (c) people who receive any relief from domestic rates because of special needs.

Mr. Howard: The available information for England in 1987-88 is as follows:

(a) 52 per cent. of the local council electorate is liable to pay rates.

(b) Precise information on the number of spouses of domestic ratepayers is not available. However, I estimate from data contained in the Family Expenditure Survey that there are about 9·5 million households with two adults where rates are presently paid in whole or in part—about 26 per cent. of those eligible to vote.

(c) 16 per cent. of the local council electorate receive partial or total rate rebates.

Planning Zones

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many simplified planning zones have been designated under the Housing and Planning Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The provisions of the Housing and Planning Act 1986 enabling local planning authorities to designate simplified planning zones came into operation in England and Wales on 2 November. I gave details in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) on 2 November, at column 598.

Since the provisions have only just been commenced, it will take a little while for schemes to be adopted; but I understand that schemes are being brought forward in a few places already.

St. Stephen's House

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, in the light of the mouse and rat infestation in St. Stephen's House, what poisons and other methods of pest deterrent and disposal are being used in that building; whether they constitute any danger to the hon. Members and staff working there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I am not aware of any particular infestation in St. Stephen's House. Pest control on the parliamentary estate generally is carried out under contract by Rentokil. Difenacuum, in 0·005 per cent. concentration poured on granules, is used; this is not harmful to humans.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, when emergency heating works are next carried out in St. Stephen's House or elsewhere in the Palace of Westminster, he will ensure that emergency hot water supplies are provided in the lavatories; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Modifications are being made to ensure that an alternative gas supply will be available to the whole of St. Stephen's House in the event of a future failure in the main supply. The parliamentary works office will do all it can to provide emergency hot water in the event of a heating failure elsewhere on the parliamentary estate.

"Land for Energy Development"

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the officer time and other resources that local authorities employed in their involvement, both as members of the working party preparing the report "Land for Energy Development" and as respondents to that working party's request for information.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available within my Department.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Citizenship (Forms)

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the deadline for receipt of form E which is necessary for a citizen of the Republic of Ireland to remain a British subject; and whether, if enough printed forms are not available, photocopied forms will be acceptable.

Mr. Renton: There is no deadline for citizens of the Republic of Ireland claiming to remain a British subject under section 31 of the British Nationality Act 1981. Sufficient quantities of form E, which may be used for this purpose, are available.

Police Recruitment and Prison Places

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much of the extra money allocated to his Department as a result of the Autumn Statement will be devoted to extra police recruitment and prison places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Government spending plans announced in the Autumn Statement provide for an increase on previous plans of £360 million for Home Office programmes in 1988-89 and £450 million in 1989-90. These increases include £60 million more for prison building in 1988-89 and £92 million in 1989-90. Planned provision for prison capital for 1990-91 is £243 million of which £205 million is for building, compared to £237 million in 1989-90 of which £229 million is for building. An additional £45 million is provided for extra police manpower in 1988-89; within the total available to local authorities, financial provision for the police in 1989-90 and 1990-91 will be reviewed in the light of such factors as local authority budgets and progress in achieving the police manpower plans which I announced on 20 May 1986.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many occasions there have been in each of the past five years when the police in England and Wales have borrowed privately held firearms to control an armed or dangerous criminal.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not centrally recorded and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Drunken Driving

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases, where a guilty or proven verdict of drunken driving has been reached in each of the years since 1975 for (a) England and Wales and (b) Scotland, have involved (i) death and (ii) serious injury.

Mr. John Patten: Information on findings of guilt at all courts in England and Wales for "driving etc" after consuming alcohol or taking drugs is published annually in the Home Office statistical bulletin "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales". Table 5 of issue 31/86 gives the figures for 1975-85, and those for 1986 will be published shortly. The latest information for Scotland is published in Scottish Home and Health Department statistical bulletin No. 3/1987 "Criminal Proceedings In Scottish Courts, 1985", table 3(C). Information on deaths and injuries resulting from these offences is not collected centrally. However, information is published in "Road Accidents, Great Britain, 1986" on the number of persons killed or injured in accidents where the driver failed a roadside screening breath test. Copies of all these publications are in the Library.

Mrs. Tehreem Saif Khan

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why it took his Department 10 months to reach a decision on the application of Mrs. Tehreem Saif Khan to join her husband in the United Kingdom; and when she may expect a decision on her husband's application that she be allowed to come to Britain to marry under English law.

Mr. Renton: In order to resolve Mrs. Khan's first application, it was necessary to interview her husband; this interview took place on 12 March 1987. The time subsequently taken to reach a decision was due to pressure of work in the immigration department. Mrs. Khan's new application to join Mr. Khan will require an interview in Islamabad; I have asked the entry clearance officer to reach his decision as soon as possible.

Local Radio

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to give his approval for the establishment of a network of independent local radio stations.

Mr. Renton: Local radio services are already provided by the IBA under the Broadcasting Act 1981. Earlier this year we published a Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities" which outlined proposals for legislation under which these services would be more lightly regulated and additional local or community stations would be licensed. We shall make an announcement about legislation shortly when we have completed our consideration of responses to the Green Paper.

Field Sports

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions for offences committed by participants in field sports for the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will also specify the various offences in relation to which prosecutions were brought and convictions obtained.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available: the records held centrally on court proceedings do not include the circumstances of the offence.

Local Refugee Councils

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 12 November, Official Report, column 208, if he will specify those local bodies or organisations responsible for making decisions on the establishment or otherwise of local refugee councils.

Mr. John Patten: There are no local bodies or organisations with a specific responsibility to make decisions about the formation or otherwise of local refugee councils. They can only be established if there is sufficient local support for them. The nature and extent of the support necessary to sustain a council will, however, vary from area to area.

Citizenship (Fees)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the past 12 months he has exercised discretion to waive the fees payable for registration for British citizenship.

Mr. Renton: None. Section 42(1) of the British Nationality Act 1981 precludes registration as a British citizen unless the fee has been paid.

Metropolitan Police (Annual Strategic Review)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make it his practice to make the Metropolitan police's annual strategic review available to hon. Members.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner's annual strategy statement is published in January, and a copy is placed in the Library. Also, the Metropolitan Police Commissioner's annual report for 1986, presented to Parliament in June this year, included for the first time a systematic review of progress towards the goals of the Commissioner's strategy. I understand that it is the Commissioner's intention to continue this practice.

Metropolitan Police (Misconduct)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers above the rank of chief inspector are currently suspended as a result of alleged misconduct.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: One.

Metropolitan Police (Accounting Practice)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress is being made in changing the accounting practice of the Metropolitan police from a payments-receipts basis to a budget based on revenue and expenditure.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This issue is being considered by a working group of officials from the Home Office, Metropolitan police and London local authorities. The work of the group is nearing completion.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many plastic baton rounds have been issued to England and Welsh police forces; and how many rounds are held in each force area;

(2) how many plastic baton rounds have been earmarked for each regional stockpile.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since May 1986, plastic baton rounds have been supplied to police forces from a Home Office central store. It is not the practice to disclose the number of rounds held centrally or the number issued to, or held by, individual forces. Those police forces holding plastic baton rounds are as follows:

Avon and Somerset
Essex
Greater Manchester
Hampshire
Humberside
Kent
Lancashire
Leicestershire
Merseyside
Metropolitan Police
Northamptonshire
North Wales
North Yorkshire
Suffolk
Surrey
Sussex
Thames Valley
Warwickshire
West Midlands
West Yorkshire

Commonwealth Prisoners (British Citizens' Right)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made for Commonwealth citizens currently serving sentences in Her Majesty's prisons who have the right to register as British citizens to exercise that right prior to 31 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 21 October at column 779.

Filipino Women

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make illegal the mail order promotion of Filipino women as brides in the United Kingdom and to separate any marriage bureau facilities from sexually explicit magazines and sex shops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 9 November 1987]: I acknowledge the concern expressed, but at present we are not persuaded that legislation would be appropriate.

THE ARTS

Area Museum Councils

71. Mr. Cabom: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to implement the recommendation of the Museum and Galleries Commission in 1984 that the budget of the area museum councils should be doubled by 1990.

Mr. Luce: The grants to the English area museum councils are administered by the Museums and Galleries Commission. It is for the commission to decide the level of grants from within its grant-in-aid.

National Film and Television School

74. Mr. Waller: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received since announcing increased funding for 1988-89 for the National Film and Television School.

Mr. Luce: I have had a number of letters expressing appreciation of what I have been able to do for the arts in general, and the National Film and Television School in particular, in 1988-89 and in the longer-term.

Craft Council

75. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister for the Arts whom he consulted outside Her Majesty's Government in assessing the increased level of funding for 1988-89 for the Crafts Council.

Mr. Luce: I discussed with the Crafts Council its estimates for expenditure in 1988-89.

Museums (Oxford)

76. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to visit museums in Oxford in 1988.

Mr. Luce: I have no immediate plans to do so, but I much enjoyed my visit to four museums in the city of Oxford and in Oxfordshire in the summer of last year.

Museums

77. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many museums in the south-west open on fewer days each week, and for fewer hours each week, than in 1979.

91. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many museums in the west midlands are open on fewer days each year and for fewer hours each week than in 1979.

92. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many museums in Yorkshire and Humberside open on fewer days each year, and for fewer hours each week, than in 1979.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally.

82. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to visit museums in Cumbria in 1988.

85. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to visit museums in Sheffield in 1988.

88. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to visit museums in Nottinghamshire in 1988.

103. Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to visit the Derby museum and art galleries in 1988.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) earlier today.

87. Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister for the Arts what change in funding in real terms there has been for museums in Nottinghamshire since 1979.

94. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts what change in funding in real terms there has been for museums in the east midlands since 1979.

Mr. Luce: This information is not held centrally. The funding of local authority museums is a matter for the local authorities concerned. The funding of independent museums is a matter for the managements of the individual museums which may seek funds from a number of sources to supplement their revenue. Museums in the area may also apply for support from the Museums and Galleries Commission and their area museum council.

89. Ms. Short: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many people are employed on a voluntary basis in museums and galleries in the north midlands.

Mr. Luce: Of the museums in Derbyshire, Staffordshire, Nottinghamshire and Lincolnshire responding to a survey by the Museums Association in May 1985, a half employed volunteers. The total number of volunteers involved was 182.

96. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts on what estimates or information he has made his proposed allocations to national museums and to the Museums and Galleries Commission for 1989-90 and 1990-91

98. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts on what comparative basis he proposes to allocate funding to the national museums and to the Museums and Galleries Commission over the next three years.

Mr. Luce: The allocations I announced on 5 November are based on an assessment of needs and priorities across the whole arts programme and are informed by submissions from the organisations I sponsor, including the National Museums and Galleries and the Museums and Galleries Commissions, about their future plans.

Funding

78. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts why he has announced a three-year settlement for funding of the arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I announced the three-year settlement to carry forward the Government's long-term financial plan for the arts, which is to maintain the level of support from public funds in such a way as to encourage subsidised bodies to become more self-reliant in their development and growth. I can report that it has been extremely well received, and I believe that it will provide arts organisations with the incentive and the opportunity for effective long-term planning.

Stoke-on-Trent

79. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will visit Stoke-on-Trent city art gallery and museum in 1987.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so in 1987. I visited the city museum and art gallery in September 1986 and particularly enjoyed seeing the important collections of English pottery and porcelain which are kept there.

Visits

80. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Minister for the Arts what visits he made abroad as Arts Minister during the summer recess.

Mr. Luce: During the summer recess I attended a meeting of the Culture Ministers of the Council of Europe in Sintra, Portugal and the opening of the Henry Moore exhibition in New Delhi, India. I also made official visits to Spain and to the Frankfurt book fair.

Arts Council (Grant Distribution)

81. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will seek powers over the distribution between different forms of art by the Arts Council of its grant.

Mr. Luce: No. I think it better that the Arts Council, not Ministers, should take these decisions.

Arts Council (Funding)

83. Dr. Blackburn: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about his decision to increase funding for the Arts Council in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: I have been gratified to receive a large number of letters from arts bodies, artists and members of the public, expressing their appreciation, not only of the increase in the grant for 1988-89 and the two succeeding years, but of the encouragement I have been able to give to arts bodies which are trying to broaden their funding base.

84. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he next intends to meet the chairman of the Arts Council to discuss levels of funding.

Mr. Luce: I meet the chairman regularly and funding often features in our discussions.

North of England Area Museum Council

86. Mr. Dixon: To ask the Minister for the Arts what change, in real terms, there has been in the funding of the North of England area museum council since 1979.

Mr. Luce: Grants to the English Area Museum Councils are determined by the Museums and Galleries Commission from within its annual allocation from the arts programme. I understand that since 1979-80 funding North AMCs as a group has increased by 9·5 per cent. in real terms.

West Midlands Area Museum Council

90. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has as to how many people are employed in museums and galleries administered by the West Midlands area museum council on Manpower Services Commission schemes.

Mr. Luce: Of the 97 museums in the area covered by the West Midlands area museum service that responded to a survey by the Museums Association in 1985, 22 per cent. ran Manpower Services Commission schemes employing a total of 381 people.

Natural History Museum

93. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has visited the Natural History Museum since taking over sponsoring responsibility from the Department of Education and Science.

Mr. Luce: I have recently visited both the Natural History Museum and the Geological Museum, where I opened the new Plate Tectonics exhibition, and have been impressed by the enthusiasm, skill and enterprise with which the museum cares for, researches and markets its superb collections.

"Art in Government"

95. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on his recent "Art in Government" initiative.

Mr. Luce: This is a pilot scheme under which I have commissioned and obtained a number of copies of six paintings by promising artists, for display in the Government offices for which I am responsible. I believe that this will enliven the working environment, at a modest cost, and encourage some deserving artists. I hope that it will be possible for other Government Departments to initiate similar schemes.

Small Theatre Clubs

97. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to support and protect small theatre clubs currently operating without a legally defined status; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I am aware of the increasing contribution these theatres are making to the overall theatrical picture, in London and elsewhere. I am currently discussing licensing conditions with the Arts Council, and depending on the outcome of these consultations, will determine how best to proceed.

British Film Institute

99. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister for the Arts whom he consulted from outside Her Majesty's Government before announcing increased funding for 1988-89 for the British Film Institute.

Mr. Luce: I discussed the British Film Institute's estimate of its 1988-89 expenditure with the chairman and director of the institute. I am very pleased to have been able to announce funding figures which will assist the institute to secure a firm financial base in future years.

Local Authority Museums, London

100. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he will take to assist local authority museums in London to further their work in and with their communities.

Mr. Luce: Responsibility for local authority museums in London falls to the appropriate borough council. Central Government assistance is channelled through the rates support grant and through the Museums and Galleries Commission and the London Museum Service, a division of the area museum service for south-eastern England.

Libraries (Services)

101. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to introduce charges for services at libraries.

Mr. Luce: The Government remain committed to the free basic public library service to individuals. But the enabling power referred to by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 22 July, at column 275, if passed by Parliament, could be used to give new opportunities to help public libraries grow by allowing them to charge for a range of specialised services, perhaps in partnership with the private sector. I propose to issue a consultation document in order to gather views on this.

Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme

102. Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister for the Arts what criteria were used in determining the level of funding for 1988-89 to 1990-91, for the business sponsorship incentive scheme.

Mr. Luce: Due to the success of the scheme I have increased provision by over 70 per cent. — from £1·75 million to £3 million — to reflect the opportunity I expect for growth in sponsorship in 1988-89. I have also provided £3 million per annum for years 1989-90 and 1990-91 and will review this in the light of experience.

Works of Art (Loans)

104. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Minister for the Arts what further measures he is taking to encourage the lending of works of art by the national collection.

Mr. Luce: It is a key part of my policy to make the treasures in our national collections more widely accessible. I have had a number of discussions with trustees and directors of national museums and galleries about the scope for increasing the number of works of art they lend to other institutions. Such loans are facilitated by the Government indemnity scheme.

The grant-in-aid for the Museums and Galleries Commission that I announced on 5 November includes increased provision for the new travelling exhibitions unit which will act as a focal point and help develop initiatives for further exhibitions and loans throughout the country. I discussed the plans for the new unit with the commissioners last week.

Touring Companies and Exhibitions

105. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to encourage touring companies and exhibitions to reach a wider audience in the regions.

Mr. Luce: I have been able to provide a substantial increase in the Arts Council's grant for the next three years. Out of this increase, I have asked it to ensure that £5 million in 1988-89, rising to £7 million in 1990-91, is spent on incentive funding and increased touring in the regions.

The Arts Council also plans to establish an independent production company for which it will provide one-third of the investment required, to produce and exploit major regional touring drama productions. Any financial benefit which this venture produces, either from touring or from transfers of productions to the commercial theatre, will be used to supplement moneys already set aside for touring purposes in general.

Public Lending Right Scheme

106. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will increase his Department's contribution to the public lending right scheme.

Mr. Luce: I was very glad to be able to announce earlier this month an increase in the public lending right fund of £0·75 million which brings the annual fund to £3·5 million. This represents an increase of 27 per cent. and is the second substantial increase in three years. It will raise the fund in real terms to its highest level since the scheme was implemented, and demonstrates the Government's commitment to public lending right.

Donations

107. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he intends to encourage more private and corporate donations to the arts.

Mr. Luce: I announced on 5 November a three-year settlement for the arts, which maintained the level of support and emphasised the importance I attach to incentive funding, so as to encourage subsidised arts bodies to become more self-reliant. The Arts Council is working up a new scheme for this purpose. Among arrangements already in place, my business sponsorship incentive scheme is an excellent example of how taxpayers' money can be used to attract more private sector funds, and I propose to raise it by 70 per cent. to £3 million next year. Other fund-raising opportunities for the arts have been provided by the payroll giving scheme and recent reliefs on corporation tax for company donations.

Lindow Man (Exhibition)

108. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received on the question of displaying Lindow Man in a museum in the north-west.

Mr. Luce: I have received a number of letters from members of the public and Members of Parliament on this subject. I understand that the British museum has agreed with the Manchester museum that Lindow Man will return to London in December but will go back to Manchester for a further four or five months in late 1990.

Sponsorship

Mr. Pike: To ask the Minister for the Arts how the percentage of funds made available under the business for arts sponsorship scheme and spent in the south-east compares with the figure for the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: The south-east has received 4·4 per cent. of funds made available under the business sponsorship incentive scheme out of a £4·7 million total for the United Kingdom since October 1984.

Merseyside

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Minister for the Arts what plans he has to encourage the growth of the regional arts on Merseyside.

Mr. Luce: Following my grant announcement on 5 November, the Arts Council is developing proposals for incentive funding. I hope that arts bodies on Merseyside will seize this opportunity.

Natural History Museum

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the number of admissions to the Natural History Museum in the six months following the introduction of admission charges; and what was the numbers of admissions in the comparable period of each of the three previous years.

Mr. Luce: The numbers of visitors to the Natural History Museum's South Kensington site in the last three years were as follows:

	Numbers
1984	2,318,000
1985	2,642,000
1986	2,678,000

Figures for 1987 are not yet available.

Economic Study

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts when he expects that the study on the economy of the arts, funded by the Office of Arts and Libraries and undertaken by the Policy Studies Institute, will be published.

Mr. Luce: Publication is a matter for the Policy Studies Institute, but I expect the results to be available in the early months of 1988.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Income Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he has any information on the net loss or the net gain in revenue from income tax and other revenue sources that would be achieved by reducing all the higher rates of income tax to the basic rate;

(2) what was the gross amount of money raised by the additional margin by which the higher rates of income tax exceed the basic rate in 1978-79, 1983-84 and 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The total tax liability resulting from the difference between the higher rates of income tax and the basic rate is estimated to be:

1978-79	0·8
1986-87	2·5

The direct revenue cost of abolishing the higher rates of income tax, and the associated wife's earnings election, would be about £3·8 billion in a full year at forecast levels of income for 1988-89. This estimate assumes indexation of the current income tax allowances and bands for 1988-89, as in table 4.1 of the 1987 Autumn Statement. It does not include an estimate of the effect on total Exchequer receipts of changes in taxpayers' behaviour or other economic effects, resulting from the reduction in rates of income tax.

Corporation Tax

Mr. David Shaw: To ask Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the estimated cost in a full year of introducing a nil corporation tax rate for small businesses with net tangible assets of below £200,000 that are limited companies.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information required to provide an estimate is not available centrally.

Charitable Donations

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the Treasury of introducing relief for single donations to charities by companies in 1986-87 and the first six months of 1987-88; and how much of the cost was attributable to such donations to professional arts organisations with charitable status in the same periods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The revenue cost in respect of single donations in 1986-87 is estimated at some £3·5 million. The provisional estimate of the cost for the first six months of 1987-88 is a further £3 million. The cost attributable to donations to professional arts organisations is not known.

Shareholders

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest figure for the number of shareholders in Britain.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 29 October at column 435.

British Printing Industries Federation

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the British Printing Industries Federation about value added tax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My ministerial colleagues and I have received a number of representations from the British Printing Industries Federation in favour of maintaining VAT zero-rating for books, newspapers and periodicals.

Crown Estate Commissioners

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what payments are being received as rent by the Crown Estate Commissioners for pipelines and associated works on the seabed at Dounreay, Sellafield and Hunterston nuclear power stations.

Mr. Lawson: I regret that the amounts concerned cannot be disclosed as they are subject to commercial confidentially.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what directions he has given to the Crown Estate Commissioners to negotiate a rental agreement with the promoters of the fixed Channel link in respect of the promoters' activities on and under the seabed; and whether negotiations have taken place.

Mr. Lawson: None. The basis for the valuation for compensation for the transfer of the freehold interest to the Secretary of State, for the appropriate area of the seabed involved is contained in Section 7(3) of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987. Discussions as to the actual value are presently taking place.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of the reduction in capital values on the United Kingdom stock market on the yield from capital gains tax arising from share dealing.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It would be premature to form a firm view.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the reasons for the published increase in the figure for the Central Office of Information in the Winter Supplementary Estimates; and if he will indicate what work the additional sums are being or will be spent on.

Mr. Brooke: The Central Office of Information winter supplementary of £29·9 million provides for expenditure on publicity which could not have been anticipated for COI's main estimate. Most of the supplementary is for the sale of BP shares on behalf of Her Majesty's Treasury (£22·3 million), and for employment campaigns, particularly for the Manpower Services Commission. The costs will be recovered from these departments as publicity is carried out on a repayment basis.

BP Share Issue

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate, as at 17 November, how many of the underwriters for the BP share issue have paid the full amount for the partly-paid value of shares they were committed to purchase; how many have not yet done so and which they are; and when he expects to receive the full amount from the partly-paid issue.

Mr. Norman Lamont: All underwriters met their obligations to pay the first instalment price of unsold partly paid BP shares on the dates specified in the underwriting agreements.

Indian Banks

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the status in the United Kingdom of the Punjab National Bank, the Union Bank of India and the Central Bank of India, following the closure of their branches in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley: The Punjab National Bank, Central Bank of India and Union Bank of India announced at the beginning of this year that they would be running down their business in the United Kingdom with a view to closure in due course. Pending completion of this process, the three banks continue to be authorised institutions under the Banking Act 1987.

Privatisation

Mr. Radice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest estimates of the gross proceeds to the Exchequer from the sale of (a) British Telecom and (b) British Gas.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The gross proceeds to the Exchequer from the British Telecom share sale in November 1984 are £3,863 million and from the sale of British Gas plc. in December 1986 are £7,750 million.

Entertainment (Tax Allowances)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the total amount of expenditure on entertaining disallowable for tax purposes for the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 16 November 1987]: Information on which to base a reliable estimate is not available centrally.

Eurotunnel

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what tax treatment is envisaged for the benefits in kind in the form of free journeys being offered to private investors by Eurotunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to clarify the position over the liability to taxation of benefits in kind provided to shareholders in light of the decision of the promoters of Eurotunnel to offer free cross-channel journeys to their prospective shareholders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 16 November and 17 November]: The tax treatment of benefits to shareholders depends upon the particular facts of each scheme. The same rules will apply for Eurotunnel as for other schemes.

Married Women (Taxation)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received in favour of reforming the taxation of married women.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 17 November 1987]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer continues to receive a wide range of correspondence on this subject.

Tax Returns

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the reasons why fewer adults are submitting Inland Revenue tax returns; and if he will publish figures for each year since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 19 November 1987]: So far as employed taxpayers are concerned, fewer people are now required to submit tax returns than previously. Figures of returns issued at the commencement of each tax year and received back within the following six months are set out below:

Year	Returns issued (000s)	Returns received (000s)	Receipt as per cent. of issue
1979	8,105	5,945	73
1980	7,362	5,313	72
1981	6,499	4,469	69
1982	6,078	4,236	70
1983	5,813	4,364	75
1984	5,453	4,084	75
1985	5,255	3,941	75
1986	4,693	3,299	70
1987	4,672	3,199	68

No comparable figures are available for returns issued to the self-employed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Government Bills (Royal Assent)

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will publish in the Official Report a list of Government-sponsored Bills which received the Royal Assent since 1957; and what percentage this represents of the total number of public Bills introduced.

Mr. Wakeham: The Public Bill returns, issued annually at the end of each Session, contain lists of all Bills which received the Royal Assent and indicate which of them were Government Bills. To list the 1677 Government Bills included in these returns, since 1957, would involve disproportionate cost. Thirty-seven per cent. of the total number of public Bills introduced since 1957 were Government-sponsored Bills.

Private Members' Bills (Royal Assent)

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will list those private Members' Bills which received the Royal Assent in each Session since 1957 together with the sponsors of each Bill; and what percentage this represents of the total number of private Members' Bills introduced.

Mr. Wakeham: My hon. Friend will already be aware of much of the following information which was given in a written reply to him by my predecessor on 26 January 1987 at columns 117-123.

Liaison Committee (Report)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal what response he has made to the report from the Liaison Committee, Session 1984-85, HC363; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: This report was generally in the nature of a factual summary of the inquiries that had been carried out by the departmental Select Committees in the previous two years. With regard to the references in the report to the nomination of departmental Select Committees after general elections, I do not consider that the existence of a standing order providing for nominations for these Committees to be put forward within a prescribed period would necessarily have expedited their establishment in this Parliament.

Select Committee on Procedure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal what response he has made to the recommendations of the First Report from the Select Committee on Procedure, Session 1986-87, HC157, relating to the parliamentary calendar.

Mr. Wakeham: Ministerial views on the matters dealt within this report were given in written and oral evidence to the Committee. I am at present considering the most appropriate way in which this, and other recent reports of the Procedure Committee, might be brought before the House.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he intends to propose the establishment of a Select Committee on Procedure.

Mr. Wakeham: The establishment of Select Committees is a matter for the House. I hope to bring forward proposals when the necessary consultations are completed.

Select Committee Reports (Debates)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will make it his policy, when departmental Select Committee Reports are debated on the Floor of the House, to table substantive motions on such reports.

Mr. Wakeham: Such motions will continue to be tabled in accordance with what is appropriate in the circumstances of the particular report.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Senior Departmental Structure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the structure of the senior levels of his Department (grades I-III) in 1979 and at present.

Ward Closures

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many wards have been closed, giving the number of beds involved, in the last 15 years in hospitals under the control of Norwich health authority; and how many wards are now under threat of closure.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally. My hon. Friend may like to approach the acting chairman of Norwich district health authority.

Benefit Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what statistical records are kept of the qualifying conditions of new claimants registering for unemployment benefit; and if these records distinguish between claimants who qualify on grounds of contributions only, and those who qualify on a mixture of contributions and credits.

Mr. Portillo: Statistics on unemployment benefit claims provided by the national unemployment benefit computer system include the number of claimants who satisfy the contribution conditions and qualify for unemployment benefit. These statistics do not, however, differentiate between those claimants who satisfy the contribution conditions by virtue of paid contributions only and those who rely on a record of paid and credited contributions.

Blood Products

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has considered introducing paid donors into the Blood Transfusion Service.

Mr. Newton: No. We will continue to rely on our blood and plasma donors who give voluntarily for the benefit of others.

Health Authorities

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual running cost of each regional health authority; and how many staff each employs.

Mrs. Currie: Following is the information requested:

Community Care Grants

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will consider making women in refuges and who have suffered domestic violence a specific and high priority category of claimant for the purposes of discretionary payments under the social fund regulations;

(2) whether the community care grant will apply only to a party of a marriage who has become homeless as a result of marital breakdown or whether it will also cover situations where the applicant has previously been living with her/his partner as man and wife.

Mr. Scott: The guidance in the social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library, makes it clear that community care grants may be made where a relationship has ended and this includes both marital and non-marital relationships. This guidance gives priority to cases where there has been domestic violence and is therefore intended to cover the position of women in refuges.

Board and Lodging

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all the changes which have taken place since 1982 in board and lodging allowances for all categories of (a) resident and (b) accommodation.

Mr. Portillo: Supplementary benefit payments for board and lodging include amounts for accommodation charges and any meals not included in the charge. The total is subject to a limit. Prior to 1985, limits were set locally in each DHSS office. Separate limits for nursing homes, residential care homes and ordinary board and lodging were introduced from November 1983. These were reviewed locally. A full list of the limits that applied at September 1984 is included in a DHSS document "Supplementary Benefit Board and Lodging Allowances, Results of a special statistical exercise (29 July–29 April 1985)." A revised system of centrally determined limits was introduced from April 1985 with a new hostel category attracting a national limit of £70 a week. Limits for ordinary board and lodging were set in the range from £45 to £70 according to the area—details are available in Her Majesty's Stationery Office publication "Supplementary Benefit Maximum Amounts, Initial Periods and Board and Lodging Areas." Copies of both documents referred to here are available in the Library. The table sets out limits for all categories of residential care and nursing home since April 1985 to date, and gives details of increases to take effect from April 1988.

Note: The limits for all homes in the Greater London area could be extended by up to £17·50 from July 1986.

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why there is a difference in board and lodging allowance rates for persons with mental illness and mental handicap, in residential care; and if he will make a statement;

(2) why new rates for board and lodging allowance show a further differential between persons with a mental illness and persons with mental handicap.

Mr. Portillo: The present structure of supplementary benefit limits for people in residential care homes was introduced in 1985 at the same time that the registration requirements for these homes were being revised. The Residential Care Homes Regulations 1984 specify that registers of homes kept by registration authorities must distinguish between categories of residents, reflecting the fact that different client groups have different needs. There are separate registration categories for mental handicap and for other forms of mental disorder past or present. Supplementary benefit limits were linked to these categories.

The limits were originally set in April 1985 on the basis of the best available information on costs and charges in residential care homes of different kinds. The limit in residential care homes for mentally disordered people other than mentally handicapped people was set at £120 and that for mentally handicapped people at £140. Since then we have monitored the levels of the limits making adjustments where necessary. The limits now stand at £130 and £150, respectively.

We have recently completed a full review of all the supplementary benefit limits and concluded that the limit for mentally handicapped people should be increased by £10 to £160 from April 1988. We gave very careful consideration as to whether an increase in the limit for people with other forms of mental disorder was also warranted. However, whilst costs in homes for such people have increased, the review indicated that most charges were still covered by the limit. On balance, therefore, we decided that an increase was not appropriate.

Doctors and Nurses (Training)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest figures for the estimated average cost of training (a) a doctor and (b) a nurse.

Mr. Newton: The universities' cost of five years' medical education was £40,800 per medical student in 1985-86. This cost does not include student support, NHS costs in support of clinical teaching, or any post-graduate education.

The estimated average cost of training a registered general nurse over a three-year course is £12,600. This figure excludes that part of the cost of the trainee's remuneration and other costs estimated to represent the value of the contribution the training makes to patient services.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1979 the total number of (a) doctors and (b) nurses completing basic training courses in the private medical sector.

Mr. Newton: Information is not available in the form requested. We are advised by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting that during the year ended 31 March 1987, 352 nurses completed basic nurse training in training schools outside the National Health Service, including those who trained in the Channel Isles and the Isle of Man. Comparable information for earlier years is not readily available. No medical training is provided by the private sector.

Torbay Health Authority

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he hopes to reply to the letter of 2 November from the hon. Member of South Hams enclosing another from Anthony Boyce, chairman of the Torbay health authority, concerning the rate of growth in the Torbay health authority area during the coming year.

Mrs. Currie: I replied to my hon. Friend today.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Warrington, North, for answer on 9 November, concerning private nursing homes.

Mrs. Currie: I replied to the hon. Member on 20 November.

Benefit Offices

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of supplementary benefit offices; and if he will, in the manner of his answer to the hon. Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory), Official Report, 4 November, columns 774-81, show the offices whose allocation under the social fund will be less than is paid out in the current year on single payments, and by how much.

Mr. Scott: There are 453 supplementary benefit offices. As these offices do not receive allocations for single payment expenditure it will not be possible to compare the social fund budgets for 1988-89 with their single payment expenditure for 1987-88 until provisional outturn figures for the latter year are available on an office by office basis. Such figures are likely to be available in July 1988.

Social Security (Prosecutions)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many prosecutions his Department has sought against social security claimants in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The numbers of prosecutions undertaken by the Department for fraudulent claims to social security benefits are as follows:

	Number
1979-80	16,635
1980-81	18,801
1981-82	14,206
1982-83	11,334
1983-84	5,997
1984-85	6,702
1985-86	6,679
1986-87	6,603

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects work on the cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital to be completed.

Mrs. Currie: Internal work was completed in September; remaining external works are scheduled for completion at the end of the year.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital to be brought into use.

Mrs. Currie: Commissioning is under way; the first admission is planned for early December with full occupation by the end of January 1988.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total cost to date of the restoration works undertaken on the cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital.

Mrs. Currie: So far about £17·01 million has been paid in fees and construction costs.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated final total cost of restoring the cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital.

Mrs. Currie: At an historic (1982) price base, which was used in all earlier estimates, the latest estimated building and engineering cost of restoration is £12·8 million. At current prices, with design fees included, but excluding equipment, the total estimated cost of the restoration is £20·25 million.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of equipping the restored cardiac block at Great Ormond street hospital.

Mrs. Currie: The net cost of equipping the cardiac wing, after offsetting the value of equipment purchased when the wing was originally built and subsequently sold or redeployed elsewhere, is estimated at £650,000.

Income-related Benefits

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will estimate, on the basis of benefit rates from April 1988 and the expected claiming pattern, the number of families and dependent children who, but for child benefit, would be entitled to income-related benefits by each Birmingham parliamentary constituency or by each office of his Department by address, in Birmingham.

Mr. Scott: The information is only available nationally and cannot be given for particular areas. The national figures were given in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys-Williams) on 9 November at column 85.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will estimate the number of pensioner households in each Birmingham parliamentary constituency, or by Birmingham offices of his Department by address, who would be entitled to housing benefit but for changes under the Social Security Act 1986 for April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that we do not keep information in the form or to the degree of detail requested.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Servies whether he will estimate the total amount paid in supplementary benefit single payments to claimants in the Birmingham, Erdington constituency in each of the past three years.

Mr. Portillo: Two of the Department's local offices serve the Birmingham, Erdington constituency, Erdington and Perry Barr, but their boundaries are not conterminous. The information requested is given in the table.

	Erdington ILO £	Perry Barr ILO £
1984-85	765,366	456,760
[1]1985-86	1,138,574	767,483
[1]1986-87	1,276,165	995,884

[1] The figures given for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are provisional and subject to amendment.
Note: The figures are for the years May to April.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimated outturn for expenditure on supplementary benefit in 1987-88.

Mr. Scott: Current estimates provision for expenditure on supplementary benefit stands at £8,255 million. The latest forecasts of outturn will be given in the public expenditure White Paper due to be published in January 1988.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the estimated numbers of supplementary benefit claimants in 1987-88 and the expected numbers of income support claimants in 1988-89.

Mr. Scott: The estimated numbers of supplementary benefit and income support claimants given in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper are as follows:

	Million
1987-88	4·93

The estimate for 1988-89 is based on the assumption that there will be no change in the number of people who would have been receiving supplementary benefit if it were not being replaced by income support.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 9 November, Official Report, column 99, whether paragraph 1 of circular S 42/85 accurately reflects the Chief Adjudication Officer's current view of the meaning of "adult" in paragraph 18 of schedule 4 to the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983.

Mr. Portillo: Yes. The Chief Adjudication Officer's interpretation of the term "adult" is supported by paragraph 10 of reported commissioner's decision R(SB)16/83, a copy of which is in the Library. Although some more recent unreported decisions have followed the interpretation in R(SB)16/83, some others have indicated that the term "adult" should be interpreted as "aged 18 or over". The Chief Adjudication Officer, therefore, intends to seek an early opportunity to clarify the question before a tribunal of commissioners.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list in the Official Report the current rates for special needs additions, indicating for each the additional requirements for the claimants which these sums are intended to meet;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report the current normal supplementary benefit rates for different categories of claimants, indicating for each the normal requirements for those claimants which these sums are intended to meet.

Mr. Portillo: The information is contained in regulation 4(1) of, and schedules 1 and 4 to, the Supplementary Benefit (Requirements) Regulations 1983 as amended. These are at pages 1690, 1744 and 1753 to 1762 of "The Law relating to Supplementary Benefits and Family Income Supplement", a copy of which is in the Library.

Social Fund

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will detail the basis upon which the allocation of social fund grants and loans budgets for 1988-89 to each office of his Department was calculated, showing the relationship between the budgets and the current level of supplementary benefit single payment claims; and if he will place an explanatory document in the Library.

Mr. Scott: I will arrange for an explanation of the basis of the allocation of the social fund budgets for 1988-89 to be placed in the Library. The current estimate of single payments expenditure in the financial year 1987-88 is £190 million. The national social fund budget for 1988-89 will be £203 million; £60 million for grant, £141 million for loans and £2 million to be held as a central contingency reserve.

Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what his Department's local office annual budgets will be in respect of (a) grants and (b) loans from the social fund for each of the following: Redcar, Eston, Middlesbrough, Stockton and Hartlepool; what the monthly or quarterly expenditure profiles will be in respect of each of these local offices; and if he will issue tables comparing these budgetary periods and expenditure with a single payment expenditure for similar periods over the past four years.

Mr. Scott: Information on the allocations for 1988-89 was contained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-81. A model profile of expected expenditure on a month by month basis will be drawn up at national level. Local office managers may adjust the national profile to reflect particular local factors. The monthly profile of expenditure for the offices in Redcar, Eston, Middlesbrough, Stockton and Hartlepool will be for the managers of those offices to decide. I will arrange for the information requested on annual single payment expenditure to be placed in the Library.

Nurses

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the manpower planning basis behind the provision of training courses for registered sick children's nurses;

(2) how many nurses registered as sick children's nurses in each of the last five years;

(3) what information he has on the number of registered sick children's nurses who left the National Health Service in each of the past five years;

(4) whether he has any plans to introduce refresher courses for registered sick children's nurses who are returning to the National Health Service after a break in service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is for individual health authorities to determine the number of registered sick children's nurses (RSCNs) they require and ensure that there is an adequate number of places available on training courses to meet those requirements. It is always open to health authorities to seek the approval of the English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting for additional training courses.

Information supplied by the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting about the number of nurses in England and Wales added to the register for sick children's nurses between 1983 and 1987 is shown in the table:

1984	655
1985	729
1986	706
1987	858

[1] Changes in processing the information have occurred over the period shown; there are therefore inconsistencies in the series shown.

Information about the number of RSCNs who leave the National Health Service is not collected centrally. It is open to individual health authorities to organise refresher courses for RSCNs who are returning to the National Health Service after a break in service if it is considered there is sufficient demand for such a course.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to promote flexible working practices for nurses.

Mr. Newton: In June 1986 the acting chairman of the NHS management board wrote to general managers reminding them of the need to consider a wide range of employment and management practices aiming to improve recruitment and retention. These included flexible rostering, part-time working and job sharing. The Royal College of Nursing's recently published guide to nurse managers and others on better ways of managing the work force, called "Manpower Solutions", also includes guidance on these practices. It must be for local management to determine detailed working practices in the light of local circumstances, but progress on these issues is followed up through the accountability review process.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list the courses in England, Wales and Scotland which train registered sick children's nurses; and if he will indicate the number of places on each course.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested has been obtained from the Nurse Central Clearing House for England, The English National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting, The Welsh National Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting and the Board for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting in Scotland. It realtes to courses in 1987.

In England a 53-week post basic course in registered sick children's nurse training is available to registered general nurses at the following schools:

South Lothian College of Nursing and Midwifery—30 places, two intakes per annum of 15.
Foresterhill College of Nursing and Midwifery—28 places, four intakes per annum of seven.

Medical Social Workers

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he or his officials have had any consultation with (a) the Maudsley health authority; (b) Lewisham and North Southwark health authority and (c) Southwark social services concerning the relocation of medical social workers from hospitals in Southwark to social services area teams; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Officials have met representatives of the Special health authority, the Lewisham and North Southwark health authority, and Southwark social services to encourage a constructive and helpful dialogue about the decision of the London borough of Southwark to reduce the current level of services provided by hospital social workers. A further meeting between the local authority and health authorities involved is to take place today, 23 November. Officials will continue to watch the situation closely and report as necessary to Ministers.

Abortion

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the number of women since 1968 who have had more than one abortion.

Mr. Newton: I regret that the full information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the table shows the number of women who have had a second legal abortion between 1983 and 1986.

Number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 where one previous abortion under the Act is indicated, residents and non-residents. England and Wales 1983-1986

Year	Number
1983	21,769
1984	24,330
1985	24,513
1983-1986	97,492

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Birkenhead, Official Report, 6 November, columns 863-4, he will begin to collect social class information on each woman successfully undergoing an abortion operation in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average cost of an abortion on the National Health Service; and what percentage of hospital discharges relate to women who have had the operation.

Mr. Newton: The estimated revenue cost of an abortion in National Health Service hospitals is £170.

In 1986 the number of women resident in England and Wales who had an abortion in a National Health Service hospital in England represented about 1 per cent. of the total discharges and deaths from NHS hospitals in England in that year.

Social Security Tribunals

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent managers of local offices of his Department have complied and made available lists of local agencies prepared to help applicants at social security tribunals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my replies to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 24 July at column 710 and to the hon. Member for Oxford, East (Mr. Smith) on 22 October at column 881. Local offices are now in the process of compiling lists where necessary so that the scheme can be implemented from 1 January 1988.

Family Practitioner Service

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the expenditure per head of population on the family practitioner service in cash and constant 1986-87 prices for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information requested in respect of the family practitioner services in England is set out in the table:

Family Practitioner Services—Gross expenditure per head of population

England

	Cash £	[1]At 1986-87 prices £
1979-80	36	60
1980-81	45	63

1985-86	75	77
1986-87	80	80

Prescriptions

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost to the Exchequer of prescriptions by general medical practitioners in cash and constant 1986-87 prices for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The information requested in respect of the family practitioner services in England is set out in the table:

Family Practitioner Services (England)—Net cost of prescriptions[1]

	Cash £ million	[2]At 1986-87 prices £ million
1979-80	751	1,251

Relative Need

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the current review of the resource allocation working party formula to investigate the scope for improving the way in which the formula measures relative need across the United Kingdom will be completed.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 16 November 1987 at column 439.

Unclaimed Benefit

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the current estimate for unclaimed benefit in (a) Scotland and (b) Glasgow, Pollok constituency.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Benefit Waiting Times

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current average waiting times in Scotland for (a) single payments under the supplementary benefit scheme, (b) new claims for supplementary benefit, (c) housing benefit, (d) family income supplement and (e) INVA.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that information in respect of single payments and housing benefit is not available.

Information in respect of new claims for supplementary benefit, family income supplement and invalidity benefit is not available in precisely the form requested. However, the following information is available.

The average clearance time for total new and repeat supplementary benefit claims in Scotland, for the four-week period ending 20 October 1987, was four days.

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

The average clearance time for claims to family income supplement on a national basis is 14 days.

Source: Special count of claims to 24 August 1987.

The average clearance time for claims to short term contributory benefits (sickness and invalidity benefits only) in Scotland, for the four-week period ending 20 October 1987, was seven days.

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Free Milk and Vitamins

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the number of awards of free milk and vitamins which were made in 1985 to (a) pregnant women and (b) children under school age, showing for each group if the ground for the award was (i) receipt of supplementary benefit, (ii) family income supplement or (iii) low income.

Mr. Portillo: The information is not available in the precise form requested. However, as at the nearest date (February 1986; April 1986 for FIS) the numbers actually in receipt of free welfare milk and vitamins were as follows:

	Grounds
	Supplementary benefit	FIS	Low income
Pregnant women	47,000	[1]8,000	7,000
Children under 5	802,000	124,000	77,000

[1] Estimate.

Departmental Staff

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to increase the numbers of (a) higher executive officers or (b) executive officers in his Department consequent upon the introduction of the social fund; if he plans to introduce any changes in the grade structure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The staffing implications for the Department of the social fund have yet to be worked out in detail.

Operational Strategy System

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to publish the training plans for future users of the operational strategy system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: No. It is not practice for the Department to publish its internal training plans.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what protection will be available under the new rule stipulating that unemployment benefit will not be paid until after the 26th week of unemployment if a job is left voluntarily by an employee, to those particularly women who leave their work on the grounds of sexual or other harassment, racial abuse, illness, particularly mental illness, dangerous working practices, or on the grounds of drunkenness or abusive employers.

Mr. Scott: Section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 disqualifies a person for receiving unemployment benefit if he or she has lost employment on account of leaving voluntarily without "just cause". The question of what constitutes "just cause" is a matter for the independent adjudication authorities to decide based on the individual circumstances of the case and on the considerable volume of case law that exists.

The Government's proposal is that the period of disqualification shall be expressed as "not exceeding" 26 weeks and this formulation will enable the adjudicating authorities to disqualify for a shorter period if there are mitigating factors though not sufficient to constitute "just cause". If a person is dissatisfied with the decision of the local adjudication officer he or she has the right of appeal to an independent appeal tribunal and from there on a point of law to a Social Security Commissioner.

Domiciliary Consultations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for the last available year (a) the total cost of domiciliary consultations in the National Health Service and (b) the number for each specialty, with cost.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Junior Hospital Doctors

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any information on sleep deprivation in junior hospital doctors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no such information. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 3 November at column 706 in which I set out the positive steps we have taken to reduce junior doctors' hours of work.

Invalid Care Allowance

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, in cases where married and cohabiting women have been awarded both arrears of invalid care allowance and an extra-statutory payment to cover the period from December 1984, national insurance contributions have been credited for the whole of the period from December 1984 until invalid care allowance was paid.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 12 November 1987]: Yes, except in any period for which a married woman's choice of reduced liability for national insurance contributions was in force.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of married or cohabiting women who have since the benefit was extended to them (a) been refused invalid care allowance because they were in receipt of a national insurance benefit payable at a higher rate than invalid care allowance, (b) had payment offset by the amount of a national insurance benefit paid at a lower rate than invalid care allowance and (c) had payment of invalid care allowance offset by additions to other national insurance benefits in respect of dependants.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The information available does not distinguish between women according to their marital status. Since June 1986, when the allowance was extended to married and cohabiting women, some 2,270 claims from women have been disallowed on account of the payment of other social security benefits which equal or exceed the weekly rate of invalid care allowance (ICA). In a further 568 cases payments to women have been reduced on account of other social security benefits paid at less than the weekly rate of the allowance. No information is available about cases in which payment of ICA results in a corresponding reduction in a dependancy increase in another benefit which has previously been paid to someone else in respect of the ICA recipient.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what interest is payable on amounts of invalid care allowance which have been paid late.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 12 November 1987]: None.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when Mrs. Brigid McClennan of 26 Templemore road, Oxton, Birkenhead, will receive payment of the invalid care allowance she applied for on 5 November 1986. (Ref: 060011).

Mr. Scott [holding answer 18 November 1987]: Mrs. McClennan's claim was decided on 17 November and she should receive payment within the next seven days. I regret that processing of her claim took much longer than is usual and I will be writing to the hon. Member.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department, in dealing with claims for invalid care allowance, follows its normal practice of paying interest where payment is delayed for more than 12 months.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 18 November 1987]: It is not the normal practice of the Department to pay interest where payment of benefit is delayed for more than 12 months. Since 1977, however, the Department has paid compensation where payments have been delayed for more than 52 weeks as a result of clear and unambiguous departmental error. Back payments of invalid care allowance, up to December 1984, made following the retrospective extension of the allowance to married and cohabiting women in June 1986, do not fall within the scope of the compensation scheme.

Bradford Investments

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will announce his decision about the application of benefit to mortgage agreements between Bradford Investments and house occupiers in Bolton; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 November 1987]: I understand that there is some question as to whether the housing costs of people who have the particular agreements with Bradford Investments are eligible for supplementary benefit or for housing benefit. It is for the independent adjudicating authorities to decide on the former and for the relevant local authority on the latter. The issue is being given urgent consideration and I hope that a decision will be made shortly.

AIDS

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services which voluntary organisations have received grants as part of the Government's AIDS prevention and education campaign; and how much each organisation has received.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 26 October 1987, c. 190-91]: I regret that this did not make clear a distinction between voluntary organisations which have already received grants and those for which applications for support are still under consideration. The latter group includes the British Association for Counselling, Accept Services UK Ltd, the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureau and St. Catherine's Hospice. In addition, while the Government are committed to provide substantial financial support to the National AIDS Trust, the amount has not yet been decided.

The Brook Advisory Service grant should have read £3,800.

Agency Doctors and Nurses

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he imposes a ceiling on the rates paid to agencies for (a) nurses and (b) junior hospital doctors by the National Health Service.

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place a maximum limit on the amount paid to individual agency nurses and doctors employed by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 19 November 1987]: When health authorities employ agency nursing staff they must follow Departmental guidelines which permit them to pay nurses agencies a maximum calculated on the mean of the appropriate NHS nursing and midwifery staff's pay scale for the grade plus the agencies' commission and the employer's national insurance contribution.

We have not imposed a ceiling on the rates paid to agencies who supply junior hospital doctors; but health authorities are advised to confine their use of such agencies to those complying with a voluntary code of practice issued in 1980, a copy of which is in the Library. This advises authorities to have regard to the rates of pay for directly employed staff, as determined on the basis of recommendations by the review body on doctors' and dentists' remunerations, when agreeing terms with agencies. I am aware that discussions aimed at reducing expenditure on medical agency staff are taking place within Trent, Yorkshire, Northern, Mersey, West Midlands and the four Thames regional health authorities. Officials are planning to meet representatives of the profession and senior National Health Service management to consider the issues involved.

TRANSPORT

British Rail

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the legal implications of the proposed use by the railways board of British Rail pension funds to make good a shortfall of £525 million in its accounts.

Mr. David Mitchell: I know of no shortfall of £525 million in the accounts of the British Railways Board. The management committee of the British Rail pension scheme is responsible for the management of the funding of that scheme.

M25

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total cost to date, in 1986-87 prices, of the construction of the M25.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Total expenditure in cash terms to the end of October 1987 on constructing the M25 has been £990 million. To provide an equivalent figure in 1986-87 prices would require revaluation of past expenditure to constant prices. Central records for past spending on some of the earlier sections of the road do not distinguish between years. It is not possible to obtain such information except by a manual search of files at disproportionate cost.

Aircraft Near Misses

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the ratio of near misses to take-off and landings involving commercial aircraft at Britain's airports (a) in 1986 and (b) in 1976.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: For 1976, one in 18,700; 1986, one in 70,600.

Bus Deregulation (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to announce his decision regarding bus deregulation in London.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer I gave him on 9 November at column 5.

Rail Electrification (Scotland)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to receive proposals from the British Railways Board regarding the further electrification of railway lines in Scotland.

Mr. David Mitchell: BR is considering the possibility of electrifying one of the lines between Edinburgh and Glasgow: if it establishes that there is a worthwhile case I am sure it will bring it forward. I understand it has no other plans for electrifying lines in Scotland.

Taxis (Wheelchair Passengers)

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how many London taxis are equipped to take a passenger in a wheelchair; and how many will be able to do so by this time in 1988.

Mr. David Mitchell: On 1 October 1987 there were 173 London taxis equipped to carry a wheelchair. The Public Carriage Office has estimated that the number might have doubled by this time next year.

Driving Tests (Basildon)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people in Basildon took driving tests in each of the last three years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Driving test applications are not recorded in a way to make the information available.

Foreign Lorries

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many foreign lorries entered the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department does not collect data on lorries entering the United Kingdom but surveys all vehicles leaving the country by ferry. The figure for foreign lorries over 3·5 tonnes gross weight leaving the country in 1986 was 302,000. The statistics for the first three quarters of 1987 and previous years are contained in the Department's quarterly statistical bulletin—"Road Goods Vehicles on Roll-on Roll-off Ferries to mainland Europe". Copies are in the Library.

Public Transport (LDDC)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to seek to improve public transport services in that part of the London Docklands development corporation area which is in the London borough of Southwark.

Mr. David Mitchell: The provision of public transport services in London is the responsibility of London Regional Transport. The future development of public transport in the docklands and surrounding areas is the subject of a study sponsored jointly by London Regional Transport and the London Docklands development corporation which is expected to be completed shortly.

Rural Transport

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans his Department has to encourage an increase in the availability of transport in rural areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Transport Act 1985 provided bus operators with the freedom to run services to meet customer needs. Local authorities have powers to subsidise socially necessary services which cannot be provided commercially. In addition, the Act introduced two new grants to encourage rural services. The rural transport development fund, administered by the Development Commission has £1 million a year for innovative projects and it has currently not exhausted the funds available this year. So far, 80 such projects have been approved. Rural bus grant, currently worth 5p per mile, is available to operators running services in rural areas.

Motorways

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the installation of photographic equipment on motorways to register the speeds of vehicles and the distances between them.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department and the police already use photographic equipment for research, and surveys of motorway traffic including measuring speeds of vehicles and distances between them. Use of such equipment for enforcement purposes is under consideration as part of the review of road traffic law.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by local highway authority in England (a) the provision for expenditure in the 1987 public expenditure White Paper and (b) the forecast outturn at the time of the Autumn Statement for (i) capital spending on non-trunk roads and car parks in 1987-88 and (ii) current spending on non-trunk road maintenance in 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The 1987 public expenditure White Paper provision in respect of 1987-88 for:

capital expenditure in England on non-trunk roads and parking is £617 million; and current expenditure in England on non-trunk road maintenance is £1,264 million

No breakdown of these plans is made by individual highway authority as individual authorities decide their levels of expenditure and priorities. The information available, at the time of the autumn Economic Statement, on authorities' expenditure in 1987-88 is as follows:

All England £73·556 million.

On the basis of this information the present estimated outturn figure for all highway authorities in England is £47 million for capital expenditure on non-trunk roads and parking. Forecasting methods cannot reliably be used at individual authority level and estimates may change as later data becomes available. Local authorities' budgets for current expenditure on non-trunk road maintenance total £1,117 million but final outturn may differ.

Train Crash (Colwich Junction)

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the progress of the inquiry into the fatal train crash at Colwich junction, Staffordshire, in September 1986 and as to the likely publication date of the report.

Mr. David Mitchell: The inquiry into the collision between two express passenger trains at Colwich junction is nearing completion, but certain technical investigations are still in progress. It is hoped to complete the report early in the new year and then to publish it with the minimum delay.

Docklands Light Railway

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the percentage reliability figures for the Docklands light railway since it has been operated from August.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Docklands light railway is in its first quarter of operation. Indicators of service similar to those available for the London underground will be published in due course.

Woolwich Ferry

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the provision of effective electronic warning signs on major roads leading to the Woolwich ferry indicating whether or not the service is in operation; what consideration he is giving to such installations in view of the present unreliable service; and when he expects to make a decision.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have had two letters from the public. The department has had discussions with Newham and Greenwich. The electronic signs on the north side are out of action. We are considering with Newham the costs of replacing them to see if it is justified. On the south side the cost of providing signs on the large number of approaches would not be justified in normal circumstances. The best way forward is for a solution to be found to the current dispute. This will avoid the need for such signs.

King's Cross Station

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of London Region Transport he will raise with him the question of the cuts in staffing planned for King's Cross station; if he will make it his policy to provide funding for any capital expenditure recommended by the inquiry into the fire at King's Cross as being necessary to prevent a recurrence of the disaster there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my right hon. Friend on 19 November at column 1207.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he has received any communication from the French Government indicating whether French binary chemical weapons will be stored outside France;

(2) if he has had any communication from the United States Government indicating whether the production of United States binary chemical weapons is due to commence;

(3) if he has had any communication from the French Government indicating whether the production of French binary chemical weapons has begun.

Mr. Eggar: We have received no communication from either the United States or French Governments about the production or storage of French binary chemical weapons.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact on the production of new chemical weapons by the United States of America and France of current negotiations at Geneva.

Mr. Eggar: We and all our NATO allies remain committed to a comprehensive and verifiable global ban on chemical weapons. There has been encouraging progress this year in the chemical weapons negotiations at the conference on disarmament in Geneva.

Iran

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the plight of the Baha'i community in Iran; if he will make representations to the Government of Iran on this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The continued persecution of the Baha'i community in Iran remains a cause of grave concern to us.

For the last five years we have co-sponsored the resolution on human rights in Iran at the United Nations Commission on Human Rights (UNCHR). These resolutions urged the Iranian Government to respect the human rights standards set out in the instruments to which they are a party. We will continue to raise the issue of the persecution of the Baha'is and other religious minorities in Iran at every suitable opportunity — bilaterally, in concert with our European partners and at the United Nations.

Uranium

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he has had any recent communication with the French Government over the alleged sale of plutonium and enriched uranium from facilities in the European Economic Community on the black market in Khartoum;

(2) if he has had any recent communications with the Belgian Government over the alleged sale of plutonium and enriched uranium from facilities in the European Economic Community on the black market in Khartoum;

(3) if he has had any recent communication with the West German Government over the alleged sale of plutonium and enriched uranium from nuclear facilities in the European Economic Community on the black market in Khartoum.

Mr. Eggar: This has been discussed in the course of regular official contacts with the French, Belgian and German Governments. These discussions have confirmed our view that there is no evidence to support the allegations that weapons grade nuclear material has been on sale on the black market in Khartoum or elsewhere.

Nuclear Materials

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communication he has had with the Government of the Sudan about civil nuclear materials from European Economic Community countries allegedly illegally sold on the black market in Khartoum.

Mr. Eggar: We have had no direct contact with the Government of Sudan on this matter. However, we understand that there have been contacts between the International Atomic Energy Agency and the Government of Sudan and that the International Atomic Energy Authority has no evidence to confirm the allegation of a black market in weapons grade nuclear material in Khartoum.

"Web of Deception"

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Prime Minister if the book "Web of Deception", written by Mr. Chapman Pincher, was vetted before publication.

The Prime Minister: The manuscript was shown to the Government by the publishers. The Government sought and obtained agreement to certain deletions. The Government also reminded the author's solicitors of the terms of the injunction against certain newspapers restraining publication of material from Mr. Peter Wright. The Government made it clear that they in no way authorised or approved publication of the book or confirmed its contents as true or accurate.

Research and Development

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Prime Minister when the 1987 "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development" will be published.

The Prime Minister: The 1987 "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development", the fifth in the series, will be published through Her Majesty's Stationery Office on Wednesday 25 November. I am arranging for copies to be placed in the House of Commons Library. The annual review, which was introduced to give an overview of Government funded research and development, will inform the work of the strengthened central machinery for establishing science and technology priorities announced in the White Paper, "Civil Research and Development" (Cmnd. 185) in July 1987.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Clamping

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many vehicles were clamped in central London in the first 12 months of the scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Metropolitan police began wheelclamping on 16 May 1983. On 1 December 1986 they contracted out the physical work associated with wheelclamping. The table below shows the number of vehicles wheelclamped by the Metropolitan police in each year up to contracting out, and the number clamped since contracting out was introduced:

Vehicles wheelclamped

Period	Number
1983 (from 16 May)	26,808
1984	44,101
1985	34,810
1986 (up to 30 November)	26,028
1 December 1986 to 8 November 1987	107,709

The City of London police began wheelclamping on 20 October 1986. Between that date and 31 October 1987, 3,202 vehicles were wheelclamped.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the reasons why journalists identified by either a membership and press card issued by the National Union of Journalists or credentials issued by the Metropolitan police are being denied access to the Central Criminal Court during the hearing of the appeal in connection with the Birmingham pub bombings, despite the court not being full; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Arrangements for the admission of journalists to the Central Criminal Court are made by the Commissioner of Police for the City of London in consultation with the court administrator. I understand from the commissioner that journalists who possess either press passes validated by the police or letters of authority from their editors are able to gain access to the Central Criminal Court.

Crime (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the crime detection rate for each year since 1979 in the Leeds metropolitan district council area.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The statistics which are collected centrally on notifiable offences recorded and cleared up relate to entire police force areas, and are published in "Criminal Statistics England and Wales" (tables 2.18 and 2.19 of the issue for 1986, Cm. 233) copies of which are in the Library. The clear-up rate in West Yorkshire was 38 per cent. in 1986.

Nuclear Power Plants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has undertaken any research or commissioned an outside body to do research on the civil defence implications of an attack made on civil nuclear power plants or reprocessing plants in the United Kingdom by terrorists or in wartime.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Plans exist for the security of these installations in peace and war.

Soliciting

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there have been changes in the patterns of cautioning and sentencing for soliciting since 1982; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: The Criminal Justice Act 1982 removed imprisonment as a penalty for soliciting. Between 1982 and 1986, the total number proceeded against or cautioned remained much the same. A fall in the number of cautions from 7,900 in 1982 to 4,900 in 1986, was offset by an increase in the number of prosecutions from 6,100 to 9,400. In 1982, 190 offenders were sentenced to immediate imprisonment and 80 committed in default of payment of a fine. In 1986, 210 offenders were committed for fine default. The use of probation or supervision orders has fallen by 74 per cent.

AIDS

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in view of anxiety over the spread of AIDS and the Government's pronouncements, he proposes to ensure there is an ample supply of condoms in Her Majesty's prisons.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans to do so.

Michael Ryan (Firearms)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to what firearms the late Michael Ryan possessed prior to obtaining a firearms certificate;

(2) if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley on all firearms or traces of firearms that were found near the home of the late Michael Ryan at Hungerford, on or after 19 August.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 20 November 1987]: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to (a) the time that the first report of an armed offender in Hungerford on 19 August was received by the police, (b) the time that armed officers were called to the scene, (c) the location and activity of each of the groups of armed police at the time of the call, (d) the places from which armed police drew firearms prior to attending the scene, (e) the time of arrival of each police officer at the scene and the places to which they were deployed, (f) the time at which armed police officers from other forces were offered for use, and their deployment, (g) the time at which the late Michael Ryan is known to have ceased shooting at members of the public and (h) the time of arrival and deployment of unarmed police and the effect they had in containing the situation.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 20 November 1987]: I understand that the chief constable of the Thames Valley police will be submitting a full report on the incident to his police authority meeting on 27 November, that it will answer most if not all of the questions raised by the hon. Member and that it will be made publicly available. I will ensure that copies are placed in the Library.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to details of inquiries made by or on his behalf before a firearms certificate was issued to the late Michael Ryan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 20 November 1987]: I understand from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police that the inquiries carried out prior to the issue of the certificate were in accordance with normal police practice.

"Holocaust News"

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take action against the publishers of an alleged historical journal called "Holocaust News" under the Race Relations Act; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply.

The publication has been examined by the Director of Public Prosecutions, and he has concluded that it does not, in his view, contravene the law.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

David Baveghens

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Attorney-General why the Crown Prosecution Service dropped the case against David Baveghens, who was subsequently convicted in a private prosecution; and if he will make a statement.

The Solicitor-General [pursuant to his reply, 3 November 1987, c. 621]: The Director of Public Prosecutions has today issued the following statement:

"It is plain that the CPS can only prosecute on the basis of the evidence supplied by the police.

On 27th October, Donald Baveghens was found guilty at Wimbledon Magistrates' Court and remanded on bail until today. On 28th October, certain remarks attributed to the Police Federation and to the Chairman of its Metropolitan Police Branch were reported in the Press. I have refrained from responding whilst the matter has remained sub judice. I would now like to draw attention to the following facts.

On 20th February 1987, Baveghens appeared before Wimbledon Magistrates' Court, charged with a number of offences including assault occasioning actual bodily harm on PC Prescott, committed on 12th February.

The papers that were subsequently submitted to the Crown Prosecution Service included a statement from PC Prescott, dated 14th March. The evidence contained in that statement was not sufficient to support the charge of assault that had been preferred. The senior representative of the CPS dealing with the matter spoke on a number of occasions to the Police, pointing out the defects in the evidence. Following an indication that Baveghens intended to contest the charge of assault, a written memorandum was sent to the Police on the 14th April, indicating the weaknesses in the evidence that was then available and stating in terms that if no further evidence was forthcoming, the charge would be withdrawn on 21st April when the defendant was next due to appear before the court.

The following day, 15th April, a senior police officer attended the CPS offices and discussed the matter in detail with the CPS representative. Again, the defects in the evidence were pointed out.

By the 21st April, no further evidence had been supplied to the CPS and the charge was accordingly withdrawn.

Thereafter, PC Prescott commenced a private prosecution, by a summons issued on 15th May. On 18th May the CPS was provided with a copy of a further fuller statement from PC Prescott. This statement was dated 21st April, the day on which the charge had been withdrawn.

The CPS utterly condemns any assault on a police officer particularly where injury is caused, and is determined to take the appropriate action in any such case. To suggest that the CPS pursues a policy of not prosecuting in such cases is wholly without foundation but this case illustrates vividly how vital it is that the CPS be furnished in proper time with the evidence that is required to support criminal proceedings."

I have considered the circumstances of this case carefully. I am satisfied that, despite repeated requests, the evidence made available by the police to the Crown Prosecution Service on 21 April was not sufficient to support the charge preferred, and that the decision to withdraw it was correct.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the total wage bill for the electricity supply industry for each year since 1975.

Mr. Parkinson: Total staff costs of the electricity supply industry in England and Wales in each year since 1975-76 were as follows:

	£ million
1975-76	670·4
1976-77	728·9
1977-78	777·7
1978-79	931·8
1979-80	1,125·0
1980-81	1,420·8
1981-82	1,616·4
1982-83	1,642·5
1983-84	1,726·2
1984-85	1,754·5
1986-87	1,958·7

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the financial obligations of the Central Electricity Generating Board arising from the 1975 White Paper; and what additional non-statutory financial obligations have been placed on the board since that date.

Mr. Parkinson: The policy set out in the 1978 White Paper on nationalised industries was that industries should be set financial targets supplemented by a cash limit on external financing requirements for the current financial year and the publication of key performance indicators. In relation to future performance, industries should publish suitable performance aims. The current financial target set for the CEGB is an average return of 2·7 per cent. on average net assets (calculated on a current cost basis) for the three years ending 31 March 1988. The CEGB contributes to the performance aim and external financing repayment which are agreed with the ESI for the industry as a whole.

No additional non-statutory financial obligations have been placed on the CEGB.

Nuclear Accidents

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had about contingency plans in the event of an accident from a nuclear power station with elected representatives of local authority associations; when they took place; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My officials have held extensive consultations with local authority officials and members of the emergency services, as part of the review of nuclear emergency planning announced by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 18 December, at columns 612-13 and 30 June, at columns 65-67. My right hon. Friend Lord Belstead met elected representatives of the local authority associations on 22 September to discuss the arrangements for the establishment of a national monitoring network to cater for the consequences of a nuclear accident occuring either overseas or within the United Kingdom.

TRANSPORT

M62 (Detour)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce the detour for traffic using the M62 between south Yorkshire and Greater Manchester.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A study has just been completed into the feasibility of providing a new link road from the M1 south of Wakefield to the M62 east of Huddersfield. We are at present considering the results.

It is too early to predict the outcome. If we can identify an economically viable scheme it will be considered for inclusion in the next review of the national roads programme.

MOT Tests

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will take steps to link garages licensed to administer the MOT test to the driver and vehicle licensing centre at Swansea;

(2) if he will amend the conditions attached to MOT certificates so that they (a) show mileage, (b) are displayed on the vehicle, (c) accommodate 10 years of embossed garage stamps and (d) are recorded at the driver and vehicle licensing centre.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: MOT certificates already show mileage. A certificate must be produced to obtain a vehicle excise licence at each subsequent licensing after a test has first become due. Licences are displayed on vehicles. I shall consider my hon. Friend's suggestions in the context of my discussions next month with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs, the Director General of Fair Trading and others.

Mileage Clocking Fraud

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to seek to reduce mileage clocking fraud.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Mileage clocking fraud is a long-standing problem. There is no easy solution. It is one of a number of problems in the motor trade which I will be discussing next month with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate and Consumer Affairs, The Director General of Fair Trading and others.

Commissioners for Irish Lights

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sums have been paid in the last two years by his Department to the Commissioners for Irish Lights to assist them in meeting redundancy payments.

Mr. David Mitchell: The commissioners' costs are met not by my Department, but by the General Lighthouse Fund, with my right hon. Friend's consent. No payments in respect of redundancy were made in 1985-86 or 1986-87, but IR £59,270 have been paid in the current financial year so far.

Uttoxeter Bypass

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when an announcement can be expected as to whether Staffordshire county council's application for transport supplementary grant for the Uttoxeter bypass, due to start construction in the financial year 1990-91, has been successful.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We hope to announce details of the 1988-89 transport supplementary grant settlement shortly.

M1-A1 Link

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, following the publication of his decision on the proposed M1-A1 link, he now proposes to fund a study into the implications of the M1-A1 link for traffic in east and central Leeds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's recent study of the traffic problems on the road network to the east of Leeds has provided us with the information that we need to formulate proposals for future truck road schemes in that area.

Docklands Light Railway

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library (a) the original contract and (b) all subsequent contractual agreements between London Regional Transport and Mowlem/GEC in respect of the docklands light railway.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. this is a matter of commerical confidentiality between London Regional Transport and GEC/Mowlem.

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much profit has been made on the operation of the docklands light railway to date; and on what it has been spent.

Mr. David Mitchell: The docklands light railway is forecast to make a small operating loss in this its first year of operation.

Bridges

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his proposals for the strengthening of older bridges.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The comprehensive programme for the rehabilitation of bridges on motorways and all-purpose trunk roads will include the assessment and strengthening of older bridges to ensure that they can safely carry modern heavy lorries for the foreseeable future. We repeat the assurances previously given that unless Parliament so decides there will be no increase in the maximum weight of lorries allowed into this country. We could not do this in any case until our roads and bridges could carry the loads. We are proposing a 15-year programme and the most cost effective way of proceeding is to provide for strengthening to cope with lorries up to the EC weight limits of 40 tonnes overall weight and 11·5 tonne axle weights rather than the 38 tonne and 10·5 tonnes, our present limits, which should have no more than a marginal effect on the rehabilitation programme.

We shall be holding discussions with owners of bridges off the national road system to follow up their comments on the results of the bridge census and sample survey which was published in the spring.

Dock Labour Scheme

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the profit or loss incurred by the dock labour scheme in each port where it is in operation for each year since its inception.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 9 November 1987]: I have been asked to reply.

Full information of the type requested is not available without a disproportionate use of time and effort. I have given figures for five of the major ports in the country for selected years since 1970. These are all statutory harbour authorities falling within the scope of the dock labour scheme.

Dock labour scheme ports profit and loss—1970-85

	1970 £	1975 £	1980 £	1985 £

WALES

Classical Studies

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many maintained secondary schools in each local education authority area in Wales teach Latin;

(2) how many maintained secondary schools in each local education authority area in Wales teach classical studies.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Figures are not available in the form requested. Information obtained from the 1984 secondary school staffing survey, however, indicates that the following numbers of maintained secondary schools taught a classical language and/or classical studies respectively:

	Classical languages	Classical studies
Clwyd	4	1
Dyfed	15	7
Gwent	21	9
Gwynedd	9	8
Mid Glamorgan	17	8
Powys	5	2
South Glamorgan	9	4
West Glamorgan	13	6

Rating Reform

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if, pursuant to his reply of 2 November, at columns 521-3, regarding households gaining and losing with full replacement of domestic rates by the community charge, he will give figures of the estimated amount of money gained by gainers and lost by losers.

Mr. Peter Walker: It is estimated that both gains and losses from the full introduction of the community charge would each amount to £42 million, net of rebates.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what level of community charge would need to be levied in each district of Wales to produce the equivalent revenue to that currently raised by rates.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the estimates of "Community charges including safety net" contained in my answer to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 24 July at columns 643-44.

Schools (Expenditure)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the capital allocation for expenditure on schools in 1987-88 made by his Department to each local education authority in Wales;

(2) what was the bid made by each Welsh local education authority to his Department for a capital allocation for expenditure on schools for 1987-88.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Under the system introduced in 1985-86, local authorities receive a formula-based capital allocation covering most of their services, including education. They no longer make bids for these services, nor are individual service elements of the allocation identifiable.

Planning (Welsh Language)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what guidance his Department has offered to local planning authorities on when they may consider the Welsh language as a factor in decisions relating to planning permission;

(2) to what extent, in deciding on appeals against decisions of local planning authorities, he considers the Welsh language as a factor relating to his decisions.

Mr. Grist: No formal guidance has been given but local planning authorities are aware that it is a requirement on them when considering planning applications and on my right hon. Friend and his inspectors in considering planning appeals that they have regard to all material considerations. Policies which relate to the character and way of life of a community, including the needs and interests of the Welsh language, may properly be among those considerations.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether any of the appeals which he has allowed against local planning authorities decisions to refuse planning permission involved decisions which had originally included the needs and interests of the Welsh language amongst the provisions of considerations material to the decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: This information could not be made available except at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will make it his policy to require local planning authorities to include the needs and interests of the Welsh language within the provisions of their development plans and local plans.

Mr. Grist: The protection of the character and way of life of communities is a proper aim of statutory planning, and language can be a component of that aim. My right hon. Friend has already advised local planning authorities that, in preparing both structure and local plans, authorities will wish to consider the relationship of planning policies and proposals to social needs and problems, including their likely impact on different groups in the population.

Regional Aid

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total expenditure on regional aid to industry in Wales, in each differing category of aid and in each financial year since 1978-79 both at current and outturn prices.

Mr. Peter Walker: Expenditure on regional selective assistance, and regional development grants, for the financial years 1978-79 to 1986-87 at outturn and constant prices is as follows:

£ million

	Outturn Prices			Constant 1986-87 Prices
	RSA	RDG	Total	RSA	RDG	Total
1978-79	30·3	71·5	101·8	59·0	139·1	198·1
1979-80	18·8	50·7	69·5	31·3	84·4	115·7
1980-81	10·7	103·5	114·2	15·0	145·3	160·3
1981-82	9·2	122·2	131·4	11·8	156·3	168·1

1983-84	18·2	72·1	90·3	20·7	82·2	102·9
1984-85	25·1	92·7	117·8	27·4	101·2	128·6
1985-86	28·0	84·4	112·4	28·8	86·9	115·7
1986-87	35·6	88·7	124·3	35·6	88·7	124·3

Education Reform

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will arrange for copies of all responses to the consultation documents on grant maintained schools, admission of pupils to maintained schools and financial delegation to schools to be deposited in the Library.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I am arranging for copies of the responses from organisations to these consultation documents to be deposited in the Library of the House as soon as possible.

Welsh Plant Breeding Station

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to visit the Welsh plant breeding farm at Gogerddan during the next six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I hope to visit the Welsh plant breeding station at Gogerddan and the experimental husbandry farm at Trawsgoed in the near future.

Redundancies

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many companies have notified him of redundancies in Wales since June 1979; and what is the total number of jobs lost.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 23 November 1987]: Information on the number of companies notifying redundancies is not collected centrally.

There were 52,413 redundancies notified to the Manpower Services Commission between June 1979 and December 1980. Since the latter date, when the basis for collecting the figures changed, notifications have been as shown in the following table:

	Number
1981	36,432
1982	24,647
1983	16,041
1984	11,441
1985	15,027
1986	11,357
[1]1987	3,259
Total	118,204

[1] to September.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Flood Damage (Coal Stockpile)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how the stockpile of coal donated to help those who suffered flood damage in Northern Ireland on 21 and 22 October will be distributed; to whom; and to what areas.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The stockpile of coal, so generously donated by British Coal, has now all been distributed to each household directly affected by the flooding within the Omagh urban and the Strabane district council areas. The coal was distributed by three voluntary organisations — the Society of St. Vincent de Paul, Age Concern and the British Red Cross —and the work was co-ordinated jointly by the Western Health and Social Services Board and the Omagh and Strabane district councils.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Research Assistants

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Lord Privy Seal whether he will take steps to ensure that all research assistants employed by hon. Members register any research work or thesis preparation which they are pursuing alongside their duties to hon. Members, on behalf of or in pursuit of, their studies at an educational establishment or university.

Mr. Wakeham: My right hon. Friend will be aware that the resolution of the House of 17 December 1985 in respect of research assistants required the registration of only "any relevant gainful occupation". Any extension of this requirement would need to be considered by the Select Committee on Members' Interests and agreed to by the House.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Free School Meals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the total number of children receiving free school meals in each year since 1983; and if he will estimate the number of children receiving free school meals after the Social Security Act is implemented.

Mr. Dunn: The information requested on the take-up of free shcool meals in England since 1983 is available in the "Annual School Meals Census", reports on which are available in the Library. Information was not collected in 1985 because of the teachers' dispute.

The estimated number of children in England expected to receive free meals on implementation of the Social Security Act 1986, when it comes into force in April 1988, is about 800,000.

Micro-computers

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many micro-computers are estimated to be in (a) schools and (b) prisons for prison education purposes; at what cost to his Deprtment; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There are some 112,000 micro-computers in educational use in maintained primary, middle and secondary schools in England. These have been funded from a variety of sources; there have been no direct costs to this Department. In 1988-89 the Department will make grants in support of £8·5 million of expenditure by LEAs on micro-computer systems for use in schools.

Education in prisons is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Special Education Needs

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what guidelines his Department issues in regard to the making of statements under section 7 of the Education Act 1981.

Mr. Dunn: Guidance on the making of statements of special educational need is contained in DES circular 1/83, which contains advice on aspects of the Education Act 1981 and on the Education (Special Educational Needs) Regulations 1983.

Conductive Education

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will provide local education authorities with a summary of the reasons why his Department has given £326,000 for research that will evaluate conductive education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. The Department is providing the grant in the hope that the research will provide a clear understanding of the effectiveness of conductive education, as well as monitoring how well it transposes from Hungary to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local education authorities have approached him for advice on the value of conductive education; and what was his response.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no record of any such approach from a local education authority.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has given local education authorities about conductive education.

Mr. Dunn: None. I shall keep in mind the need for guidance to be given to local education authorities, although it may be necessary to await the outcome of Birmingham university's research evaluation.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what advice he has gained from Her Majesty's inspectors of education regarding the value of conductive education; and what information he has as to whether any of the inspectors giving advice had invited the Peto Institute in Hungary.

Mr. Dunn: It is not the practice to publish the advice given by Her Majesty's inspectorate to my right hon. Friend on particular issues; no member of the inspectorate has visited the Peto institute.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will request those external to his Department who have advised him on the value of conductive education to inform the Foundation for Conductive Education of their ideas;

(2) which people or organisations, external to his Department, have provided him with advice about the value of conductive education; and if he will indicate in each case what information he has as to whether the source of the advice had visited the Peto institute in Budapest.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has not sought advice from any sources outside central Government. Several people have written to the Department in support of conductive education, including some who have visited the Peto institute.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that the Birmingham project providing conductive education on an experimental basis will have the resources which, in preparation to the number of children involved, will match those provided by the Hungarian Government for conductive education in Hungary, so that the success of the method in Britain relative to Hungary may be effectively researched.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is providing £326,000 to enable Birmingham university to carry out a research evaluation of the Birmingham project; it would not be appropriate for the Department to be involved both in the experimental project and in its evaluation.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department will call a one-day conference for experts and interested observers, for the purpose of presenting research papers and discussing the value of conductive education.

Mr. Dunn: Not at present. Such a conference might be of value when some conclusions are available from the National Foundation's conductive education project in Birmingham, and from the evaluation which the University of Birmingham is undertaking.

Teacher Training

Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to amend the arrangements and criteria for the approval of courses of initial teacher training set out in his Department's circular 3/84.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Courses of initial teacher training are currently being reviewed against the published criteria by the Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education. With the agreement of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and for Wales I have recently extended the term of appointment of the members of the council to the end of 1989. I am grateful to the chairman and members of the council for their work to date and for agreeing to continue to serve.

I intend before the end of the lifetime of the present council to review the criteria for the approval of courses set out in circular 3/84 in the light of the council's experience and advice, and to consider also what should be the future arrangements for the review and approval of courses of initial teacher training. I shall initiate consultations for these purposes at the appropriate time.

In the meantime, however, I am concerned that the criteria should present no barrier to the widest possible recruitment of suitable candidates to initial training. In this context, the requirement that at least 75 per cent. of the students entering any course of initial teacher training should possess the normal academic qualifications for entry to a degree course—defined in circular 3/84 in terms of A-levels or the equivalent—may not take sufficient account of the variety of routes to higher education that are now generally recognised, including in particular the greater use of vocational qualifications and the development of "access" courses, to which the White Paper "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm.114) drew attention earlier this year. I am, therefore, telling the council that pending the general review of the criteria referred to above I shall be prepared to consider recommendations from it for the approval of courses of initial teacher training that do not comply with the requirement described above, where the council is satisfied that the course in question is nevertheless of the high quality required. I shall then take account of the experience of such cases when I review the criteria.

DEFENCE

Burghfield

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state in relation to his Department's establishment at Burghfield, Berkshire (a) its purpose, (b) its Ordnance Survey map reference, (c) the number of people employed, and (d) the safety arrangements in operation for the protection of both workers and people living around it.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Atomic Weapons Establishment (AWE) Burghfield is involved in the British nuclear weapons procurement programme. Its Ordnance Survey reference is SU675680. For reasons of national security, it is not our policy to disclose either the number of staff employed at the site or the safety arrangements in operation. I can, however, assure the hon. Gentleman that rigorous health and safety arrangements exist to protect both employees at the establishment and members of the public.

Radiation

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he intends to institute changes in working practices at AWE Aldermaston and AWE Burghfield as a result of the National Radiological Protection Board report "Interim Guidance on the Implications of Recent Revisions of Risk Estimates"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 23 October 1987]: Prudent management in the design of facilities and in the formulation of operating procedures at AWE Aldermaston and AWE Burghfield means that the National Radiological Protection Board interim guidance is met already.

Consequently, although safety policy is the subject of continuous review, on this occasion no immediate changes in working practices are planned.

Submariners

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average amount of time that submariners spend at sea each year.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 20 October 1987]: When serving in an operational submarine a man spends on average five and a half months of the year at sea.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Falklands

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of the Overseas Development Administration budget in 1986-87 was attributable to expenditure on the Falklands.

Mr. Chris Patten: The proportion of the gross aid programme in 1986-87 attributable to expenditure to the Falkland Islands was 0·8 per cent. The gross aid programme includes aid to countries and national and international institutions.

Sugar Production

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of his aid budget is currently used to help Third world countries diversify their agriculture away from sugar production.

Mr. Chris Patten: Aid statistics are not collated on a basis which would enable aid for diversification from sugar, in particular, to be identified. Bilateral project aid for the natural resources sector as a whole has increased by 75 per cent. over the last five years. This is designed to enhance production on the basis of developing countries' comparative advantage.

European Development Fund

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek to obtain the agreement of the other member states of the EEC to convert past aid loans from the European development fund to the poorest countries into grants.

Mr. Chris Patten: Aid from the European development fund to the poorest countries has been provided almost wholly in the form of grants, not loans. Conversion into grants would not therefore be helpful to these countries. However, the EC Development Council agreed on 9 November 1987 that over the next two years receipts of interest and capital up to a level of 60 million ecu (about £42 million) on past EDF loans that would otherwise have been credited to the member states will instead be provided as grants to the poorest and most indebted countries in sub-Saharan Africa which are pursuing appropriate economic adjustment policies. The Council also agreed that other EDF funds should be provided for the same purpose.

EMPLOYMENT

British Tourist Authority

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met the chairman of the British Tourist Authority, and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Fowler: I last met the chairman of the British Tourist Authority on 22 July. My hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for Tourism last me him in this capacity on 9 September. Similar topics were discussed on both occasions. I stressed the Government's commitment to the tourism industry and listened with interest to the views of both the chairman and the board of the authority on the problems and opportunities facing the industry.

Community Programme

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many entrants to the community programme since 1 October have been (a) unemployed for 12 months or more, (b) unemployed for two years or more, (c) under 25 years, (d) aged 25 to 50 years and (e) over 50 years.

Mr. Lee: Information on the characteristics of entrants to the community programme since 1 October 1987 is not yet available.

Disabled People

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available on the number and proportion of disabled workers employed by individual firms.

Mr. Lee: Information supplied by individual firms about the number and proportion of registered disabled workers they employ has been treated by successive Governments as confidential and is not disclosed without their agreement.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how the proposed changes to the community programme will allow disabled people to gain maximum benefit from the opportunities which the community programme offers.

Mr. Lee: Project-based provision will be included within the new training programme for unemployed adults announced on 18 November. The Manpower Services Commission has been asked to provide detailed proposals for the programme's operation and this should include proposals for disabled people.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details of the average weekly net pay for workers employed in sheltered workshops, and the average weekly net pay for workers employed on the sheltered placement scheme.

Mr. Lee: Comprehensive statistical information is not available. A sample survey of wages paid in April 1986 suggested that the average net weekly pay of people with severe disabilities employed in sheltered workshops was £67, and £62 for those employed under the sheltered placement schemes.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many disabled people are currently registered as unemployed.

Mr. Lee: There were 21,429 unemployed registered disabled people in Great Britain registered for employment at jobcentres on 2 October 1987. The number of registered disabled people who are unemployed claimants at unemployment benefit offices is not available.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will set out the annual flows (a) on to and (b) off the unemployment register (excluding school leavers) in each calendar year since 1980; and if he will also give these figures for each standard region of Britain.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information. The table shows for each region of Great Britain the annual flows in to and out of the unemployed count, excluding school leavers, for each year since 1983. This information is based on the count of unemployed claimants and is available only from October 1982.

Annual totals, excluding school leavers[1]

Great Britain	4,165,562	3,992,229	4,300,808	4,621,069

Note—The figures are not fully comparable over the periods shown due to changes in coverage. In particular, the outflows in 1983 were affected by the provisions of the 1983 Budget which meant that many older men no longer needed to sign on in order to get their benefits.

[1] School leavers are those under 18 years of age who have not entered employment since completing full time education. These flow figures do not balance with the changes in total adult unemployment. This is because the latter are also affected by unemployed school leavers who reach the age of 18 and are then classified as adults.

Librarians

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek powers to instigate a programme of positive discrimination to increase the number of women holding the position of chief librarian.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Employers in the library service, as in other areas of employment, are bound by the Sex Discrimination Act 1975 to afford equal opportunities to women and men. If women take advantage of the opportunities available to them there is no reason why more should not progress to hold the post of chief librarian, when such posts fall vacant.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will establish guidelines to ensure equal opportunities for women as chief librarians.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The Sex Discrimination and Equal Pay Acts already provide a comprehensive legislative framework for the elimination of sex descrimination and the promotion of equal opportunities, including in the employment field. If any woman feels that she has been unlawfully discriminated against, she has the right to seek redress by making a complaint to an industrial tribunal.

The Government commend to all employers, including those in the library service, the sensible practical advice contained in the Equal Opportunities Commission's code of practice on employment.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to monitor the workings of the Equal Opportunities Act to ensure that there is a positive attempt to equate the sexes in the library services.

Mr. Nicholls: Sex discrimination in employment is unlawful under the Sex Discrimination and Equal Pay Acts. The Government already monitor the general working of these Acts. In addition, the Equal Opportunities Commission has a statutory responsibility for advising the Government on the working of the Acts.

Hotels

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the number of hotel rooms which have been lost to the tourist industry by their use as housing for homeless persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: No statistics are available on the number of hotel rooms which have ceased to accommodate tourists. The London tourist board has, however, drawn my attention to the problems experienced by tourists in finding suitable accommodation in London in the budget price range. The board has also expressed concern about the number of hotel rooms being occupied by homeless families.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the revenue lost to the tourist industry as a result of hotel rooms being used to house homeless persons.

Mr. Lee: I have no information on what revenue could have been lost.

Benefit Premium Scheme

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give details regarding the new benefit premium scheme to be introduced for community programme workers; and which benefits will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Lee: The community programme and other adult training programmes are being brought into a new training programme for long-term unemployed people. The Manpower Services Commission has been asked for detailed proposals for the programme's operation.

Restart Scheme

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to monitor how many unemployed people undergoing a restart interview thereby secure full-time employment.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The aim of the restart interview is to help unemployed people into employment by selecting the best way open to them from a wide range of employment, and job search opportunities available.

It is not possible to say how many of those people interviewed ultimately find full-time jobs, since we do not follow up every participant.

ENVIRONMENT

Listed Building Control

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to put before the House the order relating to limiting the ecclesiastical exemption from listed building controls.

Mr. Moynihan: Work is in hand on drafting an order following agreements reached with Church bodies last year during the passage of the Housing and Planning Act 1986. Some further consultation on the details may be necessary before the order can be laid.

Agricultural Tenancies

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals for amending legislation on agricultural tenancies.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our proposals on agricultural tenancies are contained in the Housing Bill which received its First Reading on 19 November. The Bill provides that future tenancies granted to agricultural workers would generally be assured agricultural occupancies on terms similar to other new-style assured tenancies, and with similar statutory protection. The grounds for possession from an assured agricultural occupant would be broadly the same as those for an assured tenant. In addition, where a farmer wished to regain possession of his property from an assured agricultural occupant to house an incoming worker, the services of the Agricultural Dwelling House Advisory Committee could be used. Existing tenants whose tenancies are governed by the Rent (Agriculture) Act 1976 will continue to enjoy the protection of that Act.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has sent to the national campaign for the homeless in relation to its representations to him about rental purchase tenure in the north of England.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have arranged for copies of the response to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Sports Council

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Sports Council facilities have been taken over by charitable trusts in the last 12 months.

Mr. Moynihan: One. The sale of the national sailing centre at Cowes to the Lister Charitable Trust was completed recently, following the Sports Council's review of the management of the national sports centres. The trust now operates a sailing school at the centre.

Rateable Values

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list those purposes for which rateable values of domestic property are used other than for raising revenue.

Mr. Howard: As part of the preparation for the forthcoming rate reform legislation, a large number of statutory references to rateable value have been identified which are not primarily related to local government finance. It is intended to provide for the amendment of those provisions either in the forthcoming legislation or other appropriate legislation. If my right hon. Friend has a particular concern, perhaps he would write to me.

Stud Farms

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce his decision on the rating of stud farms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend hopes to announce his decision shortly.

East Deane Local Plan

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to appoint an inspector in respect of the East Deane local plan.

Mrs. Roe: The Secretary of State for the Environment has now appointed an inspector to hold a public local inquiry into the East Deane local plan. The inquiry will open at 10 am on Wednesday 3 February 1988 at the principal committee room, Deane house, Belvedere road, Taunton.

Moorland

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations from the Exmoor Society, the Open Spaces Society, or any other bodies connected with the environment, planning or farming, regarding the planning laws on applications to cultivate areas of moorland within national park boundaries.

Mr. Moynihan: Conversion of moorland for agricultural purposes is not normally subject to planning control but various bodies have responded to the Government's consultative proposals for landscape conservation orders.

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, as part of his Department's policy on the diversification of land uses, he has given or expects to give guidance to planning authorities regarding their response to applications to cultivate moorland within national park boundaries.

Mr. Moynihan: I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Councillors

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to end the practice whereby councillors disbarred from holding public office as councillors are permitted to hold office as members of valuation panels and to hear rating appeals.

Mr. Chope: This is one of the issues that we shall be considering, in consultation with interested bodies, in framing the regulations governing the proposed valuation and community charge tribunals.

Rating Reform

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the average poll tax bill in England and Wales that is likely to be faced by a young single person with an annual income of £2,500.

Mr. Howard: Without comprehensive knowledge of the person's circumstances which would govern their entitlement to rebate, it is not possible to say.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 12 November, Official Report, column 190, he will seek the permission of organisations which gave written support to the introduction of the poll tax to list their names and addresses.

Mr. Howard: No. The names of the organisations that responded to the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) are listed in the summary placed in the Library on 15 December 1986, should the hon. Member wish to approach them directly.

Housing

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many persons were (a) in local authority funded bed-and-breakfast accommodation and (b) on local authority waiting lists for housing in each of the districts in Somerset, Devon, Cornwall, Dorset, Wiltshire and Gloucestershire, on 31 March 1983, 1985 and 1987.

Mrs. Roe: Local authorities report the numbers of households that they have temporarily placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation under the homeless provisions of the Housing Acts: most of these households will have at least part of their costs met either by the authorities or by the Department of Health and Social Security. Figures for the end of June 1983, March 1985 and March 1987 appear in table 9 in issues No. 68, 75 and 82, respectively, of "Local Housing Statistics", which are available in the Library.

The numbers of households on the housing waiting list at 1 April were reported in local authorities' housing investment programme returns and the figures appear in column B51 of the "HIP 1 (1987) All items print": the figures for April 1985 can be derived from the numbers at April 1986 and the changes since 1985 which appear in columns B51 and B53 of the "HIP 1 (1986) All items print": both these documents are available in the Library. Information for earlier years was not collected centrally.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest number of houses in need of urgent repair in Leeds West; and what are the corresponding figures for each year since 1979.

Mrs. Roe: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of people on housing waiting lists in each district authority area in Yorkshire, for each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mrs. Roe: The number of households on waiting lists at 1 April 1986 and 1 April 1987 was provided by local authorities in their housing investment programme returns; the figures appear in column B51 of the "HIP 1 All items print" for 1986 and 1987 which are in the Library. Figures for 1 April 1985 may also be derived from the 1986 return; column B52 of the "All items print" gives the change in the number of households on the waiting list since 1 April 1985. Information for earlier years is not available centrally.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the figures for house building by public and private sectors in (a) Yorkshire as a whole and (b) Leeds metropolitan district council for each year from 1979 to the latest available date.

Mrs. Roe: Public and private sector housebuilding starts in the Yorkshire and Humberside region for the years 1979 to 1986 appear in table 6.4 of "Housing and construction Statistics 1976-1986" and figures for the first half of 1987 are in table 1.3 of the quarterly "Housing and construction Statistics" No. 30.

Annual figures for Leeds appear in the following issues of "Local Housing Statistics":

Year	Issue Number	Table Number
1979	53	4
1980-83	73	1

Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Some 221 public and 746 private starts and 299 public and 731 private completions were reported for the first half of this year.

Local Government

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will place in the Library examples of the type of material of a party political nature, in breach of the code of practice in the Local Government Act 1986, which he intends to prohibit by means of the Local Government Bill currently before the House.

Mr. Howard: Local authorities are prohibited, by virtue of section 2 of the Local Government Act 1986, from publishing any material which, in whole or in part, appears to be designed to affect public support for a political party. The code of recommended practice to be issued under section 4 of the Act will be concerned with publicity material a local authority is permitted to issue; it will set out principles of good practice which local authorities will (if Parliament approves the Local Government Bill) have to have regard to in all their publicity decisions.

Rate Rebates

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 16 November, what data from the family expenditure survey and what formula were used to calculate the estimates given relating to poorer households and rate rebates.

Mr. Howard: The estimates are produced by a computer-based tax and benefit model developed by the Institute of Fiscal Studies which analyses separately information from the family expenditure survey for each of 28,750 households. The hon. Member may like to approach the institute for a copy of its working paper 58/87, "The IFS Tax and Benefit Model", which describes main features of the model.

Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many prosecutions have been taken for pollution incidents in rivers as a result of agricultural activities in 1986 and so far in 1987.

Mr. Moynihan: A report published by the Water Authorities Association in August this year, "Water Pollution from Farm Waste 1986: England and Wales", indicated that 128 prosecutions were brought in 1986 in respect of farm pollution incidents. A copy of this report is lodged in the Library of the House. Figures are not yet available for 1987.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has recently commissioned research into alternative methods of sewage sludge disposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Yes. The Department does commission research directed to safer sludge treatment and disposal. Current research projects in this category are:

The effects of sludge applications on the long-term structure and fertility of soils.

Investigation of techniques for the removal of pathogens from sludge.

Appraisal of full-scale sludge treatment processes for the destruction of pathogens in sludge.

The effects of heavy sludge applications on prominent grassland.

The effects of pH variation on the uptake of metals by different crops grown on sludge-amended soils.

Effects of sea disposal of sludge on the concentration of contaminants in sediments, benthic fauna and crustaceans.

Study of the cycling of sludge particles in the marine food chain.

The mobility of organic compounds in sludge applied to agricultural soils and their rate of uptake by crops.

Study of the growth of algae in coastal waters close to a site for sea disposal of sludge.

Grant-related Expenditure Assessment

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) on what basis the GREA formula factor for domestic refuse collection in widely scattered rural areas is calculated to equalise needs as compared with urban areas with less unproductive journey time per collection;

(2) what is the nature of the extra domestic refuse collection cost in urban areas, which the net daily population inflow factor in the GREA formula is intended to reflect.

Mr. Chope: The main determinant of the GRE for refuse collection is the number of domestic premises in an authority's area. Commercial and industrial premises are not counted since authorities are assumed to cover the cost of collecting trade refuse by charging. Allowance is made for additional costs in rural areas by including the size of an authority's area in the GRE formula. Similarly, allowance is made for additional costs in urban areas by using a density of population factor. In addition, people who work in a different authority from their area of residence are assumed to increase the need for domestic refuse collection in both areas.

The relative importance of each of these factors is determined through regression analysis of the actual costs of refuse collection by each local authority.

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether regression analysis is employed to calculate existing costs as between rural and urban areas, for the purpose of fixing GREA multipliers.

Mr. Chope: Regression analysis is used to determine a number of GRE components. Many of them allow for higher costs in some rural areas through the use of sparsity of population factors, and for higher costs in some urban areas through population density factors. Details are given in the publication "Grant Related Expenditure 1987/88", a copy of which is in the Library.

Urban Programme

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the urban programme and the derelict land reclamation programme achieved in 1986-87; and what steps have been taken to improve their operation and performance.

Mr. Trippier: Copies of reports on the operation and achievements of the urban programme and the derelict land reclamation programme in England in 1986-87 have been placed in the Library of the House. The two reports describe how the resources available under each programme were used, explain recent improvements in management and monitoring and highlight examples of best practice.

Newcroft Drive, Stretford

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report advice given to Trafford borough council about action to be taken concerning land at and near Newcroft drive, Stretford, in the event that the local authority failed to develop it; if he will list those bodies, including hon. Members, who have written to him on this issue; what recent letters have been sent to local residents or others; and what these letters said.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 November 1987]: In the light of a proposal by Trafford borough council to develop land at Newcroft drive, Urmston, for a social services resource centre and municipal housing, my right hon. Friend decided on 29 June 1987 not to proceed with his earlier intention to direct the disposal of the land. The borough council, having now failed to approve planning applications for its own development, has been advised informally that the Secretary of State will wish to reconsider his attitude.

Only Mrs. C. Ryder, of the Newcroft Park action group has corresponded with the Department about this matter since 29 June 1987, her particular concern being the Secretary of State's likely attitude if the local authority were to designate the site as public open space. She has been informed that the Department cannot say at present what the Secretary of State might decide in relation to the possibility of a direction to dispose. A decision will be taken in due course having regard to all the circumstances and the individual merits of the case.

Woodlands

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what reports he has recently received from the Nature Conservancy Council concerning the conservation of ancient woodlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 20 November 1987]: I have received no such reports.

THE ARTS

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Buchan: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what was the expenditure by his Department for the year 1983-84, specifying separately the amounts (a) spent on capital projects and (b) for revenue purposes by bodies sponsored by his Department;

(2) what is the estimated expenditure by his Department for the year 1987-88, specifying separately the amounts (a) spent on capital projects and (b) for revenue purposes by bodies sponsored by his Department;

(3) what was the expenditure by his Department for the year 1986-87, specifying separately the amounts (a) spent on capital projects and (b) for revenue purposes by bodies sponsored by his Department;

(4) what was the expenditure by his Department for the year 1985-86, specifying separately the amounts (a) spent on capital projects and (b) for revenue purposes by bodies sponsored by his Department;

(5) what was the expenditure by his Department for the year 1984-85, specifying the amounts (a) spent on capital projects and (b) for revenue purposes by bodies sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on Tuesday 10 November at column 136.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Job Creation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his best estimate of the number of full-time equivalent jobs created as a result of the cuts in income tax in his last Budget.

Mr. Major: It has not been the practice of this or previous Governments to publish quantitive estimates of the effects of the Budget on employment.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the value added tax treatment of hospital radio equipment.

Mr. Lilley: Since the beginning of 1987 my right hon. Friend has received a number of representations about VAT treatment of hospital radio equipment.

Third-world Debt

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last discussed the problems of Third-world debt with his counterparts from the Group of Seven countries.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) on 29 October at column 393.

SCOTLAND

Glaucoma

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is (a) the total number of sufferers of the eye disease glaucoma who have come to the attention of his Department, (b) the total cost to his Department of treating this condition and (c) the cost per patient of the eye test which would indicate the possibility of glaucoma, for the latest period for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During 1985, the last full year for which information is available, 1,793 patients diagnosed as suffering from glaucoma were discharged after spells of in-patient care. Information on the cost of treating this condition is not available. The use of ophthalmoscopy, which can detect glaucoma, is already part of the routine NHS sight test. It is open to practitioners to carry out any other tests judged to be appropriate in individual cases. I have no information on the costs of the various tests for glaucoma.

Cervical Cytology Service

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he will publish the report of the scientific advisory group into the cervical cytology service in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 16 November 1987 at col. 259.

Lothian Health Board

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from the Edinburgh council of social service about Lothian health board membership; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Edinburgh council of social service have written once to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State and twice to the Scottish Home and Health Department about the membership of Lothian health board. It has been explained to the council that appointments to boards are at the discretion of Ministers, who seek nominations from a wide range of interests and take into account the experience required of members and the contribution likely to be made by those nominated. As the membership of boards is limited by statutory instrument, there will always be some particular areas of the community, whether in geography or interest, which are not directly represented.

Scottish Sports Council

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what remuneration the current chairman of the Scottish Sports Council receives; and how many days per month he is expected to devote to the business of the Scottish Sports Council.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Mr. Miquel has allocated one full day a month for council meetings and is generally available to discuss Scottish Sports Council matters at other times. At his own request, he is receiving no remuneration.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he received and from whom, and what consultations he carried out and with whom, before he made the appointments to the Scottish Sports Council which were announced on 14 November.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: These appointments reflect discussions which I had with the chairman-designate, Mr. Raymond Miquel, in which the views of the retiring chairman, Mr. Peter Heatly, were also taken into account. The usual formal consultations with Government colleagues were then undertaken before a decision was announced.

Ration and Registration Documents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for all district councils in Scotland the total allocated number of packets of (a) standard food ration documents, (b) temporary food ration documents and (c) registration documents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Standard food ration and registration documents are held by my Department for issue to district councils in Scotland on the basis of one per head of their population, plus a small additional percentage for contingencies. Temporary food ration documents have been allocated sufficient to cover 10 per cent. of the population. Allocations will be reviewed from time to time and varied as necessary.

Reckless Driving

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of section 1 prosecutions for reckless driving heard in each regional authority area in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table:

Number of persons prosecuted under Section 1(1) of the Road Traffic Act 1972

Road Accidents

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the number of fatal accident inquiries relating to deaths in road accidents held in each regional authority area in each of the past five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Figures, in so far as they can be ascertained, are only available for the number of such fatal accident inquiries which have been held subsequent to deaths which occurred in 1985 and 1986. The information is set out in the table.

Regions	Number of Fatal Accident Inquiries held as a result of deaths occurring in: 1985	1986

Wages

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many workers in Scotland earn less than £116 a week or £3 per hour;

(2) how many full-time working women in Scotland earn less than £116 a week or £3 per hour.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 15 July 1987, at column 500.

Employment (Women)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many women are in full-time employment in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The number of female employees in full-time employment in Scotland in June 1987 is estimated at 502,000.

Rating Reform

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if there is to be a national business rate in Scotland when the poll tax proposals go into operation in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: No, although the extension to Scotland of such a rate remains my right hon. and learned Friend's objective. As the first stage in the reform of non-domestic rates in Scotland, increases in the non-domestic rate poundages set by local authorities will, under section 3 of the Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987, be subject to an index-linked ceiling from 1 April 1989.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if it remains his intention to introduce a uniform business rate in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: The extension to Scotland of a uniform business rate set by the Government is my right hon. and learned Friend's objective, and the first step towards this will be the harmonisation of valuation practice north and south of the border.

Community Care

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made by health boards and local authorities in implementing joint finance schemes for community care; how much has been spent of the projected sums; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of joint financing in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Joint financing is appropriate where a health board and a local authority have a long-term operational commitment to a jointly managed project providing services which both have a statutory power to promote. The terms on which NHS and local authority finance may be used for jointly planned and managed projects is, subject to the normal arrangements for meeting NHS and local authority capital expenditure, a matter for individual health boards and local authorities and detailed information on expenditure is not held centrally.

Support finance is appropriate for projects which provide services which are the statutory responsibility of local authorities but which have been identified under joint planning procedures as being likely to make a significant and cost-effective contribution to the discharge of a health board's responsibilities. From 1 May 1985 responsibility for the operation of support finance schemes was transferred to health boards. Each year the Scottish Home and Health Department indicates how much it expects each board to commit to support finance purposes. These indicative levels are neither maximum nor minimum levels and boards are free to choose their own level of funding to support such projects. The figures for the first two years of the revised arrangements are:

All Health Boards	1985-86	1986-87
Indicative level	6·05	6·095
Payments towards projects	2·85	[1]3·83

Thus, after a slow start, there was a marked increase in Health board expenditure on support finance in 1986–87. I will continue to encourage boards to devote more resources to such schemes and to bring their expenditure up to their indicative levels.

Local authority financial returns do not identify separately the local authority's expenditure on such schemes.

Animals (Radioactivity)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on the level of radioactivity in (a) fish in lochs, (b) hares and rabbits and (c) other animals in south-west Scotland; and what assessment has been made on the cumulative effect of all paths in the food chain on the level of radioactivity in humans.

Mr. Michael Forsyth (holding answer 23 November 1987): Information on the level of radioactivity in fish and animals resulting from the Chernobyl accident in Scotland is published on a regular basis by my Department. For the south-west of Scotland the measured levels in 1987 for fish range from six becquerels per kilogram to 4,232 becquerels per kilogram, for hare from 165 becquerels per kilogram to 4,530 becquerels per kilogram and for rabbits 20 becquerrels per kilogram to 155 becquerels per kilogram. Levels in deer range from six becquerels per kilogram to 1,686 becquerels per kilogram.

As assessment of doses to the population of Scotland through all exposure pathways is included in a report produced by the National Radiological Protection Board entitled "A Preliminary Assessment of the Radiological Impact of the Chernobyl Reactor Accident on the Population of the European Community" and in a report produced by the Nuclear Energy Agency of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development entitled "The Radiological Impact of the Chernobyl Accident in OECD Countries".

Multiple Occupation

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what research has been conducted into homes in multiple occupation by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton (holding answer 23 November 1987): Three research projects relevant to houses in multiple occupation have been carried out by or on behalf of the Scottish Development Department in recent years.

In 1982 a report, "Shared Housing for Single People", was published by the Department; this contains the results of a social and design evaluation of purpose-designed, shared housing for single people in Edinburgh. The research was funded by the Department.

In 1984 the Department issued a report "Housing for Single People, Shared Accommodation and Hostels" as part 7 of the Scottish Housing Handbook (HMSO 1984). This examines the need for housing for single people and suggests ways of providing such accommodation.

In 1986, the Department produced a report on research into local authority policies and procedures for controlling and regulating houses in multiple occupation.

Rents

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the average weekly rent level for local authority accommodation in each district authority in Scotland for each year 1979 to 1987; and what was the annual increase expressed in cash and percentage terms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1987]: Statistics on rents are routinely published, most recently in Scottish Development Department statistical bulletin HSIU No. 29, "Public Sector Rents in Scotland 1986-87", a copy of which is in the Library.

The information requested on average weekly rents by district and percentage change for the years 1979 to 1987 is set out in the following tables. The annual change in cash terms for the same period was provided in my answer to the hon. Member on 12 November at columns 268-272.

South of Scotland Electricity Board

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what return he expects to receive on the outstanding borrowing from him by the South of Scotland Electricity Board over the next 10 years; and what effect he estimates that such a return would have on electricity charges made by the South of Scotland Electricity Board.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that it expects to make the following payments of interest and principal for national loans fund borrowing to date:

£ million

	Interest	Principal
1987-88	74·815	56·368
1988-89	74·959	55·888
1989-90	69·194	49·068
1990-91	63·941	47·648
1991-92	58·661	46·248
1992-93	53·531	44·988
1993-94	48·484	42·828
1994-95	43·634	40·778
1995-96	38·962	38·768
1996-97	34·477	36·408

Tariffs are a matter for the board's commercial judgment, taking into account a wide range of factors affecting its operations, including the need to service and repay debt.

Power Stations (Insurance)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate for (i) nuclear power stations and (ii) other power stations the total insurance cover held by the South of Scotland Electricity Board in respect of (a) damage to property owned by the board, (b) potential claims by employees of the board and (c) potential claims by third parties; and what is the cost of this insurance cover in each case.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The information, provided by the South of Scotland Electricity Board, is as follows.

The annual cost to the board of insurance for nuclear power stations is £3·87 million. This provides the following cover:

(a) Damage to board property: £350 million aggregate annual loss limit, with an uninsured excess of £5 million for each and every loss;

(b) Claims by board employees: £20 million aggregate annual claims for each nuclear site (see footnote); and

(c) Claims by third parties: included in the £20 million aggregate annual cover specified at (b).

For non-nuclear power stations and other board property, the annual cost of insurance is £710,000. This provides the following cover:

(a) Damage to board property: £75 million loss limit for each and every claim, with an uninsured excess of £5 million;

(b) Claims by board employees: £50 million loss limit for each and every claim, with an uninsured excess of £5 million; and

(c) Claims by third parties: £50 million loss limit each and every claim with an uninsured excess of £5 million.

Note: Any claims in excess of a nuclear site operator's liability, and up to a sterling equivalent of 300 million special drawing rights (currently about £227 million) would be met from public funds. Beyond that, the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 (as amended) provides that claims shall be satisfied to such extent and out of funds provided by such means as Parliament may determine.

Nuclear Power Stations (Decommissioning)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate what financial provision has been made by the South of Scotland Electricity Board to cover the final decommissioning of all its nuclear power stations.

Mr. Lang: I am advised by the South of Scotland Electricity Board that at 31 March 1987, it had made financial provision of £182·614 million for the decommissioning of its nuclear power stations.

Rate Fund Contributions

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what restrictions he intends to impose on rate fund contributions to the housing revenue accounts of each local housing authority and for the whole of Scotland; and if he will give an estimate of the impact of these restrictions on rents in both local and national terms.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The provisional statutory rate fund contribution limits for 1988-89 announced recently by my right hon. and learned Friend are set out in the table below. Local authorities have until 4 December to make representations about these limits. Final decisions on rate fund contribution limits will be taken later in December and the necessary statutory instrument will be laid before Parliament early in 1988.

Responsibility for setting rent levels lies with the individual local authorities concerned and their rent decisions will depend, inter alia, upon their estimates of expenditure in 1988-89 on loan charges and management and maintenance expenditure. It is not possible to predict authorities' individual decisions at this stage. In national terms, my right hon. and learned Friend estimates that, if authorities increase their 1987-88 levels of expenditure on management and maintenance by 10 per cent. in 1988-89, average rents in Scotland will rise by approximately £1·65 per house, per week; alternatively, if they increase this expenditure by the level of inflation average rents will rise by approximately £1·20 per house, per week.

Domiciliary Consultations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for the last available year (a) the total cost of domiciliary consultations in the National Health Service and (b) the number of each specialty, with cost.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 November 1987]: Fees amounting to £1·392 million were paid in respect of such consultations in 1986-87. Other costs such as travel are not separately identifiable. I regret that information on the number of such consultations and the costs for each specialty is not available.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in each month since 1 September 1986 in each region in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The information is as follows:

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dairy Farmers

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many dairy farmers have made use of (a) the United Kingdom national and (b) the Community milk producers outgoing schemes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A total of 2,267 milk producers have taken advantage of various nationally-funded outgoers schemes, two of which have operated in Northern Ireland only and one in Great Britain only. Provisional figures for the European Community scheme, the second stage of which closed at the end of last month, show that 286 producers have taken advantage of this scheme.

Sugar Beet

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to cut back the level of EEC sugar beet production; and if he will report on moves to negotiate a new international sugar agreement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We have consistently supported a policy of price restraint for sugar with full producer financial responsibility for the costs of surplus disposal. The United Nations sugar conference in September 1987 negotiated a new administrative international sugar agreement, one of the objectives of which is to provide a framework for the possible future negotiation of an agreement with economic provisions. The Community has also recently tabled proposals in the GATT Uruguay round for urgent measures to improve the world sugar market.

Food Documents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give for all district councils in England and Wales the total allocated number of packets of (a) standard food ration documents, (b) temporary food ration documents and (c) registration documents.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Standard food ration and registration documents are held, and have been held since the 1970s, by my Department for issue to district councils in England and Wales on the basis of one per head of their population, plus a small additional percentage for contingencies. Temporary food ration documents have been allocated sufficient to cover 5 per cent. of the population. Allocations will be reviewed from time to time and varied as necessary.

Sheepmeat

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in negotiating the reform of the sheepmeat regime, he will make it his policy to ensure that it is reformed in ways which will maintain the incomes of farmers in the less favoured areas and at the same time reduce the problem of over-grazing.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In the review of the EC sheepmeat regime, we intend to ensure that our sheep producers—including those in the LFAs—can continue to capitalise on their natural advantages under a fair and equitable regime. In our consultations with the interests involved, we are also considering views on the matter of over-grazing.

Mark and Release Scheme

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many blue-marked sheep in England were monitored under the mark and release scheme of January to March 1987 and found to be suitable for release into the food chain;

(2) how many sheep and lambs destined for further fattening were marked with blue paint by or on behalf of his Department in England in 1986 and until the formal mark and release monitoring scheme was introduced in January 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Just under 5,000 sheep were marked with blue paint on leaving the Cumbria designated area on or before 21 December 1986, after which date the colour used for marking purposes was changed from blue to apricot. The blue mark identified such sheep as ineligible for slaughter. It is not possible to say how many of those so marked would have been destined for further fattening.

The agreement whereby the owners of the blue marked sheep could apply to have them monitored/remonitored for radioactivity was introduced on 18 December 1986. Between 18 December 1986 and 27 February 1987 on which date all remaining blue marked sheep were released from slaughter restrictions, almost 14,000 blue marked sheep were monitored. All but eight were found to be suitable for immediate release to the food chain and even those eight were found to be suitable on subsequent monitoring. The sheep monitored under this arrangement will have included a number of animals marked blue on leaving the Scottish and Welsh designated areas.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep have been monitored for radioactivity in each month since 1 September 1986, in each county in England.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Radiation Levels

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library monitoring details relating to radiation levels in England and Wales since December 1986 in the same form as in his publication "Radionuclide Levels in Food, Animals and Agricultural Products".

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 23 November 1987]: I shall publish the collated results for 1987 in the same format as that for 1986 and place them in the Library of the House early in the new year. I have already from time to time this year published some of this monitoring data which have also been placed in the Library of the House.

Pesticides

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many health inspectors are currently employed in his Department to check on the safety of pesticides; and how many Government inspectors were employed in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

On 1 October 1987 the Health and Safety Executive employed 142 agricultural inspectors and 528 factory inspectors in the field. Their duties include responsibility for pesticide safety. The total number of inspectors in the field in each of the last 10 years is as follows:

1 April figures	Agricultural inspectors	Factory inspectors
1977	178	602
1978	175	619
1979	179	656

1987	151	[1]538

[1] Before April 1986 some inspectors now classed as specialists were categorised as general inspectors.

The additional pesticides work now falling to HSE is being accommodated by a rearrangement of priorities.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Exporters (Assistance)

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what credit financing assistance is available to British exporters of consumable commodities; and what information he has as to what assistance is available to comparable United States exporters.

Mr. Alan Clark: The normal credit insurance facilities of the Export Credit Guarantee Department are available in respect of consumable commodities. Such cover may be used as collateral for export finance in the commercial market. The terms on which such goods are sold do not normally exceed six months but where there is evidence of official support for more favourable terms, the Department is prepared to consider matching such terms. The United States institutions provide broadly the same type of credit insurance support. In addition, the United States Government, through its Commodity Credit Corporation, makes substantial aid available for the purchase by developing countries of certain commodities, notably agricultural products, on highly concessional terms.

Investor Protection

Mr. Warren: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made of the implications for investor protection of the standards of accessibility by investors to brokers, particularly during the recent pattern of dealings of price movements on the London stock exchange; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The volume of trading on the international stock exchange in recent weeks has been at exceptionally high levels, which suggests that the market remained accessible to investors. Stock exchange statistics indicate that private investors were active participants. I am pleased to note how well the exchange's dealing, settlement and surveillance systems have coped. Allegations of difficulties in effecting deals are being investigated by the stock exchange who so far have found no evidence of abuse.

Tariffs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the value of imports into the United Kingdom of (i) finished wood, (ii) leather goods, (iii) footwear, (iv) iron and steel products and (v) copper wire from (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Indonesia for each of the past five years; what tariff or non-tariff restrictions exist on such imports from (1) Commonwealth and (2) non-Commonwealth developing countries; and whether Her Majesty's Government or the European Commission have any proposals to reduce such restrictions.

Mr. Atkins: No distinction is made between Commonwealth and non-Commonwealh countries. No quantitative restrictions apply to the named products from those sources.

Duties are charged under an EC common customs tariff —details can be found in the HM Customs and Excise Tariff (copy available in the Library). Further liberalisation of trade in goods by the 95 contracting parties to GATT, in order to expand world trade, is being addressed in the Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations now under way.

Details of United Kingdom imports are given in the following tables:

Business Improvement Services

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what sums of money his Department contributed towards the business improvement services scheme in each of the last three years.

Mr. Atkins: Payments made by my Department in respect of the business improvement services scheme are as follows:

Financial Year	Payments £000
[1]1984-85	31
1985-86	5,643
1986-87	13,270

[1] Part year only.

Textiles

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department will seek the extension of the European regional development fund non-quota textile aid scheme beyond its scheduled expiry date of March 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Under the existing ERDF regulation, the European Commission would propose programmes of aid where problems stemmed from Community policies to reduce excess capacity. Substantial sums have been spent in the European Community under the non-quota scheme and the Commission has no plans to extend this. I do not consider it appropriate to press the Commission to do so.

Exports

Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the trend in exports from the United Kingdom in 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his Autumn Statement, forecast export volume to increase by 5·5 per cent. in 1987. Non-oil export volume is forecast to increase by 7 per cent.

Inner City Task Forces

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list for each of the inner city task forces (a) their budget for the current year and their projected budgets for the next three years, (b) the size of their development fund budget for making grants to new businesses, (c) the grants made from each development fund since their creation, (d) the number of jobs created through such grants, (e) the size of their budget for making grants to voluntary organisations, (f) the grants made to voluntary organisations since their creation, (g) the number of people employed by voluntary organisations through such grants and (h) the amount of private sector money made available through the task force.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is as follows:

(a) Task forces are not allocated separate budgets. The total budget for the 16 task forces and the central unit for the current year is £14·3 million. I will announce the budget for the next three years, after the publication of the Government's public expenditure White Paper in the new year.

(b) There is no budget as such. Each task force enters into separate negotiations with banks to establish a development fund, and each fund is differently constituted. They may make loans as well as grants. The size of the task force contribution to their fund in those areas that have established them is as follows:

Chapeltown/Harehills (Leeds)	100,000
Handsworth (Birmingham)	200,000
St. Pauls, Bristol	125,000
Moss Side, Manchester	55,000
North Kensington	50,000
Middlesbrough (North Central)	50,000
North Peckham	100,000
Wolverhampton	65,000

(c) The number of grants made by each task force development fund is as follows:

	Number
Chapeltown/Harehills (Leeds)	29
Handsworth (Birmingham)	55
St. Pauls, Bristol	33
Moss Side, Manchester	4
North Kensington	25
Middlesbrough (North Central)	7
North Peckham	1
Wolverhampton	10

(d) It is not possible to give a precise figure for the number of jobs created through task force development fund grants as we have no means of measuring additionality or the number of jobs created indirectly.

(e) There is no specific budget allocation for grants to voluntary organisations; each project proposal put forward is treated on its merits.

(f) The number of grants to voluntary organisations made by each task force is as follows:

	Number
Chapeltown/Harehills (Leeds)	22
Coventry Foleshill/Hillfields	13
Doncaster	0
Handsworth (Birmingham)	32

(g) It is not possible to give a figure for the number of people employed by voluntary organisations as a result of task force grants.

(h) It is not possible to break down the amount of private sector money made available through each task force. We estimate the inner cities unit overall is now striking a 'leverage' ratio of around 1:1·6 public to private sector funding.

Trade Barriers

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proposals he has for publicising the potential benefits for industry of the removal of all trade barriers within the European Economic Community in 1992.

Mr. Alan Clark: My right hon. and learned Friend and I are determined to ensure that British business is given every opportunity to take advantage of the new opportunities which will come from creating a single Community market. We are launching a sustained campaign to increase awareness of the challenge. In addition to a national conference to be held at Lancaster house on 18 April 1988, we are actively preparing a much wider campaign to reach companies throughout the country.

Regional Aid

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was his Department's total expenditure on regional aid to industry, in each differing category of aid, in England and in each of the standard English regions in each financial year since 1978-79 both at current and outturn prices.

Mr. Atkins: For the period in question, expenditure at current prices by my Department on regional aid to industry, by category of assistance paid by standard economic region was as follows:

£ million

Research and Development

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish figures on (a) Government and (b) private sector spending on research and development as a percentage of gross domestic product since 1980 by sector; and what information he has on comparable figures in other Group of Seven countries.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is given in the table:

Animal Welfare

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will place in the Library a copy of the report commissioned by him on the use of steel-jawed leg-hold traps in the major animal fur-producing countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: When my inquiries are complete, I will place a summary of the results in the Library.

Rover Group

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent consultations or communications he has had with a company or companies interested in acquiring the Rover Group, either in part or whole and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have had no consultations or communications with any companies on this subject.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will seek assurances from the Rover Group that adequate time will be set aside for consultation with the trades unions and the work force in advance of any decisions which affect the ownership of the Rover Group, or any of its constituent parts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am satisfied that established company procedures provide scope for Rover Group's employees to be kept properly informed of progress towards privatisation.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy that the Rover Group, or any of its constituent parts, is not sold to foreign-owned or partially foreign-owned companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. In considering any proposal that might be brought forward, I would consider the long-term industrial and commercial development of the Rover Group businesses to be more important than the nationality of possible owners.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it is policy that any future owners of the Rover Group maintain or increase investment levels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The consequences for investment would form an important part of our consideration of any future proposals that might be brought forward concerning Rover Group's businesses.

Departmental Expenditure (Wales)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the total expenditure of his Department in Wales for the current financial year; and what are the figures for each year since 1979 for which complete information is available.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 23 November 1987]: From 1 April 1979 to 31 March 1984 regional development grants (RDG) payments to companies in Wales totalled £470 million. Responsibility for administration of the RDG scheme in Wales was transferred to the Welsh Office from my Department in November 1984.

Complete information on other expenditure by my Deparment on a regional basis could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, we can say that under the selective investment scheme payments to industry in Wales since 1979 have totalled some £18 million to date. Also, under support for innovation under the Science and Technology Act 1965 over £8·2 million has been paid to industry in Wales since 1 April 1982. (Figures for the earlier years are not available).

Intermediate Areas

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will now increase the number of intermediate areas.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 23 November 1987]: I have no plans at present to review coverage of the assisted areas map.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will receive a delegation from local councillors in Bolsover and adjacent north Derbyshire travel-to-work areas seeking intermediate area status.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 23 November 1987]: I have aready made clear, in response to representations from Derbyshire county council, that we would be willing to receive a delegation.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Nurses (Greater London)

10. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the pay and conditions and the working environment of nurses working in Greater London.

Mr. Newton: The pay of nurses, midwives and health visitors is determined on the advice of the independent Review Body for Nursing Staff, Midwives and Health Visitors. Terms of service are a matter for negotiation on the Nursing and Midwifery Staffs Negotiating Council.

Since 1979 nurses in Greater London, along with those in the rest of the country, have benefited from an increase in basic pay of 30 per cent. in real terms and a reduction in the working week from 40 to 37½ hours without loss of pay.

Maternity Pay

15. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received about the implemenation of statutory maternity pay since October 1986.

Mr. Portillo: Since October 1986 some 600 letters have been received about statutory maternity pay and maternity allowance. Of these, about 250 related to the impending introduction of the new arrangements in April 1987; and since that date they have mainly concerned individual cases.

Social Fund (Fuel Debts)

16. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will review the decision to exclude assistance with fuel debts from the provisions of the social fund; and if he will make a statement.

42. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will review the decision to exclude assistance with fuel debts from the provisions of the social fund; and if he will make a statement.

50. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will review the decision to exclude assistance with fuel debts from the provisions of the social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Assistance with a fuel debt may be given from the social fund as a crisis loan, if there is a risk to the health or safety of the applicant or his family. Supplementary benefit recipients can also take advantage of the fuel direct scheme to pay for gas and electricity supplies.

Child Benefit

17. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to announce whether child benefit will continue for the remainder of the current Parliament.

20. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to announce whether child benefit will continue for the remainder of the current Parliament.

31. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to be in a position to announce whether child benefit will continue for the remainder of the current Parliament.

Mr. Scott: We have made it clear that child benefit, and social security benefits in general, will be kept under constant review.

Severe Weather Allowances

18. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the severe weather heating allowance for pensioners and other people on low incomes.

Mr. Scott: A number of representations have been received about various aspects of the scheme.

Severe Weather Payments

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received concerning the severe weather payments scheme.

Mr. Portillo: There have been very few recent representations about the exceptionally cold weather scheme.

Disabled Children

19. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will transfer responsibility for the provision of speech therapy and physiotherapy for disabled children from local health authorities to local eduction authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. Most physiotherapists have always been NHS employees; speech therapists have been with the NHS for 13 years. We have no plans to change the system.

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled children under the age of 16 years in assessment units currently qualify for supplementary benefits.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Sickle Cell Anaemia

21. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the provision of facilities for screening and counselling for sufferers of sickle cell anaemia.

Mrs. Currie: Screening and counselling services are provided by district health authorities which decide the resources to be devoted locally to this inherited blood disorder in the light of local needs and competing priorities. As at August 1987 there were 10 National Health Service sickle cell counselling centres in England.

District Health Authorities

22. Mr. Hinchcliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that under the present arrangements for the membership of district health authorities the interests of patients are properly represented.

Mrs. Currie: Yes. District health authorities are composed of people drawn from the local community they serve and from a range of relevant backgrounds. In addition, community health councils, which represent the interests of the public locally, may send observers to health authority meetings and are consulted by health authorities on proposed major services changes.

59. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the amount of finance available to district health authorities for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

86. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the amount of finance available to district health authorities for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

108. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the amount of finance available to district health authorities for the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. Health authorities received cash increases averaging 5·7 per cent. at the beginning of the year. Additional funds were subsequently provided to help meet the cost of review body awards. Three of the Thames regions have received additional funds in recognition of the exceptional extra demands they face in providing services for people with AIDS. As a result, the total increase in provision now stands at 8·4 per cent. This is equivalent to growth in real terms of 3·7 per cent.

117. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he has taken to ensure that the redistribution of funds by regional health authorities to district authorities has been done in a fair and equitable way; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 16 November at column 438.

Mentally Ill Persons (Halifax)

23. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take on the 1986 Health Advisory Service report on services for mentally ill people in Halifax; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is not for Ministers to initiate action on such reports. Responsibility for deciding on the action to be taken in the light of advice given in health advisory service reports rests with the individual health and local authorities concerned. The hon. Member may wish to contact the relevant health and local authorities direct for any further information she may require.

AIDS

24. Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what extra help is being provided in the current year to those regions hardest hit by AIDS.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend for Norfolk, South-West (Mrs. Shephard) on 23 October at column 906.

Waiting Lists

25. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent discussions he has had with his Health Service managers concerning reductions in waiting lists.

Mr. Newton: The reduction of waiting lists and particularly waiting times figure regularly as an item for discussion in meetings between Ministers and officials and the chairmen and general managers of regional health authorities.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the reduction in the waiting lists in the Barnet health authority.

Mr. Newton: In the six months to 31 March 1987 the total number of cases on the in-patient waiting list in the Barnet district health authority fell by 514 (12·7 per cent.), from 4,059 to 3,545. Over the same period the number of urgent cases waiting over one month fell by 78 (49·4 per cent.) from 158 to 80. The number of non-urgent cases waiting over one year fell by 273 (32·5 per cent.) from 840 (20·7 per cent. of the total list) to 567 (16·0 per cent. of the total list).

Community Care Services

26. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review the current level of funding of community care services; and if he will make a statement.

29. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to speed up the implementation of community care policies with appropriate resources.

Mr. Newton: Sir Roy Griffiths has been asked to review the way in which public funds are used to support community care policy. We shall give very careful consideration to his conclusions, which we expect to receive early next year.

85. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make extra provision available for local authorities to provide additional and continuing care in the community for elderly and mentally handicapped people; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We provided an extra 1 per cent. worth about £27 million, for improvements in community care in the rate support grant settlement for 1987-88. Sir Roy Griffiths has been asked to review the way in which public funds are used to support community care policy and to advise on the options that would improve the use of these funds as a contribution to more effective community care. I understand Sir Roy intends to present his recommendations to my right hon. Friend early in the new year.

95. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to review the arrangements for oversight of local authority provision of services for community care.

Mrs. Currie: We have no present plans to review the arrangements. The provision of social work services in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the reason for the requirement in the social fund regulations for applicants for a community care grant to apply at the office for the area to which they have moved, rather than the area in which they previously lived.

Mr. Scott: Applications for community grants for the cost of removals and/or fares only will normally be the responsibility of the office which covers the area from which the applicant is moving. However, where the applicant is being resettled for institutional or residential care and has applied for other items, the responsibility will lie with the receiving office. This is to facilitate effective liaison with any local agencies involved with the applicant so that the social fund community care grant may complement any other provision that may be made.

Electricity Prices

27. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department will increase the allocation to regional health authorities to compensate for the projected increase in electricity prices.

60. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to provide extra funds for local health authorities to enable them to meet the extra cost of increased electricity charges; and if he will make a statement.

71. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to provide extra funds for local health authorities to enable them to meet the extra cost of increased electricity charges; and if he will make a statement.

97. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to provide extra funds for local health authorities to enable them to meet the extra cost of increased electricity charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. Health authorities are required to meet all price increases from within the resources available to them.

46. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the impact of an increase in electricity prices on the health of (a) young and (b) old people.

Mr. Portillo: We have received very few representations about this.

Operating Department Assistants

28. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate his Department has made of the number of operating department assistants employed by the National Health Service from private agencies.

Mr. Newton: Information on the numbers of operating department assistants supplied to the National Health Service by outside agencies is not collected centrally.

Professional and Medical Negligence

30. Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider alternative methods of meeting the cost to health authorities of awards for civil damages arising from claims for professional and medical negligence.

Mrs. Currie: Compensation paid under legal liability is met by individual health authorities from their cash limits. In 1986-87 the total of such payments, not all of which related to accidents suffered by patients, amounted to £9·3 million. In addition, hospital doctors pay subscriptions to defence societies which are taken into account by the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body when they review their salaries.

Payments (Computer Equipment)

32. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the performance of the computer equipment handling the changes in social security payments in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: So far as the 1988 benefit uprating changes are concerned, the existing equipment will be used, so beneficiaries will almost certainly experience the normal high levels of reliability throughout the changeover.

The microcomputer systems in use in the Department's local offices are being upgraded to handle assessments of the new income support and book-keeping for the social fund—which come into effect from April 1988. There is no reason to suppose that the performance of these systems will fall below the satisfactory level now being achieved. Indeed, the upgraded systems should prove faster and easier to use, as a result of improvements to the software now being finalised.

The family credit system, which also comes into effect from April 1988, represents a much larger gain in efficiency, since it replaces a manual operation with an on-line computer system, aiming to give a response to queries and instructions within, on average, two seconds. The mainframes are consistently providing even higher levels of serviceability than those specified in the contract with ICL, the suppliers.

We place the greatest possible importance on serviceability and the meeting of performance criteria, and ensure that these are achieved both by contractual means and by rigorous quality control. This involves a continuous programme of mainframe quality assurance, which all equipment must pass before being brought into use.

Dystrophic Epidermolysis Bullosa

33. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to make facilities available for the treatment of dystrophic epidermolysis bullosa; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Devon, North (Mr. Speller) on 20 July at column 454.

Disabled Claimants

34. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled claimants will receive a lower entitlement under income support than they currently receive.

90. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled claimants will receive a lower entitlement under income support.

116. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled claimants will receive a lower entitlement under income support.

Mr. Scott: None. Under our proposals for transitional protection, claimants whose benefit entitlement on the introduction of the income support scheme would be less than their existing benefit entitlement will have their benefit level maintained.

Merit Awards

35. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was paid in merit awards to hospital consultants and dentists in the last financial year.

Mr. Newton: The actual amounts paid out in distinction awards are not collected centrally since award holders are paid pro rata to their sessional commitments in the National Health Service. The value of awards recommended by the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body for Great Britain was £56·8 million for the year ended 31 March 1987, of which is estimated that some £47 million was paid. These figures include awards made to community physicians as well as those to consultants.

Royal Free Hospital

37. Mrs. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will direct the Hampstead district health authority and North-East Thames regional health authority not to close more hospital beds at the royal free hospital over the next three years.

Mrs. Currie: No. Health authorities should be free to manage their facilities so as to provide the most effective service to their local populations. Ministerial directions would remove that freedom and could lead to an inefficient use of beds.

Family Credit Scheme

39. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many extra families will benefit from the replacement of family income supplement by the new family credit scheme.

Mr. Scott: We estimate that around 270,000 more families will receive family credit than are receiving family income supplement.

Housing Benefit

40. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants of housing benefit will receive lower benefit in April 1988.

112. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants of housing benefit will receive lower benefit in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) today.

Benefits

41. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many different benefits are included in the existing social security system.

Mr. Portillo: The exact number depends on somewhat arbitrary assumptions about what is or is not a separate benefit where individual payments are closely related (for example, constant attendance allowance can be paid to people in receipt of industrial injuries disablement benefit or war disablement pension).

The leaflet "Which Benefit" (FB2) published by the Department—a copy of which is held in the Library—lists 34 different benefits.

80. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what account he proposes to take, in fixing benefit rates, of the increase in electricity charges to be introduced in 1988.

Mr. Scott: The uprating of social security benefits which will take place in April 1988 takes account of price changes, including those in fuel costs, between September 1986 and September 1987. The uprating in April 1989 will have regard to price increases in the 12-month period from September 1987 and will therefore take account of any increase in electricity charges in April 1988.

Speech Therapists (Pay)

43. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the state of negotiations on speech therapists' pay.

Mr. Newton: This is a matter for the Whitley council. I understand that the staff side representing speech therapists is now consulting its members about a pay and regrading offer made on 3 November.

Income Support

44. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is reviewing income support rates to take account of the recently announced increase in electricity prices; and if he will make a statement.

48. Mr. Blair: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is reviewing income support rates to take account of the recently announced increase in electricity prices; and if he will make a statement.

92. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is reviewing income support rates to take account of the recently announced increase in electricity prices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: No; the income support rates have been set taking into account current levels of supplementary benefit, evidence as to the relative circumstances of particular groups, available resources and the commitment to compensate claimants for the average value of the 20 per cent. rates contribution that householders will have to meet. In future they will be set by reference to movements in the appropriate price index over the 12 months preceding their announcement. Electricity prices form a component of that index, so any increase in these prices will in due course be reflected in benefit rates.

RAWP Formula

45. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received regarding the operation of the resource allocation working party formula.

Mr. Newton: The Department regularly receives inquiries about the operation of the national resource allocation working party formula.

68. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to make changes to the resource allocation working party formula for allocating funds to regional health authorities and to the methods by which regional health authorities allocate moneys to district health authorities.

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he intends to review the formula for allocation of funds to National Health Service regions to incorporate particular policies such as community care.

Mr. Newton: The National Health Service management board is currently undertaking a review of the resource allocation working party (RAWP) formula. The programme of analysis and research recommended in the initital report on the review in December 1986 is due for completion by around the end of the year, and a report will follow. The implications of the increasing level of community care were among the issues identified for consideration in the review work programme.

There are established arrangements for monitoring regions' distribution of resources to their districts, through regional long-term strategic plans and annual short-term programmes. Resource distribution may also be discussed in regions' annual accountability reviews with Ministers and the NHS management board.

Hospitals (Ministerial Visits)

47. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals in Birmingham have received official visits from Ministers since 11 June.

Mrs. Currie: None. Several invitations have been accepted and it is planned to arrange visits in the new year.

Census

49. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will include a question on hours spent carrying out unpaid voluntary work on the official census.

Mrs. Currie: No decisions have yet been taken on the content of the 1991 census. Consultations are in hand and proposals will be published as a White Paper next year. The consultation process is described in Census Newsletter No. 2, a copy of which is in the Library.

Republic of Ireland Nationals

51. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest figures available for the cost to the United Kingdom of social security payments for nationals of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Portillo: No figures are available for the cost of social security benefit payments to Irish citizens living in the United Kingdom. Payments of social security benefits to nationals of the Republic of Ireland are not recorded separately and no figures are available for the cost.

Benefit Office, Hackney

52. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to provide the staffing and resources to bring the service at the benefit office in Arcola street, Hackney, up to average levels; and if he will visit the office to see the conditions which staff and claimants experience.

Mr. Portillo: Staffing levels in social security local offices are determined by an agreed complementing system which is designed to match staffing with work loads. The staffing allocation for Stoke Newington office, at Arcola street, Hackney, has increased significantly over the past two years, as follows:

	Number
1985-86	117·0
1987-88	141·5

As at 1 November there were 147 trained staff in post and seven staff under training. There is currently an overcrowding problem but this will be addressed in planning the implementation of the forthcoming computerisation of the assessment and payment of benefits.

Increases in trained staff and a strengthened management team have contributed to a marked improvement in levels of service at the office in recent months. Levels of service are generally satisfactory and stand comparison now with those of other London offices.

£50,000 was spent in March 1986 on improving the facilities for supplementary benefit callers. Further improvements to the caller areas, for which a total of £24,000 has been allocated, are currently being planned and should be completed by April 1988.

My noble Friend, the Earl of Arran, hopes to visit the office shortly.

South-East Thames Region

53. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in the cost improvement programme in the South-East Thames region.

Mrs. Currie: South-East Thames regional health authority and its constituent districts have made cost improvement savings worth nearly £41 million in the last three financial years and plan savings worth over £17 million in the current financial year. These savings are retained within the region and are used for patient care.

Orthopaedic Surgery

54. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will direct the North-East Thames regional health authority and Hampstead district health authority to keep all operating theatres working throughout the Christmas period to reduce the waiting list for hip operations and other orthopaedic surgery.

Mr. Newton: I do not think this would be appropriate.

London Health Authorities (Expenditure)

55. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific services have been identified by his Department as liable to be cut by London health authorities in order to meet the cash reduction over the next three years.

Mr. Newton: There are no plans for cash reductions. The overall cash increase projected for the next three years is about 15 per cent. Regional health authority allocations for 1988-89 will be announced shortly.

Infected Blood Products

56. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has met a deputation concerning the 1,200 people with haemophilia and infected with HIV through blood products prescribed by the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

69. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has, in the light of the recent meeting between Ministers and the Haemophilia Society, to help HIV positive haemophiliacs with the extra costs of maintaining their health; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members to my statement to the House on Monday 16 November at column 773 in which I announced a grant of £10 million to the Haemophilia Society.

Opren

57. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning compensation in those cases where Opren has been prescribed under the National Health Service and the patient has died.

Mr. Newton: As a result of current proceedings before the High Court the Department has received a number of statements where it is alleged that death was attributable to Opren and we have answered a number of parliamentary questions on this specific subject.

Primary Health Care (White Paper)

58. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish the White Paper on primary health care.

72. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish his White Paper on primary health care.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend hopes to make a statement shortly.

East Yorkshire Health Authority (Portering Services)

61. Mr. David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what savings East Yorkshire health authority expects to make by contracting out its portering services.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of East Yorkshire health authority for the information he seeks.

Invalid Care Allowance

62. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average time taken to process claims for invalid care allowance.

Mr. Scott: The average time taken to decide invalid care allowance claims is currently about 12 weeks.

Psychiatric Hospitals

63. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many psychiatric hospitals he expects to be closed in the next four years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may, however, wish to know that from details obtained earlier this year on the 100 or so large mental illness hospitals in England (that is, those which had over 200 beds in 1975), there were plans for the closure of 31 by about 1995, subject to the results of public consultation. We have made clear that none of the hospitals will be closed until a range of appropriate alternative accommodation and services is in place, and planned closure dates must be subject to this proviso.

The objective of policy is the development of high quality local mental illness services covering short-stay and long-stay in-patient care and a comprehensive range of community facilities; the reduction in size of some traditional hospitals and the closure of others will be a consequence of this development.

Patients (Treatment)

65. Mr. Curry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patient cases were treated in England in 1986 compared with 1978.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table. Further information about National Health Service hospital activity statistics for England, for the period 1974 to 1986 is contained in statistical bulletin 5/87, a copy of which is in the Library.

Patients treated in NHS hospitals, England, 1978 and 1986

In-patient cases	5,370,319	6,413,789
Day cases	562,168	1,050,158
New out-patients	7,711,912	8,767,788
Total out-patient attendances	33,950,339	37,727,608

100. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patient cases were treated in hospitals in the Trent region in 1986 compared with 1978.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Patients treated in NHS hospitals in Trent, 1978 and 1986

In-patient cases	461,229	592,398
Day cases	42,083	95,092
New out-patients	637,427	779,739
Total out-patient attendances	2,798,506	3,442,368

Hospital Consultants

66. Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many extra consultant posts the Government are funding in the west midlands following the discussion on the consultation document "Hospital Medical Staffing: Achieving a Balance."

Mr. Newton: To help initiate the programme for structural change in hospital medical staffing set out in "Achieving a Balance: Plan for Action", details of which were announced on 27 October in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) at column 258, central funding is being made available for a limited period for an additional 100 consultant posts over two years. Of the 45 posts on offer in 1987-88, five have been allocated to West Midlands regional health authority. Bids are currently being considered for the 55 posts available for 1988-89. These posts will be additional to authorities' existing plans for consultant posts. In general it is for health authorities to determine the staff they need to fulfil their service plans, within available resources and broad national guidelines.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

67. Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We meet chairmen of all regional health authorities on a regular basis to discuss a wide variety of topics.

Family Needs

70. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what extra recognition is given in the social security reforms to the needs of families.

Mr. Scott: The social security reforms which take effect from April 1988 will focus help more effectively on people in the greatest need. Lower paid working families with children will receive more help through the introduction of family credit which we expect to be received by over twice the number presently receiving family income supplement. Non-working families with children, as well as lone parents, disabled people and pensioners will get specific additional help through the premiums in the new income support scheme.

Laundry Services

73. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what contribution to patient care the competitive tendering process is providing in the field of hospital laundry services.

Mr. Newton: All measures which improve cost-effectiveness in the National Health Service, such as competitive tendering, are intended to release resources to improve the service as a whole. As at 30 September 1987, the competitive tendering process in laundry services had generated estimated annual savings of over £8 million in England.

Community Nurseries

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish his report on the under-fives initiative on community nurseries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The under-fives initiative was monitored and evaluated by Willem van der Eyken, senior research fellow, Institute of Child Health, University of Bristol, and we expect to receive his final report shortly. When we have studied it we will make an announcement about its publication and dissemination.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures are included in the social security reforms to ease the effects of the poverty and unemployment traps.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Kent (Mr. Rowe) on 30 June at column 76.

Social Fund (Loans)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has had in relation to loans from the proposed social fund in place of single payments.

Mr. Portillo: We received 108 representations from interested organisations and individuals on the draft social fund manual. The majority of these representations contained a variety of comments about the replacement of supplementary benefit single payments by discretionary grants and loans.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from parents seeking facilities to apply to the social fund for loans to meet charges on pupils for education.

Mr. Portillo: We have received no such representations.

Newham Health Authority

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to resolve the financial difficulties of the Newham health authority.

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities are responsible for managing their own financial affairs, within the budgets allocated to them. A district health authority would first look to its regional health authority for advice and support on financial matters.

Pensions

78. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what incentives there will be from July 1988 for individuals to build up additional pensions.

79. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what incentives there will be from July 1988 for people to establish personal pension schemes.

Mr. Portillo: From 1 July 1988 it will be possible to contract-out of the state earnings-related pension scheme through a personal pension from a scheme approved by the Occuptional Pensions Board. Personal pensions will attract minimum contributions paid by the Department. These will be made up of a partial rebate of national insurance contributions and, until April 1993, a special incentive payment. In most cases the payments by the Department will include tax relief on the employee's share of the minimum contribution. People taking out a personal pension before 6 April 1989 will be able to backdate membership to 6 April 1987 and claim an extra year's minimum contributions, including the incentive.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the regulations governing the sale of personal pensions, in the light of the Government's decision that they should not be available before 1 July 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I announced on 26 August that the start date for the new personal pension arrangements introduced by the Social Security Act 1986 was to be postponed from 4 January 1988 to 1 July 1988. This decision was taken in the interests of investor protection, following an announcement by the Securities and Investments Board that certain key rules relating to the provision of product information to consumers would not come into force until 1 July 1988.

The postponement necessitates some changes to the regulations governing personal pensions, and amending regulations are being laid before Parliament today. These revoke the Personal Pension Schemes (Appropriate Schemes) Regulations 1987 (S.I. 1987, No. 1109), with the result that the Occupational Pensions Board cannot consider applications for personal pension schemes to be appropriate to receive minimum contributions under the Act. Replacement regulations will be made as soon as possible. These will empower the board to accept and consider applications for approval from 1 March 1988 and to issue appropriate scheme certificates from 1 July 1988.

The amending regulations also make a change to the conditions in which the 2 per cent. incentive addition will not be paid to someone taking a personal pension. The original regulations provide that the incentive will not be paid to a person who, having been a member of a contracted-out occupational pension scheme for two years or more, leaves the occupational scheme voluntarily and without changing employment on or after 4 January 1988 in order to take a personal pension. Under the amending regulations the incentive will not be payable to a person who leaves an occupational scheme in these circumstances on or after 6 April 1988.

Surplus Land

81. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much the sale of surplus land and property in the National Health Service is expected to realise in 1987-88.

Mrs. Currie: Approximately £200 million.

Hip Replacement

82. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he proposes to take to reduce the length of time patients must wait for hip replacement operations.

Mr. Newton: The median waiting time for elective hip replacement fell from 23 weeks in 1978 to 21 weeks in 1985, the latest date for which figures are available. In 1978, 28,090 such operations were carried out. The figure for 1985 was 37,650. The 100,000 additional patients to be treated with the £25 million waiting list fund for 1987-88 will include several thousand extra hip and knee replacements.

Bexley Hospital

83. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the future of Bexley hospital.

Mrs. Currie: None.

Hospital Building

87. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many major hospital building schemes have been carried through since 1979.

Mrs. Currie: Hospitals are normally built in stages comprising a series of building schemes. Information held centrally shows that in England since 1979, 285 hospital building schemes, each costing over £1 million, have been completed.

Doctors and Dentists

88. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general medical and dental practitioners were working in the East Anglia region in 1986 compared with 1978.

Mrs. Currie: The number of general medical practitioners (unrestricted principals) in the East Anglian region in 1986 was 1,021 compared with 830 in 1978. The corresponding numbers for general dental practitioners were 537 and 411.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was spent by his Department, in each of the last three years for which figures are available, on post-graduate training for dental practitioners.

Mrs. Currie: Expenditure on courses and associated travel and subsistence expenses for general dental practitioners was £244,000, £243,000 and £254,000 in 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 respectively.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was spent by his Department, in each of the last three years for which figures are available, on post-graduate training for general medical practitioners.

Mrs. Currie: Expenditure on courses and associated travel and subsistence expenses for general medical practitioners was £1·9 million, £1·8 million and £2·1 million in 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 respectively.

Industrial Injuries

89. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in how many cases in 1986 medical appeals tribunals dealing with industrial injuries did not adopt the clinical findings of the adjudicating medical authority.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not held centrally in the form requested and it would involve disproportionate expense to extract it from case records. Although the clinical findings of adjudicating medical authorities form only a part of the evidence considered by medical appeal tribunals (which will in any event consider the whole case afresh and may have more recent clinical findings available to them), the hon. Member might find the following information helpful:

Appeals heard by medical appeal tribunals on industrial injuries questions in the year ending December 1986

Subject	Number of appeals heard	Decision favourable to claimant
		Number	Per cent.
Prescribed diseases	530	259	49
Industrial accidents	8,429	3,916	46
Total	8,959	4,175	47

Elderly and Mentally Handicapped People

91. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review his policy of care in the community in respect of the mentally handicapped;: and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The policy is well established. The scope for improving progress in its implementation will be considered in the light of Sir Roy Griffiths' review of the way in which public funds are used to support community care policy and options that would improve the use of these funds as a contribution to more effective community care.

110. Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the progress towards joint strategies by health authorities and local authorities for community care services for the mentally ill and mentally handicapped.

Mrs. Currie: Although policy on care in the community is well established, community care services for mentally ill and mentally handicapped people in England are still in the process of development, and more needs to be done to develop joint strategies, and ensure co-ordination between the statutory, voluntary and private sectors which collectively provide the services. Successive Governments have recognised that it will take a good deal of effort and hard work over a long period to produce the kind of service we want. The challenge of providing well co-ordinated community-oriented modern services has been patchily met by some health and local authorities: very good services are being developed elsewhere.

Sir Roy Griffiths is currently reviewing the way public funds are used to support community care policy, including the contribution of joint strategies by health authorities and local authorities. We will decide about action to take once we receive his recommendations.

Diabetics (Blood Testing)

93. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to make diabetic blood testing strips available on National Health Service prescriptions.

Mr. Newton: Yes. The forthcoming White Paper on primary care will indicate our intention to make blood glucose testing strips, which are at present available on the NHS only through hospitals, available on general practitioner prescription as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. We hope this will be in the course of next year.

Wider availability of these strips, which enable diabetics to check their position more closely than by the alternative of urine testing, will help more diabetics to monitor and treat their condition in their own homes, thus increasing their independence. It should also, therefore, assist in reducing unnecessary demands on hospital services.

There are some 1 million diabetics in the country, with about 50,000 under medical supervision. Many of these will benefit from the introduction of blood testing strips. There are some uncertainties, for example about the numbers of people who will wish to use the strips, which mean that costs cannot yet be estimated with precision, but they may be of the order of £10 million in a full year.

I am glad that we are now able to propose this further improvement in services for diabetics, following closely on the action we have already taken to make disposable syringes and needles available to them on general practitioner prescription from the beginning of last September.

NHS Funding

94. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to consider alternative methods of National Health Service funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton; Health authorities are already encouraged to dispose of surplus land and buildings, and such sales are currently releasing some £200 million a year for other uses within the National Health Service. As my right hon. Friend has made clear, we shall also be encouraging them to seek ways of generating extra revenue from the non-National Health Service use of appropriate facilities, such as selling refreshments to visitors and advertising.

Cold Weather Payments

98. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how cold weather payments to retirement pensioners will be affected by the proposed changes in the social security system.

Mr. Scott: I announced to my hon. Friend the Member for Fylde (Mr. Jack) on 26 October at column 184 that we intend to provide for a regulated system of help towards the cost of heating in cold weather. This will be paid as a right in a similar way to the arrangements for maternity and funeral payments under the social fund. Precise details will be considered in the light of this winter's experience.

Computerisation

99. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress being made on the Government's programme of computerisation of the social security system.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in the computerisation of pensions and benefits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The operational strategy, the Department's plan for the computerisation of the social security system, continues to meet its targets. Nearly all social security offices have been equipped with microcomputers to assess new claims to benefit and assist with other administrative tasks. The programme to adapt them to deal with income support assessment and book-keeping for the social fund from April 1988 is on schedule.

Unemployment benefit offices have been provided with on-line terminals linking them to the unemployment benefit mainframe computers at Reading and Livingston, enabling staff to call up information held centrally. This has improved the service to the public.

The family credit project—which will make this new benefit the first to have a fully computerised assessment and payment system when it comes into operation in April 1988—remains on target.

The Department is also on schedule to begin, from October 1989, a rolling programme of implementation of three major projects: the local office project — which computerises income support; the retirement pensions project — which will provide on-line assessments and awards of pensions; and the departmental central index —which provides a central record-keeping facility. The implementation programme is scheduled for completion by April 1992.

Further in the future, a project exists to provide on-line assessment and award of unemployment benefit. It is also planned to extend the local office project to cover incapacity benefits.

Leicestershire District Health Authority

101. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make a statement on the resources to be made available to the Leicestershire district health authority, following the announcements on public expenditure in the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Newton: Responsibility for the allocation of resources to districts lies with regional health authorities which decide allocations in the light of their allocations from the Department. I expect the regional allocations for 1988-89 to be announced next month.

Drugs

102. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the increase in real terms in expenditure on National Health Service drugs between 1980-81 and 1986-87.

Mr. Newton: The increase in real terms of expenditure on National Health Service drugs in England between 1980-81 and 1986-87 was 27 per cent.

Voluntary Services

104. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set aside money from the social services budget to finance revenue costs of money raised by voluntary efforts.

Mrs. Currie: Whilst I very much welcome the part played by voluntary bodies in raising funds, I do not believe it would be appropriate to pre-empt local decisions on priorities by health authorities by centrally pre-empting resources in this way. We encourage voluntary and fund-raising groups to discuss their proposed activities with local health authorities before commencement in order to clarify (in the case of equipment or buildings) donated issues such as ownership, insurance, maintenance, replacement and staffing.

Residential Care

105. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are taken by his Department to monitor the quality of care provided for recipients of supplementary benefit in residential care.

Mr. Portillo: In England and Wales voluntary and privately-run residential care homes with more than three places have to be registered with local social service authorities under the Registered Homes Act 1984. Authorities are obliged to inspect registered homes at least once every 12 months and can do so at any time of the day or night without prior notice. The Residential Care Homes Regulations 1984 specify the services and facilities to be provided including staffing. In addition, a code of practice on residential care, "Home Life", has been drawn up by an independent working party and endorsed by my right hon. Friend and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. The code promotes a framework to help registration authorities in their registration, inspection and support functions, and assists those running homes to clarify their aims and objectives. Much emphasis is placed in the code upon the quality of care received by residents. The registration and inspection system for homes in Scotland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Well Woman Centres

106. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will issue guidelines to health authorities encouraging the establishment of well woman centres.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 27 October at columns 246-47.

Laboratory Staff

107. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what reports he has received on the problem of retaining qualified medical laboratory scientific staff within the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) earlier today.

Pensioners

109. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of retirement pensioners in receipt of supplementary benefit or housing benefit supplement who receive assistance through housing benefit with charges for heating, hot water, cooking and lighting.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not collected centrally on which such an estimate could be based but evidence from a study made in 1986 by the social policy research unit at York university suggests that 90,000 claimants receiving supplementary benefit also receive assistance through housing benefit with charges for heating, hot water, cooking and lighting. At May 1986 some 39 per cent. of housing benefit claimants who also received supplementary benefit were retirement pensioners.

St. Thomas' Hospital

111. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on the closure of 137 acute beds at St. Thomas' hospital in Lambeth; and whether he will take action to reverse the closures.

Mrs. Currie: About 20 letters have been received concerning the closure of acute beds at St. Thomas' hospital, including those forwarded by hon. Members.

West Lambeth health authority is implementing a package of measures, including some which will generate more income, and many which do not directly affect patient care. Health authorities are required to live within their budgets, and Ministers recognise the difficulty of reconciling what appears to be infinite demand for finite resources. Difficult decisions have to be taken on competing priorities, and we believe these decisions are best taken at local level in the light of local circumstances.

Cancer Screening

113. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what further measures the Government are taking to ensure the establishment of an effective national breast cancer screening service by 1990.

Mrs. Currie: In addition to the extra £6 million made available this year, the Government's cash plans for the next three years include provision for the build-up of the breast cancer screening service and are sufficient to meet its continuing costs.

The financial allocations to regional health authorities for 1988-89 are still being considered, and I shall let my hon. Friend have the details when a decision has been reached.

Appeals Tribunals

114. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has plans to seek to deal with the backlog in the appeals tribunals.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike) on 21 October at columns 797-98.

Coronary Heart Disease

115. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaths and lost working days are caused by coronary heart disease.

Mrs. Currie: In 1986 there were 148,121 deaths from ischaemic heart disease (coronary heart disease) in England. In the period 1 April 1985 to 5 April 1986 in Great Britain there were 38·8 million days of certified incapacity for sickness and invalidity benefit where the cause of incapacity was ischaemic heart disease. This total excludes periods of incapacity covered by statutory sick pay (in 1985-86 a maximum of eight weeks in the tax year) and all working days lost by certain groups of workers who do not claim these benefits. It includes days of incapacity for which invalidity benefit was claimed by men aged 65 to 69 and women aged 60 to 64.

In 1986, the number of deaths from ischaemic disease in Great Britain was 176,805, and 181,491 throughout the United Kingdom.

Single Payments

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the expenditure for each individual office of his Department on single payments for each of 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is being collated and will be placed in the Library shortly.

Alcohol-related Diseases

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a breakdown of the £2 billion cost to the health budget resulting from alcohol-related diseases.

Mrs. Currie: The £2 billion cost figure is derived from research carried out by the Education and Science Research Council's addiction research centre at the University of Hull and the centre for health economics at the University of York. The research has estimated, on a tentative and conservative basis, that the total resource costs of alcohol misuse in England and Wales amount to £1·846 billion, at 1985 prices. A breakdown of this total is as follows:

The Resource Costs of Alcohol Misuse in England and Wales (1985 prices)

(a) Sickness absence	723·55
(b) Housework services	48·60

(b) Non-psychiatric hospitals, in-patient costs (alcohol psychosis, alcohol dependence syndrome, alcoholic cirrhosis and liver disease)	8·04
(c) Other alcohol-related in-patient costs	82·09
(d) General practice costs	2·1
3. Society's Response to Alcohol-Related Problems
(a) Expenditure by national alcohol bodies	0·33

(b) Police involvement in road traffic offences (including judiciary and insurance administration)	14·53
(c) Drink related court cases	18·14
Total (excluding unemployment and premature death)	1,026·78
Total (including unemployment and premature death)	1,846·83

Social Fund

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will remove beds and cookers from the requirements covering budgeting loans under the new social fund regulations; and if he will instead provide grants for those items.

Mr. Scott: The social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library, sets out the directions and guidance for social fund officers in relation to budgeting and crisis loans and community care grants; these payments are not governed by regulations. Grants may be considered for beds and cookers where the circumstances of the case satisfy the major community care criteria of helping people in priority groups to move into, or stay in, the community. For others, we believe loans for items such as beds and cookers are right in principle. Loan provide greater equity between income support beneficiaries and others on low incomes, who have to budget for major items of expenditure for themselves; and make better use the resources available.

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to monitor the recruitment, training and performance of social fund officers to ensure that the qualifications, salary and job support for these posts is commensurate with the degree of responsibility and stress inherent in the job.

Mr. Scott: Guidance has been issued to local office managers about the selection of social fund staff from existing DHSS officers.

There will be a comprehensive training programme for staff selected to become social fund officers which is designed to enable them to carry out the full range of their duties.

It is intended to monitor the quality of decision making following the introduction of phase 2 of the social fund, but the detailed arrangements for this have yet to be finalised.

NHS (Consultants)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has to make consultants' contracts more explicit in the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans at present to change consultants' contracts.

Southend General Hospital

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has now received from the general public about the proposal by the North East Thames regional health authority to close the radiotherapy unit at Southend general hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have received a total of 29,500 letters from members of the public, together with three petitions about the proposed closure of the radiotherapy department at Southend hospital.

Peto Institute

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he has sent any officials to the Peto institute in Budapest to investigate the help given by conductive education to those suffering from Parkinson's disease, multiple sclerosis, the effects of strokes, and brain damage after road accidents;

(2) from which individuals or organisations external to his Department he has sought advice about the value of conductive education and if he will indicate in each case what information he has as to whether the source of the advice has visited the Peto institute in Budapest;

(3) how many requests he has received for his Department to support the research project into conductive education being carried out by Birmingham university; who, external to his Department, gave advice on the project; and what information he has as to whether they had visited the Peto institute in Budapest;

(4) how much money has been provided by his Department to support research into conductive education as practised by the Peto institute in Budapest, or into its provision.

Mrs. Currie: Since October 1986 we have received approximately 70 letters in support of conductive education, a number of which contained requests for support for the project being undertaken in Birmingham. The Department of Education and Science has agreed to make £326,000 available over a period of five years in support of an evaluation by Birmingham university of the Birmingham project. We sought advice on the evaluation from academic referees, whose help is always given under a guarantee of anonymity. We have also received informed views from a number of people, some of whom have visited the Peto institute, including several hon. Members. Against that background, we have taken the view that no additional purpose would be served at this stage by sending officials to visit the Peto institute in Budapest. However, we shall review the position in light of the survey we are funding jointly with the Department of Education and Science, currently being undertaken by the Spastics Society, of the extent to which some aspects of conductive education are being used in this country.

Road Accidents

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated number of adults in Britain suffering from (a) Parkinson's disease, (b) multiple sclerosis, (c) the effects of strokes and (d) brain damage after road accidents.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that no information is available centrally to enable firm estimates to be made. However, the right hon. Member may wish to refer to a recent article by Dr. D. T. Wade and Dr. R. Langton Hewer in "International Rehabilitation Medicine" (1987; volume 8, No. 3 pp 129-137), on the epidemiology of some neurological diseases with special reference to work load in the National Health Service, of which a copy has been placed in the Library. This suggests that it is reasonable to assume a prevalence of 160 per 100,000 population for Parkinson's disease; 100 per 100,000 population for multiple sclerosis; 600 per 100,000 population for stroke, with 360 per 100,000 being disabled; and 300 per 100,000 population for disabled survivors of head injury (from all causes). The nature and degree of disability involved will of course vary widely.

Retirement Age

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his current estimate of the net cost to public funds of introducing a system of flexible retirement age for men and women alike between the ages of 60 and 65 years on the lines of the earlier Select Committee on Social Services recommendation and of the private Member's Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Eastleigh in 1983.

Mr. Scott: It is extremely difficult to estimate the cost of such a scheme, because the cost depends very much on the extent to which individuals opt for abated pension before age 63, the precise arrangements for abatement and interaction with other benefits. The latest estimate, based on 1985/86 benefit rates, is that the net annual cost to public funds of equalising pension age at 63 would be of the order of £800 million. An interdepartmental group of officials is currently re-examining the economic assumptions on which the estimated costs are based.

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Redcar (Miss Mowlam), Official Report, 27 October 1987, column 245, Her Majesty's Government began their examination of the social and economic implications of proposals for equalising the age of eligibility between men and women for the basic state retirement pension; when they expect to reach conclusions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Work on reappraising the cost and economic implications of changes in pension age has been proceeding since 1986, together with a general consideration of various options. We expect that conclusions will be reached in 1988.

Disabled People

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to follow up his statement of 27 October, Official Report, column 191, that he would seek a way of targeting more effectively benefit for disabled people after April 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in safeguarding the position of severely disabled people who would have been eligible for additional payments under the existing social security legislation but who will not be entitled to such benefits under the new legislation if their first application is made after April 1988.

Mr. Scott: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys has undertaken a major survey into the numbers, needs and circumstances of disabled people, the first results of which will be published next year. Furthermore, the arrangments for the community care of severely disabled people and others, are currently under review by Sir Roy Griffiths. I understand that he intends to present his recommendations to the Secretary of State early in the new year. The effect of the income support scheme on the disabled will be considered in the light of these reports.

Agency Staff

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what controls his Department exercises over the fees that hospital authorities may pay to agency nurses; what consideration he is giving to applying similar restrictions in the case of agency doctors; and how soon he expects to reach a decision on the matter.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, South-West (Mrs. Bottomley) and my hon. Friend the Member for Windsor and Maidenhead (Dr. Glyn) on 23 November.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many nurses are currently engaged within the National Health Service, who are employed by agencies, or who are otherwise covered by contracts of employment with the service.

Mr. Newton: The number of agency nursing and midwifery staff employed in the National Health Service in England at 30 September 1986 was 5,450 whole-time equivalents. In addition, at the same date, health authorities employed 4,220 WTE bank nursing and midwifery staff on a causal basis.

Christmas Bonus

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give consideration to extending the Christmas bonuses scheme to include lone parents on supplementary benefit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: There are no plans to extend the Christmas bonus to further groups of social security beneficiaries.

Elderly People

Mr. Crowther: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what increase has occurred in the number of people aged 75 years and over in the population of England in the five years up to the last date for which figures are available; and what increase has taken place in the number of places in local authority homes for the elderly in the same period.

Mrs. Currie: As at mid-1986, the latest date for which information is available, the estimated number of people aged 75 and over in England was 3·1 million; the figure for mid-1981 was 2·8 million. As at 31 March 1985, the earliest date for which information is available, there were 102,500 places in local authority homes for the elderly; the figure for 31 March 1986 was 101,500.

Further information on residential accommodation for the elderly and younger disabled is contained in the Department's publications "Residential Accommodation for Elderly and for Younger Physically Handicapped People — RA/86/2" and "Residential Accommodation for the Elderly and for Younger Physically Handicapped People Local Authority Supported Residents — RA/86/1" copies of which are in the Library.

Benefits (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of outstanding claims for social security benefits in the Leeds, West offices of his Department on the latest available date; and what were the figures for the same month in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Details of the number of claims outstanding at the two offices concerned are shown in the following table.

	25 October 1983	23 October 1984	22 October 1985	21 October 1986	20 October 1987
Leeds, North West

Retirement Pension	91	205	147	165	127
Supplementary Benefit	198	174	308	241	263

Figures prior to 1983 are no longer available. SDA was introduced from 29 November 1984 but no figures were kept before June 1986 for the number of severe disablement allowance claims outstanding.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many appeals against decisions relating to single payments for people on supplementary benefit are currently being dealt with by the Leeds, West offices of his Department; and how many were made in each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: On 20 November 1987 Leeds, West ILO had 14 appeals against decisions on supplementary benefit single payments where the appeal had been forwarded to the local social security appeal tribunal but a submission by the adjudication officer on the appeal had not yet been made. An adjudication officer's submission had been forwarded to the local social security appeal tribunal in respect of a further 191 single payment appeals and these appeals are either awaiting a hearing or notification of the tribunal decision.

I regret that equivalent figures for each year since 1979 are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many single payments for people on supplementary benefit have been made by the Leeds, West offices of his Department in each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Portillo: Two of the Department's local offices serve the Leeds, West area, Leeds North-West and Leeds, West. Information is given for the period from May 1983 to April 1987 in the table. Information for the period 1979 to April 1983 is not available.

1987-88[3]	5,346	3,396

[1] The figures are given for the year May to April.
[2] The figures for 1985-86 and 1986-87 are provisional and subject to amendment.
[3] The figures for the year 1987-88 are for the period up to 20 October 1987. They are also provisional and subject to amendment.

Computer Network

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of jobs that would be lost throughout his Department if the proposed privatisation of its computer network takes place; and what is his estimate of the costs involved.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 5 November, at column 869.

Family Planning

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what financial support is being given by his Department to the Family Planning Association and Brook advisory centres; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The grants to both organisations are being reviewed for the three years ending 31 March 1990. The Family Planning Association will receive £130,000 per annum from the Department towards its headquarters administrative expenditure and regional activities and financial support will also be provided by the health departments in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The DHSS grant for the last three-year period was £115,000 per annum.

In the current financial year an additional grant of £7,960 is being given for a specific FPA initiative in running pilot training courses in five health authorities on the AIDS aspects of the work of family planning staff, and additional sums for AIDS related work will be considered if the FPA bring forward suitable proposals. Financial assistance for the training of FPA and Brook advisory centres staff on AIDS was provided in the last financial year.

For the period 1987-90 Brook will receive £45,000 per annum towards its headquarters administrative costs, including the education and information activities designed to encourage responsible attitude to personal relationships among young people under 25 and the co-ordination of the local Brook centres working directly with young people. The grant for the last three-year period was £35,000 pa. The conditions attaching to these organisations' grants, in relation to expenditure, activities and liaison with Government Departments, will continue to apply.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 25 November 1987

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Small Claims

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Attorney-General if he will announce the result of the consultation process initiated by the consultation paper No. 2, "Small Claims"; and if he will raise the limit of claims to be dealt with by small claims courts from £500 to £1,000.

The Attorney-General: The Civil Justice Review Body is due to report to my noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor on the review as a whole early in 1988. It would not be appropriate for me to predict now the outcome on a particular matter.

Common Hold

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what action he proposes to take following the publication of the Law Commission "Report on Common Hold".

The Attorney-General: The working group report Cm. 179 to which the hon. Member refers was published by the Law Commission as recently as July last. A decision on implementation will be taken when the recommendations have been fully considered.

Nevada Buildings, Lancashire

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Attorney-General if the Crown Prosecution Service will prosecute Nevada Buildings of Nelson, Lancashire, for allegedly taking money under false pretences in relation to the supply of garden outbuildings; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: No allegation against that company has been made to the Crown Prosecution Service. The question of its prosecution by the Crown Prosecution Service therefore does not arise.

TRANSPORT

Air Traffic Controllers

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on (a) the maximum and (b) the average retirement age of air traffic controllers in (i) the United States of America, (ii) Canada, (iii) Australia, (iv) New Zealand and (v) each EEC country.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Information on average retirement ages is not available. The maximum retirement ages where known are as follows:

65—Republic of Ireland, Luxembourg, Canada, Eurocontrol.
60—United States, United Kingdom.
55—Belgium, France, Netherlands.
53—Federal Republic of Germany.

Bus Services (Bexley)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any representations concerning alterations to bus services within the London borough of Bexley.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a number of representations on two aspects of London Regional Transport's proposed local route network in Bexley. Decisions on the routeing of bus services are a matter for LRT, within the framework of statutory consultation.

Roads (Expenditure)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the level of expenditure in constant value terms in motorway investment and trunk road maintenance for 1979 and now; and what lengths of motorway were in use and being constructed in each of those years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information requested is as follows:

	1979-80 £ million	1987-88 £ million
Expenditure on new construction	546	600
Expenditure on capital maintenance (including bridges)	104	230
	miles	miles
Length of motorway in use	1,300	1,586
Length of motorway under construction	106	16

Expenditure figures are at constant 1985-86 prices, and are for motorways and all-purpose trunk roads combined.

The lengths of motorway provided are as at 1 April 1979 for 1979-80 and as 1 November 1987 for 1987-88.

Motorways (Safety)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress he has made in improving the safety of contra-flow sections on motorways.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Contra-flow crossovers have been made longer and smoother so that vehicles can negotiate them more easily and safely. The Department is discussing with the police the use of mandatory speed limits at countraflow sites. We are evaluating the video monitoring of major roadworks to allow earlier detection and warning of breakdowns and accidents. The Transport and Road Research Laboratory has recently commissioned a further study of accidents at contraflows.

M6 (Maintenance)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total annual cost for maintenance on the M6 for each year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Figures for expenditure on structural and routine maintenance to the M6 are given in the table. They do not include the cost of bridge or lighting maintenance.

King's Cross (Fire)

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give further details about the arrangements for the formal investigation into the King's Cross fire.

Mr. Channon: Following the appointment of Mr. Desmond Fennell OBE QC to head the formal investigation into the King's Cross fire, I have today appointed Major Anthony G. B. King, inspecting officer of railways from my Department, Dr. Alan F. Roberts, director of the explosion and flame laboratory at the Health and Safety Executive, Sir Peter Darby CBE, lately HM chief inspector of fire services for England and Wales, and Professor Bernard Crossland CBE emeritus professor of mechanical engineering at Queen's university Belfast, as assessors to the formal investigation.

A preliminary meeting of the formal investigation will be held, before Mr. Fennell, at 10.30 am on Wednesday 2 December 1987 in Church house, Great Smith street, London, SW1. Any persons or their representatives who were involved in the fire or who may have relevant information that they wish to put before the investigation are invited to attend. Advertisements are being placed in the press.

Maritime Transport (Italy-Algeria)

Mr. Michael Morris: To ask the Secretary of Transport if he will make a statement on the European Community's decision concerning the agreement on maritime transport between Italy and Algeria.

Mr. David Mitchell: An EC Council decision was adopted on 17 September concerning an agreement on maritime transport covering cargo trade between Italy and Algeria. The decision allows Italy to ratify the agreement on the understanding that both countries are clear that the agreement will be implemented in accordance with Community law and that Italy takes steps to ratify the United Nations code of conduct for liner conferences as soon as possible. The decision provides for the Community to review the position within a year.

The agreement had been notified under EC regulation No. 4055/86 agreed in December 1986, applying the principle of freedom to provide shipping services to, from and between member states. This regulation prohibits new bilateral cargo-sharing arrangements between member states and third countries from 1 January 1987 except in exceptional circumstances, where liner shipping would not otherwise have an effective opportunity to ply for trade to and from the third country concerned. Italy reported such circumstances to the Community.

In referring the proposed decision to the Select Committee on European Legislation my noble Friend the Minister for Aviation and Shipping stated that he proposed that it should be adopted without waiting for the completion of the scrutiny process. I regret that this was necessary because unless it were adopted by 17 September, Italy would be free to ratify the agreement without taking account of the Council's views. This was the first notification of a proposed agreement under the regulation and it was important that the final phase of the Community's shipping policy be seen to be respected.

The Select Committee on European Legislation has now completed its scrutiny and while considering that it raised issues of political importance, and noting the reasons for its adoption before scrutiny, has not recommended it for debate.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total amount of vehicle excise licence duty paid annually by vehicle owners for each year for which figures are available since 1957.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Revenue from Vehicle Excise Duty (net of refunds) for the United Kingdom is as follows:

Year	£ million (cash)
1975-76	765
1976-77	814
1977-78	1,045
1978-79	1,086
1979-80	1,162
1980-81	1,360
1981-82	1,618
1982-83	1,840
1983-84	1,997
1984-85	2,264
1985-86	2,426
1986-87	2,520
1987-88	2,574

Comparable figures for periods before 1975-76 are not available.

PRIME MINISTER

Grant-related Expenditure

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to ensure that the setting of grant-related expenditure assessment by the Secretary of State for the Environment, and the setting of expenditure levels by the Secretary of State for the Home Department, for fire and civil defence authorities, is co-ordinated, and that both sums have regard to approved establishment levels, including support staff, turn out, special services, pension costs and fire prevention work.

The Prime Minister: I am satisfied that such co-ordination takes place. Grant-related expenditure assessments are required for the purpose of distributing block grant calculated on principles applicable to all authorities; expenditure levels for the joint fire and civil defence authorities are set as part of the precept limitation process and are intended to reflect the particular circumstances of individual authorities.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prison Governors' Association

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now recognise the Prison Governors' Association.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering the new association's request for recognition, which was received last month. Consideration of the request will inevitably take some time; there are a number of factors to be examined, and the views of other interested parties must be taken into account.

False Police Identity Cards

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to increase the maximum sentence for possession of a false Ministry of Defence police identity card.

Mr. John Patten: Adequate maximum penalties are already available to the courts.

Bowling Green Hostel, Carlisle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of (a) violent crimes and (b) other crimes per year since 1977 committed by residents of the Bowling Green probation hostel in Carlisle during their time at the hostel.

Mr. John Patten: The available information is as follows:

	Violent crimes	Other crimes
1984	Nil	9
1985	2	13
1986	1	11
[1]1987	Nil	10

[1] To 30 June.

Prisons (Security)

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures are being contemplated to reduce the number of prison disturbances and escapes.

Mr. John Patten: All such incidents are the subject of review and debriefing; lessons learnt inform policy, guidance and procedures at all levels. Our main programme for the reduction of overcrowding and the improvement of physical conditions through the prison building and refurbishment schemes, together with new conditions of service and working methods under fresh start, will underpin the more specific measures taken following the report of Her Majesty's chief inspector of prisons on the major disturbances in spring 1986.

Michael Ryan

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley as to what weapons the late Michael Ryan held illegally.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I will write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Advertisements

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek powers to control the publications of advertisements which encourage the commission of criminal offences such as smuggling, the productions of bombs, or the illegal purchase of firearms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: It is an offence to solicit or incite another to commit a crime, whether or not the solicitation or incitement has any effect. A person who publishes an advertisement inciting any of the activities mentioned is thus liable to be charged with a criminal offence. We have no plans to introduce any further form of restriction.

Fire and Civil Defence Authorities

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to calculate expenditure levels for metropolitan fire and civil defence authorities for 1988-89 by reference to original respective redetermination submissions for 1987-88, updated for inflation and other committed expenditure.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set out the figures for (a) expenditure levels and (b) grant-related expenditure assessments for each metropolitan fire and civil defence authority; if he will list the factors which account for the difference between the two figures for each such authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest provisional figures for the seven joint fire and civil defence authorities' expenditure levels (ELs) and grant-related expenditure assessments (GREs) for financial year 1988-89, are as follows:—

Fire and civil defence authority	1988-89 GRE (Provisional) £ million	1988-89 EL (Provisional) £ million
Greater Manchester	38·290	46·799
Merseyside	29·739	31·617
South Yorkshire	17·970	22·314
Tyne and Wear	18·749	22·649
West Midlands	40·534	42·696
West Yorkshire	27·294	36·489
London	142·504	166·775

GRE assessments and expenditure levels have different functions and purposes, and are formulated on different bases. GRE assessments are the method by which block grant is distributed on the basis of principles common to all authorities. Expenditure levels are set as part of the precept limitation process and are intended to reflect the particular circumstances of individual authorities.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following the cancellation of 16 November meeting, he or one of the Ministers in his Department will meet a delegation of representatives of the fire services sub-committee of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss fire service funding levels for 1988-89.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are seeking a mutually convenient date on which to hold the postponed meeting, the purpose of which is to discuss expenditure levels and grant related expenditure assessments for the fire and civil defence authorities.

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy towards the purchase of equipment from Electronic Data Systems.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office's procurement policy, which applies to all potential contractors, including Electronic Data Systems, is to seek best value for money for competent suppliers.

SCOTLAND

Road Accident Statistics

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of (a) fatalities and (b) cases of serious injuries caused by road traffic accidents in each regional authority in each of the past five years.

Private Operations

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the total number of private operations for (a) the removal of eye cataracts and (b) joint replacement within the Grampian health board area in 1986, together with equivalent figures for 1985, 1980, 1975 and 1970.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not available centrally.

Schools (Easterhouse)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many teachers of mathematics, sciences, physical education, history and modern languages there are in schools in the Easterhouse area of Glasgow;

(2) how many posts for teachers of mathematics, physical education, modern languages and sciences have been vacant for more than two months in the schools of the Easterhouse area of Glasgow;

(3) how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools there are in the Easterhouse area of Glasgow;

(4) how many children are in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in the Easterhouse area of Glasgow.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information on schools in Easterhouse can be obtained from Strathclyde regional council.

Community Organisations (Easterhouse)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met representatives of community organisations from Easterhouse in Glasgow.

Mr. Rifkind: I have received no requests for such a meeting.

Family Planning Association

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial support is being given by his Department to the Family Planning Association; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend has decided to renew the grant awarded to the Family Planning Association under section 16(B) of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 for the three years to 31 March 1990 at a rate of £14,000 per annum. The grant is intended to meet part of the costs of the association's information, education and resource centre in Glasgow.

Still Births

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the expected incidence of still births in Scotland per year; if he has any evidence of any unusual geographical or temporal concentration of still births in any recent year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 23 November 1987]: There is no figure for the expected number of still births per year. The table following shows still birth rates per 1,000 births in Scotland and health board areas in recent years.

Still birth rates per 1,000 births (live and still) by Health Board Area, Scotland, 1981 to 1986

I have no evidence of any unusual geographical or temporal concentration of still births.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind [holding answer 17 November 1987]: The only residential accommodation provided for Scottish Office Ministers is my official residence at Bute house, Edinburgh which is used primarily for receptions and other formal Government occasions. The running cost figures for Bute house (rent, rates, fuel and maintenance) are as follows:

1980-81	37,000
1981-82	9,000
1982-83	11,000
1983-84	14,000
1984-85	12,000
1985-86	52,000
1986-87	102,000

The figures for 1980-81, 1985-86 and 1986-87 reflect the incidence of major works of maintenance.

Residential accommodation continues to be provided for prison staff on a diminishing scale. The available figures for the net running costs are:

1981-82	184,000
1982-83	258,000
1983-84	215,000
1984-85	137,000
1985-86	199,000
1986-87	94,000

The information in respect of other civil servants is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost and on an incomplete basis.

Rural Areas (EC Assistance)

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek European regional development fund assistance for rural areas, as proposed in the European Commission's framework proposal on the reform of the Community Structural Fund (Cmnd. (87)376).

Mr. Alan Clark: I have been asked to reply.

The Commission's proposal for a framework regulation is currently the subject of detailed examination and debate. Proposals for implementing regulations including that for ERDF have yet to be made, and overall implementation is in any event not proposed before 1989. Until then, the current ERDF regulation remains in force and applications for assistance for rural areas will continue to be submitted within the terms of that regulation.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Science Graduates

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the number of science graduates leaving university in 1987 and 1986; and if he will indicate how these figures compare with those for 1987 and 1976.

Mr. Jackson: There was a total of 17,300 first degree science graduates leaving universities in the United Kingdom in 1986, compared with 14,000 in 1976, excluding medicine, engineering and agriculture. In 1986 there were also 8,600 science first degree graduates from polytechnics and colleges in Great Britain. Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Scottish Universities

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the funding of Scottish universities since the announcement of the Government's spending plans in the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Jackson: None.

Overseas Students

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list, for each year since 1978 the total fees paid to British educational establishments by students from (a) Australia, (b) Bangladesh, (c) Canada, (d) East Africa, (e) Hong Kong, (f) India, (g) New Zealand, (h) Pakistan, (i) South Africa, (j) South America, (k) Sri Lanka, (l) the United States of America, (m) West Africa, (n) the West Indies and (o) Zimbabwe;

(2) if he will list, for each year since 1978, how many students have attended British educational establishments from (a) Australia, (b) Bangladesh, (c) Canada, (d) East Africa, (e) Hong Kong, (f) India, (g) New Zealand, (h) Pakistan, (i) South Africa, (j) South America, (k) Sri Lanka, (l) the United States of America, (m) West Africa, (n) the West Indies and (o) Zimbabwe.

Mr. Jackson: Information on the number of students from the specified countries in universities, polytechnics and colleges in the United Kingdom is shown in the table. The recommended overseas fee levels for such students is also shown in the table. Information on the actual fees paid is not collected centrally.

Primary and Secondary Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he takes to discover the number of surplus places in primary and secondary schools in a local authority which has put up to him a proposal for school reorganisation.

Mr. Dunn: It is for local education authorities to provide details where appropriate of the number of surplus places in the schools affected by statutory reorganisation proposals. Where this information is not provided, LEAs are asked to supply it.

University of Wales

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what information he has as to the income of each of the constituent colleges of the University of Wales from sources other than Government grants during the last year for which figures are available;

(2) what information he has as to the income of each university in England and the University of Wales from sources other than Government grants during the last year for which figures are available;

(3) what information he has as to the proportion of the income of each of the constituent colleges of the University of Wales which came from sources other than Government grant during the last year for which figures are available;

(4) what information he has as to the proportion of the income of each of the English universities and the University of Wales which came from sources other than Government grant during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to tables 3 and 4 in volume 3 of "University Statistics 1985-86", a copy of which is in the Library.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the officers of the University of Wales to discuss the future of higher education in Wales.

Mr. Jackson: No.

Student Grants

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning the levels of grants to students in higher and further education.

Mr. Jackson: Taking into account recent representations to the student support review, as well as other written representations of a general character, the number received over the last six months is about 100. I have also had discussions on student support, at my own instigation, with representations of the National Union of Students, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and the Committee of Directors of Polytechnics.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the cost of the investment programme for the electricity supply industry to the year 1990; how the programme is made up; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: The industry's investment programme for the years in question is comprised as follows:

£ million outturn prices

	1987-88	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91
CEGB	673·0	780·0	970·0	1,530·0
Area Boards	668·0	752·9	759·4	799·4
Total	1,341·0	1,532·9	1,729·4	2,329·4

The CEGB expenditure on new generation projects includes the costs of completing the existing programme of AGR stations, the costs of Sizewell B, and a provision for the initial costs of new coal and nuclear stations for which approval has not yet been granted.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much of the electricity supply industry's investment programme is renewal of existing assets and how much is to meet new demand.

Mr. Parkinson: The industry's investment programme represents a comprehensive programme designed to meet new load, to serve existing demand more economically and to replace old plant. Many projects are undertaken for a combination of these reasons. It is not feasible to divide up the expenditure in the way suggested.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the assumption for inflation built into the estimates for the investment programme for the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: The industry has assumed general inflation of 4 per cent. for the year ending 31 March 1989, and 5 per cent. per annum thereafter.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy by how much electricity prices will have increased in the three years to April 1988.

Mr. Parkinson: The last substantive increase in electricity tariffs was in April 1985, when domestic tariffs rose by an average of 4·3 per cent. and industrial tariffs by an average of 4·9 per cent. Tariff increases in April 1986 for domestic consumers were removed, and, in the case of industrial consumers more than offset, by reductions later in the year. There has been no increase in 1987.

The net effect of these changes has been to reduce the average real price by domestic consumers by 6·9 per cent. between April 1985 and October 1987. The corresponding figure for industrial consumers is a reduction of 10·6 per cent. (from Q2 1985 to Q2 1987) Assuming that inflation continues at its current level of around 4 per cent. per annum until the end of the financial year, even after the next electricity tariff increase has taken effect, prices will be no higher in real terms than in April 1985.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to raise at the next Council of European Energy Ministers, the implications for the future of European civil nuclear collaboration of the outcome of the Italian referendum result on nuclear power.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if the contractual arrangements for United Kingdom participation in the Superphenix project for a fast reactor, presently held by the Central Electricity Generating Board, include any stipulation on the proportional ownership by participating countries of the electricity output from the Superphenix fast breeder reactor; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I shall ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what agreement has been made with other partners in the European fast reactor collaborative programme over the expected payback time in electricity production in proportion to the respective investments made by each country in the programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The return on the utilities' investment in future fast reactor plant will be a matter for the utilities.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he has any plans to discuss the implications of the recent Italian referendum on nuclear power for Italian involvement in the European fast reactor collaboration programme, including Superphenix, with the Italian Ministry for Industry; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has any plans to discuss with representatives of ENEL the implications for its continued participation in the European fast reactor consortium of the result of the Italian referendum on nuclear power on 9 November;

(3) what assessment his Department has made of the implications of the recent Italian referendum on nuclear power for the continued participation of Italy in the European fast breeder reactor consortium;

(4) what consideration has been given to possible increases in the United Kingdom contribution to the research and development programme for the European fast breeder reactor development, in the light of the Italian referendum on 9 November, requiring Ente Nationale Per L'Energia, the Italian consortium partner, to withdraw from its share partnership in NERSA, the fast reactor development organisation.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. The Italian Government are themselves now considering the implications of the results of the recent referendum.

"Land for Energy Development"

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what account his Department has taken of the report "Land for Energy Development" in reaching decisions concerning the location and construction of power stations in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Spicer: The siting of power stations in England and Wales is in the first instance a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. Questions concerning the siting of power stations in Scotland and Northern Ireland should be addressed to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

WALES

NHS Tendering

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list by each Welsh health authority the services put out to competitive tender, together with the percentage of the total budget of each authority which the tendered services represent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Information on health authority services put out to competitive tender is not held centrally other than for domestic, catering and laundry services. For this information I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 6 November 1987, at column 895.

Felinfach Creamery, Ceredigion

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans to visit Felinfach creamery in Ceredigion to discuss future policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Not at the present time.

Road Improvement (Aberaeron-Aberarth)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any plans during the next 12 months to improve the trunk road between Aberaeron and Aberarth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A scheme is in preparation to improve a section of the A487 trunk road between Aberarth and Aberaeron where a landslip has necessitated the use of traffic lights. We cannot say at this stage when work is likely to commence.

Public Rights of Way (Gwynedd)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he will take to ensure that Gwynedd county council publishes a revised definition map of public rights of way in Gwynedd, pursuant to the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The timetable for the production of the revised definitive map of public rights of way in Gwynedd is a matter for Gwynedd county council. I understand however that the definitive map showing those changes which did not attract objection will be made available for inspection by the public early in the new year.

Housing Waiting Lists

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will provide current figures of those on local authority housing waiting lists for (a) Torfaen (b) Gwent and (c) Wales.

Mr. Grist: Information about waiting lists for local authority accommodation is not held centrally.

Community Nursing Services

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will publish the report of the review of community nursing services in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I am publishing today the report of the review of community nursing services in Wales which was set up two years ago under the chairmanship of Mrs. Noreen Edwards, chairman of Gwynedd health authority. Mrs. Edwards and her review group have completed a wide-ranging examination of nursing services in the community. In doing so, they have not confined themselves to specific community nursing issues but have looked at the wider primary care setting in which such services are delivered, covering such important matters as relations with general medical practitioners and the patient's access to services. I think it appropriate, therefore, that this report should be published today alongside the Government's White Paper on primary health care so that both documents can be read in conjunction with one another.

In all, Mrs. Edwards' report contains 36 recommendations—on nursing in the community; on teamwork in primary health care; on the planning and management of primary health care; and on nurse education and training. I believe that the report is a very valuable one in the context of the public consideration of community nursing and primary care matters, upon which Wales has its own distinctive contribution to make, as the White Paper makes clear. It is my intention to consult widely on all the recommendations in the report with the exception of those concerning nurse education and training which, as the report acknowledges are covered by consideration of the UKCC's proposals in relation to Project 2000. I have arranged therefore for copies to be distributed throughout the Health Service in Wales and to the various professional groups. I have asked that their comments on the report be submitted to me within the next six months. Texts of the report have also been placed in the Library of both Houses and I have arranged for copies to be issued to all Members having constituencies in Wales.

Arrangements were made for the report's translation at the earliest possible moment, but I regret that this is not completed. However, I thought that it would be right to go ahead with publication today to keep in step with the issue of the White Paper and I hope that the Welsh version of the report will be available very soon. The separate summary of the report's conclusions and recommendations is available in both Welsh and English versions.

Job Creation

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many jobs have been created for men and how many for women in Wales in each of the last five years by new inward investment from overseas; how many of these are part-time; and what is his estimate of new jobs in the current years from overseas investment.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The information is not available in the form requested. Detailed information is available only for those projects which have benefited from regional assistance. Since 1982, a total of 235 inward investment projects promising 18,500 jobs have received job-related assistance.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Schemes

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many youth training schemes have been run by voluntary organisations for each year since 1983.

Mr. Cope: The table below shows the number of YTS schemes run by voluntary organisations in 1983-84, 1985-86, 1986-87, and at 31 October 1987. Information for 1984-85 is not available.

	Number

Hotel Staff

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the extent of recruitment of hotel staff in France, for want of people in Britain to fill full-time vacancies; and what steps his Department and the Manpower Services Commission are taking to help fill such vacancies from among the unemployed.

Mr. Lee: We believe that British hoteliers seeking staff from France do so mainly through non-official contacts, rather than the employment service. There is, therefore, no information available about the scale of recruitment. The British employment service has direct links with the French employment service, but no hotel workers have been recruited by this method in recent years. Within

Great Britain, the employment service and the Manpower Services Commission work together to help employers recruit and train the staff they need. The commission also supports initiatives by the hotel and catering industry training board to improve training and career arrangements, and funds provision of places on YTS and the job training scheme in hotel and catering occupations.

Work Permits

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been refused to foreign nationals, other than those from the EEC and the Republic of Ireland; and which were the six main countries of origin of those so refused, for each year since 1978.

Mr. Lee: This information is not collated centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

British Shipbuilders

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report the letter dated 9 November from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Pendle (Mr. Lee) to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow, regarding the payment of arrears of unemployment benefit to former employees of the British Shipbuilders group; what is the precise authority by which these payments have now been authorised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The text of the letter dated 9 November is as follows:

Dear Norman,

Thank you for your letter of 25 September about the claims for arrears of unemployment benefit by former employees of the British Shipbuilders group, one of whom is Mr. John Scott of 14 Stonehaven Road, Greenock.

I am pleased to tell you that authority has now been given to issue payments equivalent to the unemployment benefit which would have been payable to those redundant employees who, for good reason, did not claim within the statutory time limit. Procedural instructions have been issued via regional offices, and those will shortly receive payment. People who, for one reason or another, cannot be paid any arrears will have been given a written explanation.

I hope this explains the position.

John Lee

The payments referred to in the letter have been made either in accordance with the normal statutory provisions governing the payment of unemployment or supplementary benefits or delegated authority by HM Treasury. I am pleased to say that the majority of arrears payments due to former employees of the British Shipbuilders group should have been made by the end of this month.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Common Agricultural Policy

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report details of the individual cases of fraud relating to the common agricultural policy in the United Kingdom amounting to £350,000 in 1985 which were reported to the European Commission.

Mr. MacGregor: The United Kingdom notified 68 cases of CAP irregularities in 1986, most of which occurred in 1985 or earlier years, totalling some £500,000. Nearly all were failures to meet conditions of schemes, and fraud was not suspected.

There were only two significant cases where fraud might have been intended. One was a misdescription of meat for export for which £268,000 of export refunds were claimed. However, this was detected and no payment was made. The second was a fraudulent claim for monetary compensatory amounts on cattle. The £68,000 paid has been recovered.

Calves (Export)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live calves have been exported during the last 12 months; what were the corresponding figures for the last five years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Calf exports over the 12 months October 1986 to September 1987 were 309,524 head. Corresponding figures for the last five years were as follows:

October—September figures

	Number of head
1981-82	244,401
1982-83	236,970
1983-84	218,726
1984-85	165,286
1985-86	164,877

Although the level of exports is currently higher than in recent years it is similar to the level in 1980 (298,752 head) and significantly lower than in the late 1970s when it reached a peak of 420,301 head in 1978.

Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will support work within the Oslo commission on the extension of the geographical coverage of the Oslo convention so as to include internal waters behind baseline with the aim of securing effective international surveillance over all dumping activities, and so as to expedite this work with the aim of reaching agreement in principle by 1 January 1988.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: Yes. This was a United Kingdom proposal.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in his review of his Department's research and development, he will make it his policy to give priority to the research programmes concerned with pollution of the North sea.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: This Department already accords a high priority to research work under its aquatic environment programme and the level of effort is kept under review.

Mr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department is conducting research into the build-up of nitrogen and phosphorus nutrients in the coastal waters of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: Such work is already in hand.

DEFENCE

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has regarding tests by the United States Administration on a 12 warhead Trident missile; and what are the implications for the Trident missile refurbishment package in regard to the United Kingdom's deterrent.

Mr. Sainsbury: It would not be appropriate for me to comment on specific aspects of the Trident missile test programme being carried out by the United States. I can nevertheless assure the hon. Member that we remain in close touch with the United States Government about the Trident II system which the United Kingdom is purchasing from the United States and I am fully satisfied that the United Kingdom's requirements continue to be met.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a detailed breakdown of the costs of the Trident missile purchase agreement showing separately the cost of storing, maintaining and refitting replacement missiles as part of the package described in the debate in the House on 22 October, Official Report, columns 949-962.

Mr. Sainsbury: The cost of information is not broken down into the categories requested by the hon. Member. However, I can advise that under the missile processing agreement announced in 1982 the United Kingdom will pay $70 million as a contribution to the capital cost of jointly used facilities at King's bay and will meet the full cost of any additional construction investment costs at King's bay occasioned solely by United Kingdom missile processing. These costs have been taken into account in calculating the saving of £767 million arising from the decision to process missiles at King's bay.

The United Kingdom will be charged a percentage of the total King's bay running costs related to the United Kingdom share of the missile processing work load.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why he will not release information on the estimated proportion of the development and production costs of the warhead element of the Trident programme, attributable to (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the United States of America.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave on 2 November at column 607.

Army Air Corps (Beavers Replacement)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when a decision will be taken on the replacement aircraft for the Army Air Corps Beavers; and what consideration he has given to Pilatus Britten-Norman's Defender for this role.

Mr. Sainsbury: A contract has been let with Pilatus Britten-Norman to assess the suitability of Islander aircraft for this role. We hope to reach a decision on the procurement in the new year.

Office Technology

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he hopes to announce his decision on the proposed central headquarters office technology system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The aim of the corporate headquarters office technology system project is to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of the Ministry of Defence headquarters by providing secure, integrated office technology facilities to all staff. The first phase, involving the production of a detailed operational requirement (by independent consultants) was successfully completed in May. Approval was therefore given for phase 2 to proceed and four consortia of IT companies have just submitted their technical responses to the requirement. Following evaluation of these responses, we plan to invite bids for two competitive prototype systems, to be installed in two MOD headquarters buildings. Whether we proceed with phase 3 and replicate the winning system throughout MOD headquarters depends on phase 2 demonstrating both that the requirement can be met in the technical sense and that the potential benefits of phase 3 would justify the costs.

Weather Ships

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the number of weather ships attached to the meteorological service in 1979 and at the present; and if he will make a statement on the implications for surface weather forecasting, in the light of recent mis-forecasts.

Mr. Sainsbury [holding answer 19 November 1987]: A number of European nations fund ocean weather stations collaboratively under the North Atlantic ocean station agreement. In 1979 a total of nine vessels were provided and manned by Norway, the Netherlands, France, the United Kingdom and the USSR, to operate four permanent ocean weather stations under this agreement. The United Kingdom provided two ships. The NAOS programme now operates three ocean stations and the United Kingdom provides one ship.

Ocean weather stations provide only one source of offshore observations for weather forecasting. In recent years a number of other platforms have come into use including meteorological satellites, buoys and ships and aircraft on passage.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Deregulation

7. Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his Department's deregulation initiatives.

Mr. Maude: The Government are committed to reducing the burdens on business — particularly small businesses — from legislative and administrative regulation. Prime responsibility for that task lies with individual departments, but work is co-ordinated by the enterprise and deregulation unit, now located in the Department of Trade and Industry. We aim to ensure that regulation which is unnecessary is avoided or removed; that essential regulation ismade less burdensome; and that proper account of the cost to business is taken in all relevant policy decisions. My Department's own activities are of course carefully scrutinised within that programme.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the progress of his Department's deregulation initiative.

Mr. Maude: The Government's work to reduce the burdens imposed on business by legislative and administrative regulation, which is co-ordinated by the enterprise and deregulation unit in my Department, continues to make progress broadly as set out in the report to Parliament "Encouraging Enterprise" published in May this year.

Telephone Boxes

16. Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received any report from the director general of OFTEL on the quality of service at British Telecom phone boxes following OFTEL's report of 23 September.

Mr. Butcher: Not yet, though my right hon. and learned Friend and the director general discussed quality of service when they met last week. I understand that OFTEL and British Telecom expect to publish the results of their new monthly survey of call box services next week.

Electricity Charges

17. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he proposes to have any discussions with manufacturing industries regarding the implications of increased electricity charges in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend has discussed the implications of higher electricity charges with the director general of the CBI. Higher rates of return are required if the electricity supply industry is to finance the massive investment necessary in the 1990s. The effect on manufacturing industries will depend on a number of factors, including the movement of other costs.

Steel Industry

18. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the European Economic Community Commission about the future of the British steel industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I and other Ministers of the Twelve considered the Commission's proposals on the future of the European steel regime at an Industry Council on 21 September. There will be a further meeting of the Council on 8 December.

Support for Marketing Scheme

19. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his support for marketing scheme.

Mr. Butcher: The Department's support for marketing scheme assists independent firms with up to 500 employees with the costs of expert consultancy to develop or improve a strategic approach to marketing. The scheme was launched in September 1986 and by 31 March 1988 more than 1,400 projects will have been completed.

Film Industry

20. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the current state of the British film industry; and what information he has as to a number of films currently in production, or planned for production, in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butcher: Investment in film production traditionally experiences cyclical downturns, and it is presently at a lower level than in recent years. However, figures prepared by the British Film and Television Producers Association indicate that in the first 10 months of this year investment was still substantial and exceeded £100 million.

Manufacturing Industry

21. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the growth rate of output in manufacturing industry since 1979; and how this compares with comparable figures for other industrial countries.

Mr. Butcher: Between 1979 and the third quarter of 1987 manufacturing output grew at an annual average rate of 0·2 per cent. But it grew by over 6 per cent. in the latest year.

Between 1979 and the first half of 1987, manufacturing output increased at an annual average rate of 2·5 per cent. in the United States of America, 3·5 per cent. in Japan, and 1 per cent. in Germany while it fell at an average rate of 0·5 per cent. per year in France.

Trade Figures

22. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the latest trade figures.

66. Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the latest trade figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the year ending October 1987 there was a deficit of £1,053 million on the current account.

Overseas Trade Figures

23. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the implications for the economy of the October overseas trade figures.

Mr. Alan Clark: Figures for visible trade for the year to October 1987 show deficits of £5·5 billion in manufactured goods and £5·5 billion in other non-oil goods and a surplus of £3·5 billion in oil. Current estimates of invisible trade indicate a surplus of £6·5 billion for the year to October. Thus the balance on current account is a deficit of £1·1 billion. These figures are broadly consistent with the estimates for the year 1987 given in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement.

General Motors

24. Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the United Kingdom management of General Motors, and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet had an opportunity to meet the management of General Motors. I myself have met them a number of times and discussed a range of issues. I plan to visit Vauxhall's Luton site shortly for a plant tour.

Design Promotion

25. Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of the Design Council to discuss the Government's policy for the promotion of design.

Mr. Butcher: On 18 November.

National Quality Campaign

26. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the national quality campaign.

Mr. Butcher: The campaign is now well into its fifth year and, at a conservative estimate, has reached over 60,000 firms. It has played an important part in encouraging a growing number of businesses to adopt the companywide approach to quality that is vital to their competitiveness.

Financial Services Sector

27. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest available figures for the number of people in the United Kingdom financial services sector and the contribution of the industry to gross national product and the balance of payments.

Mr. Maude: The latest figures available for the banking, finance and insurance sector are for 1986 when approximately 1·2 million people were employed, some five per cent. of all United Kingdom employment. The sector accounted for about eight per cent. of the total domestic output of the United Kingdom economy. The sector contributed a surplus of over £9 billion to the balance of payments.

Japan

28. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is satisfied that trade with Japan in manufactured goods is on a fully reciprocal basis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I remain dissatisfied. Her Majesty's Government strongly support the European Commission in its representations to the Jananese authorities seeking the removal of unfair barriers to trade in particular areas.

54. Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current value of United Kingdom exports to Japan; how this compares with the same period in 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the period January to October of this year United Kingdom total exports to Japan were £1·2 billion compared with £1 billion in the same period last year, an increase of 20 per cent. Exports of manufactured goods were up by 30 per cent.

Clothing Exports

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the most recent figures available on United Kingdom exports of clothing to the European Community; and what were the figures over the comparable period in 1986.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the period January to October of this year United Kingdom exports of clothing to the other countries of the European Community were valued at £678 million compared with £527 million in the same period of last year.

Motor Car Imports

30. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for sales of imported motor cars.

Mr. Atkins: In the first 10 months of 1987 some 920,000 imported cars were registered in the United Kingdom, accounting for 51·7 per cent. of the United Kingdom market, compared with 945,000 in the corresponding period of 1986—56·4 per cent. of the United Kingdom market.

Pearson Group (Takeover)

31. Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received about any proposed takeover of the Pearson Group.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Eight letters have been received by my Department including one from the hon. Gentleman. Major newspaper mergers are regulated by special provisions in the Fair Trading Act 1973 and we shall rigorously examine all applications for consent which are put to us.

Inner City Task Forces

32. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of his Department's budget will be allocated to inner city task forces in each of the next three years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I would not wish to anticipate the outcome of the current review of priorities within the Department's programme of activities.

Design

33. Mr. Moss: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what role he sees for design in education and training.

Mr. Butcher: At primary and secondary level our objective is to encourage an appreciation of the various aspects of design and its implications for young people in their potential roles both as consumers and employees.

At tertiary level the aim is to generate among those going into industry and commerce the right kinds and mix of design skills which companies need, and managers who can exploit design in their businesses.

The training requirement is to ensure that both designers and managers continuously update their knowledge of design to help it make its full contribution to the generation of national wealth.

Telecommunications Services

34. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how competition in the market for telecommunications services has increased since 1979; and what information he has on the level of competition in the home markets of the United Kingdom's European partners.

Mr. Butcher: There has been a significant growth in competition in the United Kingdom. Competition exists at the network level following the licensing of Mercury Communications Ltd. and the two cellular radio operators. Value added and data services provided over the network have been completely liberalised. The level of competition in the home markets of other member states of the Community is described in the European Commission's Green Paper on the development of the common market for telecommunications services and equipment (COM(87)(29) final) a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Northern Region (Funding)

35. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the likely effects on the northern region of his review of regional funding.

Mr. Atkins: Future expenditure in the northern region on measures of regional support will be dependent on the volume and quality of applications under the relevent schemes.

Furniture (Flammability)

36. Mr. Holt: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, since the introduction of the furniture flammability match test, how many prosecutions have been made under the new regulations; and what percentage related to imported furniture.

Mr. Maude: The enforcement of regulations made under consumer safety and protection Acts is undertaken by local authority trading standards departments. There is no central register of prosecutions for offences under safety regulations. I have asked the local authorities co-ordinating body on trading standards to assemble information on prosecutions under the Upholstered Furniture (Safety) Regulations 1980 if only for the last 12 months, and I shall write to the hon. Member when it is available. Since the regulations apply to all domestic furniture regardless of country of origin, it is unlikely that the percentage relating to imported furniture will be shown.

Airbus

37. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has received any recent representations from the United States authorities on the financing of Airbus.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend has not received recently any direct representations from the United States authorities on the financing of Airbus. My right hon. and learned Friend and Ministers from other Airbus partner countries took part in a meeting in London on 27 October between Ambassador Yeutter, United States trade representative, and Commissioner Willy de Clercq. As a result of that meeting, joint principles and objectives were agreed for continued negotiations between the two sides on Government support in the aircraft sector.

Manufacturing Industry

38. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recently available figure for manufacturing investment.

Mr. Butcher: Provisional estimates of investment in the third quarter of 1987 — the most recent available — together with other investment figures were published on 19 November 1987 in the form of a press release. The estimate for manufacturing industry, including leased assets, is £1·9 billion at 1980 prices.

55. Mr. Wall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the rate investment by manufacturing industry; and how it compares with the rate in 1979.

Mr. Butcher: The latest year for which investment statistics are available is 1986, when investment in manufacturing industry, including leased assets, was £7·1 billion at 1980 prices. The corresponding investment in 1979 was £8·2 billion at 1980 prices. The latest investment intentions survey carried out by my Department indicates that in 1987 investment in manufacturing industry, including leased assets, will be about 4 per cent. higher than in 1986.

Manufacturing Output

39. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's assessment of the main constraints on increases in manufacturing output.

Mr. Butcher: The main constraint on increases in manufacturing output is the ability of United Kingdom manufacturers to produce the goods demanded in the market at the right price. Their growing success in achieving this is shown by the fact that manufacturing is currently growing by 5 per cent. a year.

British Telecom

40. Mr. Darling: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next hopes to meet the chairman of British Telecom; and if he will make a statememt.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I met the chairman of British Telecommunications plc last week. I have no plans to meet him again in the immediate future. We discussed a number of issues of mutual interest.

Government Task Forces

41. Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many officers of his Department are employed in Government task forces; and what is the cost.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Fifty-nine officers of my Department are employed in the Government task forces of the inner cities initiative. This number includes staff on loan from other Departments who are paid by mine. In addition, there are staff from other Departments, from the voluntary and private sectors, and from local authorities, most of whom are paid for wholly or in part by their parent bodies. The task force running costs borne by the Government are approximately £1 million for the current financial year.

CBI

42. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry; and what issues were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I last met the director general of the Confederation of British Industry on 11 November. We discussed a number of issues of interest to industry and commerce.

Exports

43. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what factors he attributes the decline in Britain's share of manufactured exports and the trend of Britain's export performance in comparison with other European manufacturing nations.

Mr. Alan Clark: The United Kingdom share of manufactured exports has not declined over the last five years. Since the middle of 1986 our exports have grown faster than those of the other European manufacturing nations.

Civil Research and Development

44. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to promote United Kingdom spending on civil research and development.

Mr. Butcher: In encouraging enterprise, the Government's main aim has been to establish a favourable economic climate with low inflation and taxes. In this way, the health and profitability of companies and their ability to increase their own spending on research and development have been facilitated. On further specific measures aimed at encouraging R and D, my right hon. and noble Friend, the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, and I are currently reviewing all aspects of our Department's innovation policy. I hope to be in a position to make a statement on the outcome of our review early in the new year.

European Space Agency

45. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the outcome of the European Space Agency meeting in The Hague.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the statement I made on 12 November at column 577.

British Steel Corporation

46. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on progress in restoring the British Steel Corporation to commercial viability.

Mr. Atkins: BSC's financial progress in recent years has been impressive. Whereas in the early 1980s BSC was making heavy losses, in 1986-87 its profit after all deductions was £178 million, representing a return of 6·5 on net assets employed at year end. Its performance in the present year is expected to continue this improvement. BSC has received no Government financial assistance since 1985 and its activities are now entirely self-financing.

Cornwall

47. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on regional development funding for Cornwall, in the light of the new objectives established by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: I am sure that Cornwall, in common with other areas, will continue to take advantage of my Department's schemes of national and regional assistance as they reflect the Department's objectives of promoting enterprise and creating prosperity.

Invisible Exports

48. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for United Kingdom invisible exports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The lastest estimates of our invisibles transactions for the 12 months ending June 1987 are as follows:

	Credits	Debits	£ million Balance
Services	25,822	20,516	+5,306
Interest, profits, dividends	48,107	42,654	+5,453
Transfers	4,182	7,157	−2,975
All invisibles	78,111	70,327	+7,784

Postal Services (Rural Areas)

49. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if when he next meets the chairman of the Post Office, he will discuss postal services in rural areas.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the Post Office from time to time to discuss matters of current interest including, as appropriate, postal services in rural areas.

Job Creation (Foreign Investment)

50. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many jobs have been created in the United Kingdom bhyforeign direct investment over the last year.

Mr. Alan Clark: From the information provided to the Invest in Britain Bureau by the companies themselves, it is estimated that more than 23,000 jobs will have been created as a result of inward investment decisions taken in the last year (the year to the third quarter of 1987). Many more jobs will have been safeguarded. Figures relating jobs to foreign direct investment flows are not available.

Alvey Programme

51. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the Alvey programme.

Mr. Butcher: We are still considering the recommendations contained in the IT86 committee report as part of our review of the priorities in the field of research and development for the Department of Trade and Industry. A statement will be made as soon as possible.

Public Purchasing Initiative

53. Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made with the implementation of the guidelines of the public purchasing initiative.

Mr. Butcher: At the beginning of the year, the Government disseminated consolidated guidelines on public purchasing throughout the public sector. Consistent with our international obligations, these encourage purchasers to work more effectively with suppliers to obtain better value for money and to help improve their competitiveness. For example, we are seeing welcome progress in National Health Service procurement, where my Department is working closely with the Department of Health and Social Security and health authorities: and we are strengthening links with local authority purchasing bodies. In its recently published report to the Prime Minister, the central unit on purchasing acknowledges that there is much to do in the area of central Government purchasing and we intend to pursue this vigorously.

Leicester (Task Force)

56. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will initiate a task force to cover the outer city area of Leicester covering Northfields, Netherhall and Thurnby Lodge.

Mr. Atkins: As the hon. Member knows, there is already a Government task force in Leicester covering the inner city area of Highfields. I have no plans to initiate a task force in outer Leicester covering the Northfields, Netherhall and Thurnby Lodge areas.

North Peckham Task Force

57. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about expenditure on the North Peckham task force.

Mr. Atkins: Since the Government's North Peckham task force was set up in 1986, some £2 million of Government funds have been committed for projects benefiting the residents of the area. Of this, £900,000 has come from funds available to all task forces. In addition, £10,000 has been committed by the private sector and £113,000 by the local authority.

Manufacturing Profitability

58. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for the profitability of manufacturing companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: In 1986 the net real rate of return at current replacement cost for manufacturing companies was 7 per cent. This exceeds the peak reached in the last economic cycle in 1978 and is the highest since 1973.

Copley Marshall and Co. Ltd. (Import Licence)

59. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why, in the light of the fact that such licences have been issued in similar circumstances in the past, his Department has refused Copley Marshall and Company Ltd., of New Mill, Huddersfield, an import licence for a consignment of Egyptian yarn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Egyptian export certificate provided by Copley Marshall and Company in support of its import licence application is valid only for goods which are to be re-exported outside the European Community. Since the consignment in question is not intended for re-export, the company was advised that a licence could not be issued until it had obtained the correct form of export certificate from the Egyptian authorities.

I regret to say that an import licence was previously issued to this company in similar circumstances in error when incorrect documentation was not detected. But this does not justify the issue of a licence in the present case. It remains the responsibility of the importer to ensure that the correct documentation is submitted with all import licence applications.

Steel

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has made of the likely consequences for the United Kingdom steel industry of recent European Economic Community decisions on steel.

Mr. Atkins: No decisions have yet been taken on the future EC steel regime. The Commission's proposals were considered by the Industry Council on 21 September. Following the Council, "three wise men" were appointed to advise on how guarantees of restructuring adequate to ensure the future viability of the EC steel industry could be obtained. Further consideration will take place at an Industry Council on 8 December.

Civil Research and Development

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what estimate he has of the projected level of spending by British industry on civil research and development.

Mr. Butcher: The latest information on expenditure on research and development performed by United Kingdom industry relates to 1985 and was published in British Business on 24 July. Information is not collected on the intended levels of spending on research and development by United Kingdom industry.

Industrial Competitiveness

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the international competitiveness of British industry.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In the second quarter of 1987—the latest period for which figures are available—relative unit labour costs in United Kingdom manufacturing industry were 6 per cent. lower than in the corresponding quarter of 1986.

Shipbuilding (Scotland)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current state of the shipbuilding industry in Scotland.

Mr. Atkins: Yarrow Shipbuilders Ltd and the British Shipbuilders yards in Scotland all have substantial orders.

Scott Lithgow Ltd, transferred to the private sector as a rig builder, is presently completing the Ocean Alliance rig for Britoil plc. Other, smaller, yards have or are seeking orders for fishing boats, naval and merchant ships and ship conversion and repair work.

Electrical Appliances

64. Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will seek powers to require all electrical appliances to be sold to the end user complete with the appropriate safety plug.

Mr. Maude: No. This is a commercial matter for the appliance manufacturer or retailers to decide in the light of consumer demand.

On the safety aspects, detailed guidance on the connection of plugs must be provided by law and consumers are free to choose whether to connect the plugs themselves or, if they do not feel capable, to seek technical assistance at additional cost. The safety of the plugs themselves is governed by the Plugs and Sockets Etc. (Safety) Regulations 1987.

Chemical Industry

65. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the state of the United Kingdom chemical industry.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom chemical industry is in a good state. According to the most recent reports, production generally is increasing, with many plants working at or near capacity. Costs are now more or less in line with those achieved in other countries, and profitability in most sectors is good. Strong domestic and overseas demand is reflected in growing import and export volumes in many products.

Inner Cities

67. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of (a) his time and (b) that of the other Ministers in his Department is devoted to policy on the inner cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My hon. Friend will be aware of the importance the Government attach to policy on the inner cities, and that many Departments have a part to play in it. My Department has a significant contribution to make and a lot of time and that of my colleagues in DTI is devoted to policy on the inner cities.

Space Research

68. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has regarding private sector co-operation in space research between the United Kingdom and overseas companies.

Mr. Butcher: International co-operation is an important aspect of space research especially in European Space Agency projects. As a result, United Kingdom companies have well established relationships with other European companies both in bidding for ESA projects and for commercial contracts e.g. those let by Inmarsat, Eutelsat etc.

Industrial Investment

69. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest forecast increase in industrial investment in 1987.

Mr. Butcher: The latest investment intentions survey carried out by my Department indicates that in 1987 investment in manufacturing industry, including leased assets, will be about 4 per cent. higher than the estimated investment of £7·1 billion, at 1980 prices, in 1986.

Rover Group

70. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what success the new chairman of the Rover Group has had in stemming the losses of the company.

Mr. Atkins: Rover Group's half year results were published on 5 August. In the first six months of 1987, compared with the same period in 1986, the turnover of the businesses continuing within the group, increased by 27 per cent. to £1,580 million with unit sales up 11 per cent. to 259,000. Exports accounted for over one third of unit sales and turnover. Improving operations resulted in a 90 per cent. reduction in loss before interest and taxation to £7·3 million and 80 per cent. reduction after interest, tax and extraordinary items to £42 million. Furthermore, the RG board announced on 18 November that the group expects to make a profit before interest and taxation in the current financial year ending 31 December 1987.

Exporters (Assistance)

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any intention to provide export finance assistance for consumable commodities to developing countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The normal facilities of the Export Credits Guarantee Department are available in support of exports of consumable commodities to developing countries.

Charnley Davies Group

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the Official Receiver in the case of the Charnley Davies Group to report to him; and what action he will take to ensure a speedy conclusion to the inquiries.

Mr. Maude: Winding up orders were made against Charnley Davies Group Limited and 12 group companies on 9 June 1987. The Official Receiver submitted a preliminary notification of his investigations to my Department on 17 June 1987 and a first interim report on 20 August 1987. His investigations into the affairs of those companies are continuing in which he is co-operating with the Crown Prosecution Service and the West Yorkshire police who will decide on and have the conduct of any proceedings.

Torvinstyle Properties Ltd.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if the police have now completed their investigations into Torvinstyle Properties Ltd.; and whether a report has yet been sent to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Maude: The police investigations are continuing. When they are concluded, the results of the inquiries will be reported to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Departmental Finance

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the main reasons for the changes in the planning totals for the Department of Trade and Industry for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The increase in forecast outturn for 1987-88 as against the planning total published in Cmnd. 56 reflects increased regional expenditure, transferred responsibilities for the inner cities programme, and launch aid for the Airbus A330/340. The higher planning total for 1988-89 also reflects the importance that we attach to programmes directed at economic growth and wealth creation. Further details will be given in the public expenditure White Paper in January.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide a revised version of table 3.5 from the public expenditure White Paper Cmnd. 56-II, in the light of the Autumn Statement in so far as such information is known or available.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A revised version of table 3.5 from Cmnd. 56-II will be included in the next public expenditure White Paper to be published in January.

Film Industry

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much the United Kingdom earned from the export trade of its commercial film industry in 1967, 1977, 1983, 1985, and 1986.

Mr. Maude: The information is given in the table. It comprises United Kingdom exports of cinematographic film and the receipts of United Kingdom film companies from performances overseas of their films and from production services provided to overseas film companies.

	United Kingdom export of Cinematographic film[1]	Receipts from overseas from performances and production	Total £ million
1967	7·8	41·4	49·4
1977	24·3	48·4	72·7

Telephone Answering Machines

Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will raise with Oftel when next he meets the dirctor general the sale of telephone answering machines which can be accessed by simple voice command and where the taped message is expunged as it is played back to any caller, irrespective of their right of access to that message.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster met the Director General of Telecommunications last week. As they have no plans to meet in the immediate future, I am arranging for this matter to be drawn to the director general's attention so that he may reply to my hon. Friend direct.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Paraguay

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government has made of the human rights record of Paraguay; and what effect this has had on the level of diplomatic relations, arms sales and trade links between Paraguay and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: Our concern at the continuing abuse of human rights in Paraguay has been made clear in Asuncion, both bilaterally and with the Twelve, and in appropriate international fora. My right hon. and learned Friend expressed that concern directly to the Paraguayan Foreign Minister when he visited the United Kingdom in March 1986.

We have normal trade relations with Paraguay, but are not aware of any recent sale of weapons nor of any in prospect. Any proposals for sales would be considered in the light of our well-known policy, which precludes the supply of defence items that we judge likely to be used for internal repression.

Chile

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment Her Majesty's Government has made of the human rights record of Chile; and what effects this has had on the level of diplomatic relations, arms sales and trade links between Chile and the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: We have made clear our concern about continuing human rights abuses in Chile both with the Twelve and bilaterally, most recently on 23 October when the Chilean Foreign Minister called on me and my right hon. and learned Friend. We maintain normal trading links, but our policy precludes the supply of defence items which we judge likely to be used for internal repression.

Foreign Affairs Council

Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement on the outcome of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 23 and 24 November.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. and learned Friend and I attended the Foreign Affairs Council in Brussels on 23-24 November. The discussions were mainly about the financial situation in the European Community and the crucial issue of agricultural reform.

At the same time as Foreign Ministers were meeting in Brussels, a meeting of the Agriculture Council was taking place to discuss proposals for stabilisers for all agricultural commodities.

My right hon. and learned Friend made clear that binding agreement on effective stabilisers was essential for an overall agreement to be reached at the European Council on the future financing of the Community. Every attempt to water down proposed stabilisers only increased the risk of failure at Copenhagen. Discussion of these and other aspects of the negotiations will be pursued at a special meeting of EC Foreign Ministers in Brussels on 29-30 November.

On the other issues, the Council agreed a negotiating mandate for a trade and economic co-operation agreement between the European Communities and the Gulf Co-operation Council. The Council also agreed the Commission's recommendation to accept the latest Japanese offer in the GATT article XXIV.6 negotiations with Japan.

The Council discussed proposals for Council regulations laying down maximum permitted levels of radioactivity in foodstuffs after a nuclear accident, and extending the arrangements governing food imports following the Chernobyl accident. It decided that a further discussion should take place at the December Foreign Affairs Council.

Meeting in European political co-operation, Ministers discussed East—West matters, the middle east and the Iran—Iraq war. My right hon. and learned Friend drew my colleagues' attention to Libya's involvement in the Eksund arms shipment. We and other member states will be following up the implications of this very serious affair.

Community Foreign Ministers issued a statement condemning South Africa's military incursion into Angola and calling for the immediate withdrawal of South African troops. We also issued statements expressing continued support and encouragement for the peace process in central America, and expressing support for the process of re-establishing a democracy in Haiti, where elections will be held on 29 November. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

THE ARTS

Nitrate Film Stock

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts how much nitrate film stock has been preserved for the aid of financial support from the National Heritage Memorial Fund in each of the years since the fund was established.

Mr. Luce: The grants made by the National Heritage Memorial Fund for each of the years since its establishment in 1980 are set out in the table. The total footage indicated to date is not comprehensive, since work is still in progress based on the grants in 1986-87 and 1987-88.

Librarians

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Minister for the Arts what guidance his Department issues on the recommended ratio of librarians to population; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: My Department issues no guidance on this.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Overseas Assets

74. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of United Kingdom holdings of overseas assets; what contribution the income from these assets makes to the balance of payments; and what are the comparable figures relating to the United Kingdom's overseas competitors' holdings of foreign assets.

Mr. Major: The level of United Kingdom net overseas assets at the end of 1986 was £114 billion—second only to Japan. The annual net income from these assets was £4½ billion.

Charitable Donations

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the Treasury of abolishing the higher rates relief limit for charitable covenants in 1986-87 and the first six months of 1987-88; and how much of the cost was attibutable to such donations to professional arts organisations with charitable status in the same periods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost to the Exchequer in 1986-87 of abolishing the limit for higher rate relief for charitable covenants made by individuals was about £1 million. This represents the repayments of basic rate tax on new covenants over £10,000. The associated claims for higher rate relief are unlikely to affect tax payments made before the end of 1986-87. Costs for later years will be higher, but information for the first six months of 1987-88 is not available. It is not possible to identify separately donations to professional arts organisations with charitable status.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost to the Treasury of introducing relief for charitable donations through payroll deduction schemes in its first six months from 6 April; and how much of the cost was attributable to such donations to professional arts organisations with charitable status.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The cost of tax relief for donations to charity made through payroll deduction schemes is estimated at about £80,000 in the six months from 6 April 1987. This represents only the first six months of the new relief. The number of payroll deduction schemes set up by employers is rising steadily and is now over 1,800. The cost of the relief will therefore increase. No information is available on the destination of donations.

Adjustment Policies

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps within the International Monetary Fund to make future adjustment policies the same as those set out in the UNICEF report "Adjustment With a Human Face".

Mr. Lawson: The IMF recognises the need to take account of the effects of economic adjustment on the poor. We shall continue to encourage this approach in both the design and implementation of fund-supported programmes. Policy reforms are essential in the poorest countries if they are to achieve faster economic growth, and better living conditions for all. In many cases adjustment measures are of direct benefit to the very poorest groups in developing countries—for instance the rural poor.

Personal Equity Plans

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to encourage greater use of personal equity plans.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government are committed to encouraging as many people as possible to take out a personal equity plan. I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 26 October 1987 at column 34, to my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames), in which I announced a number of simplifications of the scheme which will come into effect next January.

Sub-contractors (Payment)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what safeguards exist to ensure that small companies which are sub-contracted to carry out central Government works receive moneys due to them from the main contractors.

Mr. Brooke: For Government works contracts, the contracting authority's legal relationship is with the main contractor. Other than in special circumstances, the relationship between the main contractor and its sub-contractors, including those nominated by the authority, is a matter for the parties concerned. Any safeguards that exist should therefore be contained within the contractual arrangements between those parties.

European Currency Unit

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the use of the European currency unit coin in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Government have no plans for introducing a European currency unit coin in the United Kingdom.

BP Share Issue

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the BP share buy-back offer at the reserve price of 70p per share is open to shareholders in the United States of America.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The share purchase arrangement is available in the United Kingdom to domestic and overseas holders of partly paid shares.

Derelict Urban Land

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to levy a tax on the ownership of derelict urban land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 November 1987]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has no such plans.

Tax Evasion (Prosecutions)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people have been prosecuted for tax evasion since May 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The details in respect of the Inland Revenue for the financial years from 1 April 1979 are:

Number of persons prosecuted

Year	Number
1979-80	150
1980-81	189
1981-82	176
1982-83	142
1983-84	159
1984-85	239
1986-87	326

These figures include successful prosecutions by the police for tax frauds in connection with the construction industry tax deduction scheme. The numbers relating to this category were:

Year	Number
1979-80	10
1980-81	15
1981-82	7
1982-83	3
1983-84	5
1984-85	8
1986-87	89

The details for VAT prosecutions from the financial year beginning 1 April 1979, which do not include prosecutions of companies or other legal persons, are:

Number of persons prosecuted

Year	Number
1979-80	127
1980-81	133
1981-82	131
1982-83	195

Government Data Network

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which Government Departments will be linked by the Government data network; and whether there will be a link-up with the police national computer.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 24 November 1987]: It is expected that the proposed Government data network would be used initially by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, the Home Office, the Department of Health and Social Security and the Inland Revenue. There are no plans for the police national computer to use the network.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

House of Representatives

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will introduce legislation to change the name of the House of Commons to House of Representatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will set out the parameters, in terms of weekly income and implied tax rates, of the poverty trap which would be created by the proposed community charge; and what is his estimate of the numbers of people that would be affected, set out in appropriate income bands.

Mr. Portillo: I have been asked to reply.

This information cannot be worked out at present, both because certain operational details of the community charge rebate scheme have yet to be decided, and also because insufficient data are held centrally to permit the setting up of appropriate models.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 17 November Official Report columns 483-4, on the transitional arrangements for the poll tax, he will give the figures for households which will experience an increase of (a) 50 per cent. or more and (b) 80 per cent. or more in local tax bills for the illustrative year 1990-91.

Mr. Howard: Based on 1987-88 spending, I estimate that in 1990-91, 3 million households might face an increase of more than 50 per cent. in their local tax bills as a result of the introduction of the new system; and that 1·8 million might face an increase of 80 per cent. or more. However, as I emphasised in my answer to the hon. Gentleman on 9 November, at column 14, this outcome need not arise if local authorities start now to reduce expenditure.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the relationship between increases in expenditure per adult and increases in poll tax, set out in his reply of 21 October, Official Report, column 819, are affected by his announcement regarding transitional arrangements for the introduction of poll tax.

Mr. Howard: The transitional arrangements will make no difference to the impact on an authority's gross community charge of an increase in expenditure. During the transitional period, as a result of the phasing out of the safety net and, where appropriate, domestic rates, there will be changes in net community charges which are not related to changes in expenditure. Even then, the contribution of overspending to community charges will remain clear — for every £1 per head change in expenditure the community charge will be £1 more or less than it would otherwise have been.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the £75 limit on safety nets referred to in his reply of 17 November, Official Report, columns 483-4, is a cash amount for the year 1990-91.

Mr. Howard: That is the Government's intention.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give illustrative figures showing which local authorities would remain on the maximum safety net for poll tax if it were (a) £90, (b) £100 and (c) £125.

Mr. Howard: The figures show the areas with the highest contributions per adult to the safety net if no maximum contribution were set. The figures are based on 1987-88 budgeted spending.

Inner Cities

71. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current ratio of public to private investment in the inner cities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The current ratio of public to private investment for projects assisted by urban development grant is 1:4. The equivalent ratio for the two original urban development corporations for investment secured up to the end of 1986-87 is 1:5. Schemes secured in the current year would increase the UDC ratio significantly.

73. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of private investment in the inner cities attributable to Government initiatives.

Mr. Trippier: In the current year I expect private sector investment secured as a result of my Department's initiatives to be in excess of £1,300 million.

Civil Engineering

72. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the prospects for Britain's civil engineering industry during the next 12 months.

Mr. Trippier: The indications are that the strong trend of growth in new orders for civil engineering contracts will continue. Major new contracts — the Channel tunnel, Sizewell and the Dartford crossing—and the increased spending on roads envisaged in the Autumn Statement look set to reinforce this trend.

Pesticides

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the likely implications for the British sea and river environments of the pesticides and other chemical wastes that pollute them; and what measures he intends to take to reduce the continuing pollution of rivers and oceans.

Mr. Moynihan: The rivers and coastal waters of the United Kingdom are among the cleanest in Europe. Discharges of potentially polluting substances are controlled by water authorities in England and Wales (and by river purification boards in Scotland) under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 with the aim of maintaining and, where necessary, improving water quality.

The Government have, however, announced their intention to adopt a more precautionary approach to controlling inputs to rivers and estuaries of the most dangerous substances. I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Harrow, West (Mr. Hughes) on 18 November. This approach will involve the minimisation of direct discharges of a limited list of the most dangerous substances, as well as greater attention to inputs from diffuse or indirect sources. The Government have also announced its intention to put the existing quality objectives for rivers and estuaries on a statutory footing, and are considering a number of other measures to strengthen pollution control.

With regard to pollution of the sea, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be hosting the second international conference on the North sea, in London, on 24 and 25 November. We will be discussing with Ministers from other participating countries what actions may be needed to safeguard the quality of the marine environment of the North sea.

Council Housing

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he now proposes to increase the percentage of capital receipts from the sale of council houses that local authorities can use for housing purposes.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) on 4 November at column 735.

Garelochhead Bypass

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he authorised the use of Gopher Ltd. as immediate sub-contractors on the Garelochhead bypass project;

(2) if he is satisfied with the sub-contractural arrangements entered into by the Miller Group in respect of the Property Services Agency contract for Garelochhead bypass; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will estimate the value of the work carried out by C. K. Davis, as a secondary sub-contractor, on the Garelochhead bypass;

(4) if he will indicate the value of the Garelochhead bypass contract; and how much of this sum has been paid to Miller Group as main contractors;

(5) how much of the work on the Garelochhead bypass was carried out by C. K. Davis; and how much money he has received from public funds in respect of his contract.

Mr. Chope: The latest estimated final value of the Garelochhead bypass contract is £6·295 million, of which some £5·372 million has so far been paid to the Miller Group as the main contractor. Miller Group's sub-contract arrangements are a commercial matter between them and their sub-contractors.

Howbury Park

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a decision on the public inquiry into the Howbury Park development proposals.

Grant-Related Expenditure

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to set grant-related expenditure assessments for each metropolitan fire and civil defence authority for 1988-89 by reference to original respective redetermination submissions for 1987-88, updated for inflation and other committed expenditure.

Mr. Chope: The Secretary of State's proposals for the 1988-89 RSG settlement are set out in the consultation paper sent to local authorities on 27 October, a copy of which is in the Library.

Land for Energy Development

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list each organisation which was represented on the working party which prepared the Land for Energy Development report begun in 1983 by his Department and the Department of Energy.

Mr. Trippier: The steering group conducting the land for energy study was chaired by an official from my Department. Membership comprised of officials from my Department, the Department of Energy and MAFF. The following bodies were also represented:

British Gas Corporation
British Coal Corporation
CEGB
CBI
Yorkshire Water Authority (also representing Anglian and Severn Trent Water Authorities)
Association of County Councils
Association of District Councils
Association of Metropolitan Authorities
Yorkshire and Humberside County Councils Association
Regional Planning Council for Yorkshire and Humberside
Derbyshire County Council
Nottinghamshire County Council

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many times the working party preparing the report Land for Energy Development met; and what was the date upon which it last met.

Mr. Trippier: Work on the land for energy study began in April 1983 and seven full meetings of the steering group were held before the study was completed in January 1985. The date of the last meeting was 13 November 1984.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities which responded to the requests for written submissions which were made by the working party preparing the report "Land for Energy Development" on behalf of his Department and the Department of Energy.

Mr. Trippier: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In July 1984 a copy of the draft report for the land for energy steering group was circulated to interested parties for comment. Of the 52 local authorities consulted, 36 responded.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning the report "Land for Energy Development" begun in 1983 by his Department in conjunction with the Department of Energy.

Mr. Trippier: I am currently considering a number of representations from local authorities, the local authority associations and hon. Members requesting a meeting to discuss the report.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on what date he received the finished report "Land for Energy Development".

Mr. Trippier: A final draft of the land for energy study was submitted to Ministers in the Departments of Energy and the Environment in February 1985.

Ozone Layer

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further action Her Majesty's Government are taking to promote international co-operation to protect the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department has put forward suggestions to the Commission and EC member states on how the control measures of the Montreal protocol on substances that deplete the ozone layer might be implemented. In addition, we will be hosting a meeting in the United Kingdom early in 1988 to consider closer co-operation between EC and EFTA scientists on modelling and monitoring changes to stratospheric ozone.

Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the current membership of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England and the changes that have been made in membership since 1983; and if he will make a statement with regard to his latest intentions on changing members of the commission.

Mr. Ridley: The current membership of the commission, showing date of first appointment, is:

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to lay before Parliament the 1986-87 annual reports and statements of accounts of the residuary bodies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The 1986-87 annual reports and statements of accounts of the six metropolitan residuary bodies were laid before Parliament today. The accounts of the London residuary body are currently subject to the usual local government audit procedures and will be laid before Parliament as soon as the audit is complete.

These annual reports and accounts cover the residuary bodies' first full financial year. They point to the impressive progress made by the board members and staff in tackling the tasks inherited from the metropolitan county councils and in realising the benefits of abolition of an unnecessary tier of local government.

In the first year after abolition the metropolitan residuary bodies have reduced their full-time staff numbers from 1,224 at the beginning of the year to 1,017 at the end. These totals are continuing to fall as more of the residuary bodies' functions are discharged or transferred to successor bodies. The statements of accounts also show that substantial cash benefits have already been returned by the residuary bodies to district councils in their areas. In total, these amounted to some £70 million of which £24 million was capital receipts inherited from the county councils and generated from the disposal of surplus property.

The task faced by each residuary body in identifying and disposing of the many surplus properties accumulated by the county councils has not been an easy one and the reports show that all residuary bodies have made substantial progress in this area. The £11·5 million capital receipts already generated indicate the residuary bodies' commitment to ensuring that the value of these surplus assets is maximised and the benefits repatriated as quickly as possible to the ratepayers who paid for them.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will tabulate in the Official Report the parcels of land vested by Order in Council in the London Docklands Development Corporation; and for each state the date of vesting, the area in hectares and acres, the previous owner, the principal purposes for which each is now in use; and, where this is housing, the approximate number of rented or owner-occupied dwellings.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 15 July 1987, c. 558]: The details of the use of the land vested in the London Docklands Development Corporation by Orders in Council are as follows:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Education Statistics

Mr. John David Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of (a) pupils and (b) non-Protestant pupils at each of the 150 secondary schools designated as Protestant in the Department of Economic Developments publication "Classification of Schools for Monitoring Purposes".

Dr. Mawhinney: The total number of pupils enrolled in January 1987 at each of the secondary schools designated in the Department of Economic Development's publication as being attended mainly by Protestant pupils is shown in a table, a copy of which I have placed in the Library. (23 of the schools in the printed list no longer exist, but were included as their former pupils are still in the labour market.)

The Government do not collect statistics on the religious affiliation of individual pupils. It is not therefore possible to provide figures for the number of non-Protestant pupils at any school.

Divis Flats

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his timetable for the completion of the demolition and redevelopment of the Divis flats complex in Belfast.

Mr. Needham: This is a matter for the Housing Executive. Its renewal strategy for Divis flats, which I accepted in 1986, provides for phased implementation over a period of seven to 10 years, subject to periodic review. A phased implementation is required in order, mainly, to meet tenants' preference to remain within their existing communities which cannot be fully met by the construction of new housing in an already heavily populated area.

Local Government

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent representations he has received from the Association of Local Authorities in Northern Ireland about the state of local government under its control; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: In common, I understand, with other Members of Parliament, I received a letter dated 30 October from the president of the Association of Local Authorities of Northern Ireland, expressing concern about the position of local government in Northern Ireland. The Government have told the association that we agree entirely that the presence in district council chambers in Northern Ireland of those who support terrorist violence while exploiting the democratic process poses serious problems. We recently published a discussion paper, "Elected Representatives and the Democratic Process in Northern Ireland", as a basis for comment by interested parties. In the light of responses, the Government will decide what action to take.

Northern Ireland Sports Council

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what remuneration the current chairman of the Northern Ireland Sports Council receives; and how many days per month he is expected to devote to the business of the Northern Ireland Sports Council.

Dr. Mawhinney: A total of £3,115 per annum; there is no specified time commitment but, in practice, the current chairman devotes the equivalent of about six days per month to council business.

Information

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advertising agents have been appointed by his Department, or by the Central Office of Information on behalf of his Department, to handle campaigns involving the communication of information on subjects for which his Department is responsible to Parliament during the year 1985-86; what was the subject of each campaign; and how much was spent on each campaign.

Dr. Mawhinney: Nine advertising agencies were engaged in handling a total of 22 campaigns on behalf of my Department during 1985-86; The agencies were:

Anderson Advertising Ltd
A V Browne Advertising Ltd
Davidson Pearce
Francis Killingbeck Bain
George Hynes & Partners Ltd
John Laird PR Ltd
McConnells Advertising Ltd
Naylor Hara International, Tokyo

North Downs and Ards Area Plan

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the public inquiry into the North Down and Ards area plan 1984 to 1995 will be able to consider the question of designating Strangford lough as an area of special scientific interest.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 November 1987]: This is a matter for the planning appeals commission to consider in the context of the public inquiry currently being held into objections to proposals contained in the North Down and Ards area plan 1984-1995.

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he has committed any public funds to the National Trust for the acquisition of land at Strangford lough after the decision to hold the public inquiry into the North Down and Ards area plan.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The Department offered grant-aid to the National Trust to purchase lands at Greyabbey, Strangford lough on 27 July 1987. The decision to hold a public inquiry into the North Down and Ards area plan 1984-1995 was announced on 16 September 1987.

Residential Accommodation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what residential accommodation is provided for departmental Ministers and civil servants and charged to public funds; and what has been the total cost in each financial year since 1979.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 16 November 1987]: Domestic accommodation is provided for some civil servants on detached duty in Northern Ireland and for Ministers and senior officials, in lieu of detached duty and subsistence allowances. The cost of this accommodation is not available separately and can only be extracted at disproportionate cost.

Family Income Supplement

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of people in Northern Ireland and the number of dependants covered thereby claiming family income supplement in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of families receiving FIS	Number of child dependants
1979 (December)	7,899	27,479
1987 (May)	14,890	40,973

Social Security Reform

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he has received on the reformed structure of income-related benefits; and if he will list them.

Mr. Needham: A comprehensive list of representations is not available but comments on the reformed structure have been received from a number of Members of Parliament and some of the political parties, district councils and voluntary bodies in Northern Ireland.

Supplementary Benefits

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the number of people in Northern Ireland and the number of dependants covered thereby claiming supplementary benefit in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Needham: The information is as follows:

	November 1979	February 1986
Supplementary benefit claimants	115,359	184,374
Dependent partners and children	91,116	188,056

Source: Annual survey—5 per cent. sample.

Housing Benefit

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of people in Northern Ireland and the number of dependants covered thereby claiming housing benefit in 1979 and the latest available date; and if he will distinguish whether these payments are made for tenants in the public sector, the private sector, or for payment with rates.

Mr. Needham: The available information is as follows:

	[1]1979	1987
Public sector tenants	21,000	118,100
Private sector tenants	1,600	20,700
Owner-occupiers	34,800	54,000
	57,400	192,800

[1]Prior to 21.11.83, when housing benefit was introduced, rent rebates, rate rebates and rent allowances were generally available only to householders not receiving supplemetary benefit.
Note.—Figures are rounded.

Nirex

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what approach has been to his Department by United Kingdom Nirex Ltd. regarding the ue of sites in Northern Ireland for storage of nuclear waste; and whether he has had any representations regarding the construction of an offshore repository for nuclear waste in the Irish sea.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 20 November 1987]: No approach has been made by UK Nirex Ltd. regarding the use of any sites in Northern Ireland for the storage of nuclear waste, and neither have any representations been received about the construction of an offshore repository for nuclear waste in the Irish sea.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the survivability of the AIDS virus in water.

Mr. Newton: I am not aware of any specific published data on the survival of the AIDS virus (HIV) in water.

I am, however, advised that raw water is not a favourable medium, and that environmental factors, biodegradation and dilution would make it most unlikely that the virus would survive.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the wider use within the National Health Service of family practitioners committees' patient registration data; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The basic information people provide when they register with a doctor—name, address, age and sex—gives family practitioner committees the most comprehensive and up-to-date record of the population within their area. Many health authorities would like to make use of this information as a basis for developing a community index which they believe would greatly assist them, especially in planning programmes for health screening and the prevention of illness.

There is, of course, no question of passing clinical information about an individual from one authority to another. Nevertheless, some doubts have been expressed about whether it would be proper to make available in the way proposed even such basic "age-sex register" data. We think therefore that it is right to promote wider public discussion before reaching a conclusion. Accordingly, we have today published a consultation document on the matter, seeking views by the end of February 1988.

Low-paid Families

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for the numbers of lower-paid families with and without children, whose marginal tax rates including benefit withdrawal will be (a) 90 to 100 per cent., (b) 80 to 90 per cent., (c) 70 to 80 per cent., (d) 60 to 70 per cent., (e) 50 to 60 per cent. and (f) 40 to 50 per cent. after the implementation of the Social Security Act 1986 in April 1988, assuming that in 1988-89 personal tax allowances are raised in my line with inflation and the basic rate of tax is reduced to 25 per cent.

Mr. Scott: The main assumptions underlying the figures given in the table are, with the exception of a 25 per cent. basic rate of tax, the same as those mentioned in reply to my hon. Friend on 19 November. Since the estimates assume that employees' national insurance contributions are paid at 9 per cent., the figures include some overstatement and can indicate only broad orders of magnitude:

Total marginal rate of deduction (per cent.) per £1 of extra gross earnings

40 but less than 50	[2]	[2]

Notes:

1. Main assumptions as in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits" published 27 October, except that standard of tax rate is assumed to be 25 per cent.
2. Heads of tax-units only.

[2] Means not readily available.

Salazopyrin

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many reports his Department has received in each of the last three years in respect of alleged instances of trading in unlicensed supplies of the medicine Salazopyrin from (a) Italy and (b) any other European country; and if he will give the dates these reports were received.

Mr. Newton: No cases currently under investigation arise from reports of unlicensed supplies of Salazopyrin. I regret that information about earlier cases is not readily available.

Social Fund

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated amount of the social fund for the London borough of Lambeth.

Mr. Scott: The areas served by individual local offices are not necessarily conterminous with the boundaries of local authorities. The London borough of Lambeth is served by the 10 local offices listed; information on their social fund budget allocations for 1988-89 was contained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-81.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of people and the number of dependents covered thereby claiming family income supplement in 1979 and at the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: The number of people in families receiving family income supplement at April 1979 and April 1986 (the latest date for which information is available) is as follows.

	April 1979	April 1986
Number of families claiming and receiving family income supplement	77,000	200,000
Number of dependents in families receiving family income supplement (includes partners and children)	214,000	530,000
Total number of people in families receiving family income supplement	291,000	730,000

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of people and the number of dependants covered thereby claiming supplementary benefit in 1979 and the latest available date.

Mr. Portillo: The information is as follows:

Thousands

	November 1979	May 1987
Number of claimants	2,855	4,860
Number of partners	561	1,063
Number of dependants under 19	955	2,240
Total dependent on supplementary benefit	4,370	8,164

Note: The figures for November 1979 are derived from the annual statistical inquiry. The figures for May 1987, which are the latest available and are provisional, are derived from the quarterly statistical inquiry. The two sets of figures are therefore not strictly comparable.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the number of people over the past 10 years who have been disqualified from unemployment benefit for leaving their job without good cause or for misconduct; and if he will give the number of claimants in each of these years appealing against the decision and the number and percentage of such claimants successful in getting the original decision overturned.

Mr. Portillo: The numbers of people disqualified for receiving unemployment benefit under section 20(1)(a) of the Social Security Act 1975 (dismissal for misconduct or voluntary leaving without just cause) are shown in the following table:

	Leaving Voluntarily	Misconduct
1977	429,356	138,944
1978	441,281	129,996
1979	409,498	120,819
1980	344,403	133,669
1981	241,074	102,196
1982	251,280	95,323
1983	257,289	93,656
1984	276,235	93,570
1985	295,041	97,992
1986	310,976	98,938
1987	143,895	48,906

Notes:

1. Figures for 1984 have not previously been available but have now been clerically assembled.
2. The 1987 figures are for January-June inclusive.

Prior to 1984, no statistics were kept on the number of appeals made against these disqualifications, and I regret that most figures thereafter could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the following figures are available from a separate special exercise for the period 1 January to 31 March 1987.

	Appeals Heard and Decided	Appellant Successful
Leaving voluntarily	1,002	426 (42·5 per cent.)
Misconduct	471	259 (55 per cent.)

Benefits (Newcastle upon Tyne)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total sums spent on single payments in each Newcastle upon Tyne benefit office in each financial year from 1983-84, and for April to October of the current year.

Mr. Portillo: The information asked for is given in the table.

Financial year	Newcastle St. James £	Newcastle East £	Newcastle West £
1983-84	547,038	611,715	435,168
1984-85	1,124,304	929,613	765,433
1985-86	1,676,217	1,294,376	1,302,092
1986-87	1,388,339	957,691	1,073,838
1987[1]	405,227	257,765	346,459

[1] 8 April 1987 to 20 October 1987.

Note: The information for 1986-87 and for April to October 1987 is provisional and subject to amendment.

Prescriptions

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to halt the fraudulent use of National Health Service prescriptions by some general practitioners and chemists for procuring medicines for use overseas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: It is for family practitioner committees in the first instance to investigate allegations of fraud in respect of contractors with whom they are in contract to provide services under the National Health Service, and to take any necessary action including referring the matter to the police, if appropriate. We are drawing the attention of the relevant family practitioner committees to the allegations made in a recent press article.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list details of each change to the housing benefit system since the scheme was announced; and if he will detail the date these changes took effect and the savings to public expenditure of each of these reforms.

Mr. Portillo: Significant changes to the housing benefit scheme were as follows:

April 1983

Rent taper above needs allowance increased from 17 per cent. to 21 per cent.

Rates taper above needs allowance increased from 6 per cent. to 7 per cent.

April 1984

Rent taper above needs allowance increased from 21 per cent. to 26 per cent.

Rates taper above needs allowance increased from 7 per cent. to 9 per cent.

18 to 20-year-old non-dependent deductions incorporated into the adult rate. Deductions for 18 to 20-year-olds on supplementary benefit or youth training schemes abolished.

November 1984

Rent taper above needs allowance increased from 26 per cent. to 29 per cent.

Minimum payments above needs allowance increased to 50 pence.

Non-dependant deductions for 16 to 17-year-olds not on supplementary benefit, youth training schemes or non-contributory invalidity pension introduced at the lower rate.

50 pence real improvement to dependent child's needs allowance.

April 1985

High rent scheme thresholds raised to 130 per cent. of average rents.

November 1985

Rate taper above needs allowance increased from 9 per cent. to 13 per cent.

95 pence real improvement to dependent child's needs allowance.

July 1986

Age at which deductions made in respect of non-dependents receiving supplementary benefit increased from 21 to 25, in new and repeat claims only.

April 1987

Rent taper above needs allowance increased from 29 per cent. to 33 per cent.

Needs allowances increased in line with cash increase in basic retirement pensions instead of using traditional formula.

The table shows the expenditure effects of these measures.

Estimated cash savings from main changes to the housing benefit scheme

Date of change	[1]Amount saved (£ million)
April 1983	(approx) 50
April and November 1984	[2]171
April 1985	6
November 1985	[3]57
July 1986	26
April 1987	68

[1] All savings are shown in terms of the full-year effects and include savings in rate rebate expenditure, which is not formally classified as public expenditure. The savings for different years cannot be aggregated over a period because the effects of the changes overlap and are partly offset by other factors.

[2] This figure is the estimated full-year cost in November 1984 of restoring the November 1983 tapers, minima, and equivalent levels for non-dependent deductions and the dependent child's needs allowance.

[3] This figure was offset by extra expenditure of £12 million resulting from the real increase in the childs' needs allowance (net saving £45 million)

Diabetics

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated total annual cost of making blood sugar strips for diabetics available through the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 24 November.

Family Practitioner Services

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost of family practitioner services in 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Newton: Gross expenditure on the family practitioner services in England, excluding the cost of administration, was £3,345 million and £3,524 million in 1984-85 and 1985-86 respectively.

Social Workers

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking in relation to the power of local authorities to charge health authorities for the services of hospital social workers.

Mr. Newton: We intend to give statutory support to the 1974 arrangements under which it was agreed that health authorities and local authorities would not charge each other for certain services, and in particular that local authorities would not charge health authorities for the provision of social work in hospitals. This 1974 arrangement was reflected in the provision of funds to health authorities and local authorities. However, no action was taken to remove the legal power for local authorities to charge for them.

In the light of the decision by the London borough of Camden to use this power to charge the Bloomsbury health authority for hospital social work, despite the 1974 agreement, we have decided that it would be right to amend the law. Accordingly clause 15 of the Health and Medicines Bill, published today, provides for the abolition of the charging power. Subject to the agreement of Parliament, this change would have effect from midnight tonight.

While the Government believe it is unacceptable that health authorities should be exposed to bills in respect of these services, we recognise that some local authorities face particular problems arising from the number of patients who come to teaching and specialist hospitals within their area but who are not resident in it. We shall continue to work for a solution to these problems, which in our view can most appropriately be achieved by arrangements for sharing the costs more equitably between local authorities.

General Practice Finance Corporation

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the future of the General Practice Finance Corporation.

Mr. Newton: The White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249), published today, announces the Government's plans to seek powers to change the constitution of the General Practice Finance Corporation (GPFC) to allow maximum use of private sector funds. It is proposed that the corporation should become a statutory company under the Companies Act and that there should be a trust to represent the profession on the board of directors of the new corporation. We shall be carrying forward this proposal in further discussion with the GPFC and the General Medical Services Committee (GMSC) of the British Medical Association. Powers to enable such a change to take place are included in clauses 1 to 3 of the Health and Medicines Bill, published today.

In the meantime, we have increased the corporation's permitted borrowing of £8 million to £10 million in 1988-89. In consequence, the corporation has resumed lending for family doctors' surgery premises.

Poverty and Unemployment

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will update the information given in the first paragraph of the section on poverty and unemployment traps which appears on page 94 of the current issue of "Social Trends", taking into account changes in housing benefit, and the transition from supplementary benefit to income support in April 1988, but assuming that income tax and national insurance remain at current levels;

(2) if he will update the information given in the second paragraph of the section on poverty and unemployment traps which appears on page 94 of the current issue of "Social Trends", assuming that a married couple with four children will be faced with social security changes in April 1988, but that there will be no change in the level of national insurance contributions or income tax.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 23 November 1987]: In the most extreme case of the poverty trap, as specified, an extra £1 of gross earnings could lead to an increase in income tax of 27p, a 9p increase in national insurance contributions, a 45p reduction in family credit and a 16p reduction in housing benefit—a total of 97p. In April 1987 the corresponding figure was £1·09.

After the addition of benefits, the net income of a hypothetical married couple with four dependent children (aged 3, 8, 11 and 16), and paying average rent and rates, would be £122·72 at gross earnings of £75. This figure would rise to £138·69 at gross earnings of £160. Prior to the reform of the social security system, net income would have remained below £122·72 as gross earnings rose above £75.

The figures given combine various assumptions from the April 1987 tax benefit model tables and the April 1988 social security benefit rates. The position would differ on different assumptions.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the expenditure so far in the current year by the Health Education Authority relating to (a) AIDS, (b) smoking and (c) alcohol.

Mr. Newton: Specific expenditure so far has been as follows:

Alcohol	144,767
Smoking	45,414
AIDS	33,722

As the hon. Member will be aware, the Health Education Authority did not assume responsibility for the Government's AIDS public education campaign until October 1987.

AIDS, smoking and alcohol also constitute substantial elements of other authority programmes, such as the family and personal health programme, young people's programme, adult and community education programme. The Department of Health and Social Security/Health Education Authority "Look After Your Heart" campaign, which highlights smoking and alcohol abuse as two of the main risk factors of coronary heart disease, is spending £2·5 million in 1987-88.

The authority's projected expenditure for the remainder of the current financial year is:

Alcohol	368,464
Smoking	1,052,457
AIDS	4,100,000

Heating Additions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many supplementary benefit claimants on the long-term rate of benefit were receiving heating additions at (a) the higher and (b) the lower rate on 30 September 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; what percentages of the total numbers of claimants on the long-term rate were receiving each type of addition on that date; and what were these figures and percentages for each office of his Department within Newcastle-upon-Tyne;

(2) how many supplementary benefit claimants were receiving heating additions at (a) the higher and (b) the lower rate on 30 September 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987; what percentages of the total numbers of supplementary benefit claimants were receiving each type of addition on that date; and if he will give these figures and percentages for each office of his Department within Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Mr. Portillo [pursuant to his reply] 4 November 1987, c. 783-84]: The information requested about the number and percentage of supplementary benefit claimants in Great Britain receiving heating additions in December 1984 and February 1986 is as follows:

	1984	1986
I. Claimants on the long term rate of benefit
Nos (000s) with higher rate addition[1]	759·0	821·0
Nos (000s) with lower rate addition[2]	1,244·0	1,279·0
Percentage of those on long-term rate with higher rate addition	31·5	32·0
Percentage of those on long-term rate with lower rate addition	51·5	50·5
II. All Claimants
Nos (000s) with higher rate addition[1]	1,117·0	1,010·0
Nos (000s) with lower rate addition[2]	1,706·0	1,819·0
Percentage with higher rate addition	24·2	22·1
Percentage with lower rate addition	37·0	36·8

[1] Numbers include all those receiving central heating and estate rate heating additions at higher rate.

[2] Numbers include all those receiving central heating and estate rate heating additions at lower rate and also unspecified heating additions.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 26 November 1987

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

News International

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General what is his latest information as to the cost to public funds of the cases brought against certain local authorities resulting from their failure to place in public libraries News International publications; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my predecessor gave to him on 12 March at columns 251-52. The position remains unchanged.

Dowty Rotol

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Attorney-General why Dowty Rotol was not prosecuted for fraud, in the light of that company's overcharging on Ministry of Defence contract work.

The Attorney-General: A report was submitted by the Ministry of Defence police in August 1985 to the Director of Public Prosecutions. After careful consideration he decided that there was insufficient evidence against any of the persons named in that report to justify the institution of criminal proceedings.

TRANSPORT

Road Improvements (Sheffield-Manchester)

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to improve road communications between Sheffield and Manchester; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The A616/A628 trunk route between Sheffield and Manchester is currently being improved over 7·5 miles between Stocksbridge and the M1. This scheme is due for completion in Spring 1988.

Local improvements are also being considered taking account of the special environmental considerations.

Driving Schools

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints his Department has received concerning the nuisance to residents from driving schools and examiners using residential areas (a) for practice or tests and (b) for reversing practice.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

All driving test centres use a variety of approved test routes. Examiners seek to spread testing to minimise nuisance and inconvenience to local residents.

Network SouthEast

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received any representations from passengers' representative bodies concerning services on the Dartford or Bexleyheath lines of Network SouthEast.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has received no such representation recently. The MMC's report on Network SouthEast published in September does, however, draw attention to the need for improvements on these lines, and I am discussing with British Rail what needs to be done.

British Rail

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce plans for the complete privatisation of British Rail catering.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Railways Board is extending the role of the private sector in all aspects of railway catering, but it has not brought forward any proposals for complete privatisation.

Carlisle-Settle Railway Line

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what factors are delaying his decision on the future of the Carlisle to Settle railway line; when the matter first came to his Department for decision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I received the board's financial case last December. Since then I have had to consider many representations, some of them quite recent, that have been made to me about that financial case, including comprehensive statements from both the local authorities, and the Friends of the Line.

London Underground (Accidents)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, he will now place in the Library details of all prescribed and reported accidents respectively, that have occurred on lines of London Underground Ltd. since 1 January 1986.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have placed in the Library a list of those accidents since 1 January 1986 which have occurred on the London Underground and which are required to be reported under the provisions of the Railways (Notice of Accidents) Order 1986, SI 1986 No. 2187.

Leisure Traffic

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has completed his review of road scheme assessment criteria to ensure that appropriate weight is given to leisure traffic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. The result of the review is contained in a report "Tourism, Leisure and Roads" published on 15 October. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The main conclusion to emerge is that the assessment framework approach adopted on motorway and other trunk road improvement schemes brings together, in a comprehensive fashion, all the matters relevant in reaching decisions on these schemes. These include the special characteristics relating to the tourism and leisure industry. Recent increases in the value of leisure time will improve the case for schemes which serve tourist and leisure traffic.

The tourism industry can and should press its case for improvements in trunk and other roads by participating activity in the public consultation procedures included in the road planning process.

Roads

Mr. Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the efficiency scrutiny of the management of property purchased by his Department for road schemes.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The scrutiny was completed early in November. I have placed copies of the examining officer's report in the Library. The report recommends measures to limit the amount of property held, to improve its management while held, to facilitate disposal when it is found to be surplus and to optimise price on disposal. Some of the recommendations are already being implemented; the others are being given immediate attention.

Road Haulage Permits

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has determined the fees to be charged to United Kingdom hauliers for international road haulage permits in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes, The fees for 1988 permits are to be reduced.

This is possible because of successful bilateral negotiations with other countries by Department of Transport officials.

Significant increases in the United Kingdom's quotas have meant greater income from permits without a significant increase in cost.

United Kingdom hauliers will benefit from the Department's success: first, in having more permits available and, secondly, from reduced fees.

The fees will be as follows, with the 1987 charges in brackets:

Single journey permit	2	(£2.80)
Multi-journey permit	1 per journey	(£1.70)
Annual period permit	50	(no change)
3-month period permit	14	(no change)
Multilateral EC/ECMT annual permit	100	(£105)
Multilateral EC/ECMT 3 months permit	26	(£27)

The Government will continue to make representations to the European Community for the early removal of all permits and other restrictive trade practices concerning international transport.

King's Cross (Fire)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will contribute to the disaster fund set up by the London borough of Camden for the victims of the King's Cross fire.

Mr. Channon: The Government will be making a contribution of £250,000 to the King's Cross disaster fund. I hope that the Government's example will encourage others to join in helping the bereaved and those who suffered in this dreadful accident. Neither the fund nor my donation to it will affect claims for compensation.

Parliamentary approval for this payment will be sought in a Supplementary Supply Estimate for the Transport Services and Central Administration Vote. Pending that approval, the £250,000 donation will be met by an advance from the Contingencies Fund. As savings have occurred in class VIII, vote 2, there will be no increase in the public expenditure planning total.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inner Cities (Insurance)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about initiatives his Department is taking with respect to insurance in the inner cities.

Mr. Atkins: This Department has a particular responsibility for insurance matters in the inner cities.

We recognise that the availability of insurance cover can pose difficulties for businesses in inner-city areas and a procedure was agreed with the Association of British Insurers (ABI) in October 1986 to help overcome these problems. These arrangements are working well and the local authorities in Lambeth, Leeds and Manchester are now associated with them.

In addition, the ABI has now launched a series of advice files on small business insurance, one of which deals with inner-city business insurance. The ABI is also proposing to set up two pilot insurance advice centres in Birmingham and Manchester to provide essential information to small businesses. The Government's city action teams in those cities are assisting with premises. This marks a further stage in the close co-ordination of effort between the Government and the association, which can only help the inner-city business community.

European Space Agency

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in what way Her Majesty's Government have withdrawn from, or come to disagree with, the guidance and the objectives for the European Space Agency agreed by the United Kingdom and all other members unanimously in resolution 1 on 31 January 1985 in Rome.

Mr. Butcher: At Rome the United Kingdom was prepared to back a well-balanced ESA programme. At The Hague we were faced with an unbalanced programme, including a very expensive Hermes proposal not accepted at Rome, and a real risk that user programmes, which have always been our major interest, would suffer.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consultations were undertaken with British Aerospace and those other British companies co-operating with the European Space Agency prior to Her Majesty's Government's decision on their contribution to the agency announced at The Hague; and what consultation and advice Her Majesty's Government have provided since that announcement to these companies.

Mr. Butcher: Prior to the ministerial meeting at The Hague, the British national space centre was in regular contact with British Aerospace and other United Kingdom companies primarily involved in European Space Agency activities. Since the meeting these companies have been debriefed on the outcome, and, in consultation with industry, we shall shortly be taking a fresh look at United Kingdom civil space activities, both nationally and in ESA.

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what financial contribution Her Majesty's Government are intending to make to the European Space Agency for the total of its future activities; and what has been the amount and proportion paid by Her Majesty's Government in each of the last four years;

(2) what information he has as to the proportion of the total cost of the future activities of the European Space Agency to be met by Her Majesty's Government in future, and as to the amount and the proportion of the total European Space Agency expenditure paid by Her Majesty's Government in 1986.

Mr. Butcher: The United Kingdom's contributions to the European Space Agency from 1983-1986 have been as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986
United Kingdom contribution
Million ecu	110·7	122·2	124·0	125·5
Million pounds	61·6	70·4	73·5	71·8
Total members' contributions
Million ecu	683·0	765·2	859·9	957·8
Million pounds	380·1	440·7	509·5	548·1
United Kingdom contributions as percentage of total members' contributions	16·2	16·0	14·4	13·1
Total ESA expenditure (including other income)
Million ecu	697·9	927·8	923·8	1,067·3
Million pounds	388·3	534·3	547·4	610·8
United Kingdom contributions as percentage of total expenditure	15·9	13·2	13·4	11·8

For future years, our contributions to the ESA mandatory programmes (the general budget and the science programme) will be at a level based on relative GNP, which is fixed at 16·51 per cent. for 1988. Our overall level of contributions will depend on the levels at which we choose to subscribe to future optional programmes. (If we maintain our overall contribution to ESA at around its current level, and if other member states go ahead with the agency's current proposals, the United Kingdom's share of total expenditure will decline to around 5 per cent. by 1992).

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what future benefits in detail Her Majesty's Government envisage will now come to the United Kingdom from the work of the European Space Agency.

Mr. Butcher: We shall continue to play our part in the mandatory programmes which will benefit both our space science community and industry, through the technology programme of the general budget. On the optional programmes, as in the past we shall continue to be selective and look for industrial, technological and commercial benefits to the United Kingdom. Consequently, I shall be discussing with industry the United Kingdom's interest not only in the Columbus and Ariane V programmes, which were discussed at The Hague, but in the future communication and earth observation programmes of ESA.

European Space Centre

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what projects projected for the future by the European space centre Her Majesty's Government consider British industry should co-operate with and help finance, either individually or in alliance with other British or foreign organisations.

Mr. Butcher: Arrangements will be made soon for Government and industry to take a fresh look at United Kingdom civil space activities, both nationally and in ESA. If well-judged projects of proven commercial, industrial and scientific value are put forward, we will consider them alongside other scientific and commercial opportunities.

We will be looking to the private sector to play an increasingly important part in the direction and funding of future programmes.

Steel Industry

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to publish its report on the steel industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State expects to publish this report in the new year. The long delay in publication has been caused by the need to consider very carefully a request by the British Steel Corporation that the Secretary of State should exercise his powers under section 17 of the Competition Act 1980 to make a number of excisions to the published report.

European Regional Development Fund

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what proportion of the European regional development fund was received by Scotland in the last yearly allocation.

Mr. Atkins: Scotland received commitments totalling £84 million from the European regional development fund in 1986. This represents approximately 21 per cent. of the ERDF allocation to the United Kingdom as a whole, and over 3 per cent. of all commitments made by the fund in that year.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which projects submitted from Scotland were (a) accepted and (b) rejected by the European Commission for European regional development fund assistance in the last yearly allocation.

Mr. Atkins: I attach a list of all projects submitted from Scotland for consideration by the European Commission for European regional development fund assistance in 1986.

The list separately identifies those projects which were (a) accepted for ERDF awards, and (b) withdrawn.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is as follows:

PRIME MINISTER

Crewe

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Prime Minister when she next intends to visit Crewe.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Sandwell

Mr. Archer: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit the metropolitan borough of Sandwell.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Computer Purchases

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister at what price threshold the purchase of computer equipment for a Government Department becomes subject to collective ministerial consideration; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is for each Department to judge what consultation is necessary in the light of the size of the prospective purchase and other relevant consideration.

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Madden: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received concerning the affairs of Electronic Data Systems in the past two years; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a small number of such representations, including from hon. Members who have asked questions on the matter.

Ministers and Relatives (Financial Advantage)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library a copy of the rules governing Ministers and their relatives receiving presents or obtaining financial advantage; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: A memorandum by the then Secretary of the Cabinet describing the guidance given to Minsters on this matter was submitted in evidence to the Royal Commission on standards of conduct in public life in 1975. A copy is in the Library. The current guidance is to all intents and purposes the same, and continues to be based on the principle that Ministers must so order their affairs that no conflict arises, or appears to arise, between their private interests and their public duties.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy at the forthcoming EEC Heads of Government meeting in Copenhagen on 4-5 December to raise reports that plutonium and other nuclear explosive materials have been stolen from civil nuclear facilities in the European Economic Community and sold on the black market in Khartoum.

The Prime Minister: No. I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the hon. Member for Merionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 19 November 1987.

Engagements

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 November.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 November.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 November.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 November.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 November.

Mr. Beith To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 November.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 26 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I also received the Soviet ambassador, who informed me of Mr. Gorbachev's acceptance of my invitation to make a short stop in the United Kingdom on his way to the United States/Soviet summit meeting in Washington. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Tropical Rain Forests

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have considered special aid for countries whose Governments wish to preserve areas of tropical rain forest, but are forced by economic and population pressures to give them over to development.

Mr. Chris Patten: The United Kingdom actively supports the tropical forestry action plan, which has a conservation component. Our bilateral project aid expenditure on forestry has increased threefold over the last five years. We have also contributed to the World Wildlife Fund's innovative scheme to conserve the Korup national park in Cameroon, one of Africa's richest areas of rain forests. We are ready to do more, but we must also respect aid recipient Governments' views on the competing priorities for aid funds.

Ethiopia

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received about the developing famine crisis in Ethiopia; what urgent actions are being taken by Her Majesty's Government to render assistance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my right hon. Friend the Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) on 17 November, at columns 480-81. Since then the European Community has allocated the equivalent of a further £7 million in emergency aid, of which Britain's share amounts to about £1·5 million.

EMPLOYMENT

Unemployment Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will publish information on the total number of unemployed people whose claim to benefit has been disqualified or reduced under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 from 5 October 1986 to the most recent available date, together with a breakdown showing (a) the number of initial disqualifications that were for less than 13 weeks, (b) the number that were later reviewed and the disqualification lifted or altered and (c) estimates of the proportions that fell under each of the heads (a) to (d) of section 20(1); and if he will also show how many of these were (i) disqualifications in respect of unemployment benefit alone and (ii) abatement of supplementary benefit where there is no unemployment benefit entitlement;

(2) if he will publish information on the number of claims for unemployment benefit made in the three month period before 5 October 1986, showing how many of these claims were initially disqualified under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975, together with a breakdown showing (a) the number of these initial disqualifications that were for less than six weeks, (b) the number that were later reviewed and the disqualification lifted or altered and (c) estimates of the proportions that fell under each of the heads (a) to (d) of section 20(1);

(3) if he will publish information on the number of claims for unemployment benefit made in the three month period after 5 October 1986, showing how many of these claims were initially disqualified under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975, together with a breakdown showing (a) the number of these initial disqualifications that were for less than 13 weeks, (b) the number that were later reviewed and the disqualification lifted or altered and (c) estimates of the proportions that fell under each of the heads (a) to (d) of section 20(1).

Mr. Lee: Approximately 1·6 million new claims for unemployment benefit were made in the 13 weeks ended 4 October 1986, and 1·1 million in the 13 weeks ended 3 January 1987.

Details of adjudication officers' decisions disqualifying claims for unemployment benefit under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 in each of the quarters ended 30 September 1986, 31 December 1986, 31 March 1987 and 30 June 1987 are shown in the table; the numbers in brackets represent decisions, whenever made, varied on review in each quarter. No analysis is made of the length of disqualification imposed or the number of consequent decisions abating supplementary benefit, and this information could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

	Quarter ended
	30 September 1986	31 December 1986	31 March 1987	30 June 1987
Section 20(1)(a)	110,865 (1,427)	107,510 (1,674)	99,124 (1,989)	95,991 (1,837)
Section 20(1)(b)	465 (18)	534 (23)	549 (29)	494 (21)
Section 20(1)(c)	304 (13)	315 (7)	412 (23)	428 (14)

Section 20(1)(e)	1,227 (58)	1,589 (86)	1,625 (120)	1,242 (51)
Total	112,871 (1,521)	109,955 (1,798)	101,729 (2,178)	98,168 (1,923)

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the industrial relations practices of Electronic Data Systems in the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

Mr. Nicholls: None.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been granted to those working directly or indirectly, for Electronic Data Systems in the United Kingdom; if any hon. or right hon. Members have made representations in support of such work permits being granted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Since 1984, 204 work permits have been issued for employment with Electronic Data Systems. Information about work permits issued in respect of persons working for employers associated with the company is not collated centrally. No representations in support of work permit applications from Electronic Data Systems have been made by any right hon. or hon. Member.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have lost a higher percentage of manufacturing jobs than Wales and Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Lee: International comparisons of labour market statistics should be treated with caution as it is difficult to obtain data for different countries on a consistent basis.

The available data do not cover all OECD countries and are limited to the period 1979 to 1985 and to employees in employment. On this evidence no OECD country taken as a whole showed a greater percentage decline in manufacturing employment than Scotland and Wales. However, as with the United Kingdom, some regions within other OECD countries will have shown greater losses in manufacturing employment than the average.

Community Programme

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how managing agencies assess whether the sponsors of training places under the new community programme are using trainees as substitutes for regular staff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The community programme and other adult training programmes are being replaced by a new training programme for unemployed people from September 1988. The Manpower Services Commission is currently considering the detailed operational arrangements for the new programme, including the arrangements for employer-based placements and training, and has been asked to submit its recommendations by mid-January next

Earnings

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide information covering each of the last five years showing the number of employees whose earnings fell below (a) the minimum for payment of national insurance contributions and (b) the PAYE threshold; and if he will estimate what proportion of these employees work part-time and what proportion are aged under 18 years and 18 to 21 years.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 17 November 1987]: The available information from the new earnings survey is not sufficiently precise to make reliable estimates separately distinguishing the numbers with earnings below these two thresholds. However, broad estimates of the numbers of employees with earnings below the PAYE threshold are as follows:

April	millions
1983	2¼
1984	2¾
1985	3
1986	3
1987	3

The vast majority of these employees work part-time. Information is not available on which to make estimates of their ages.

WALES

Ambulance Service (Tanat Valley)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales from where, and under the auspices of which health authorities, the ambulance service is provided for in the Tanat valley.

Mr. Grist: Ambulance services for the Tanat valley are normally provided from the ambulance station at Llanfyllin, administered by Powys health authority. Additional ambulances are available from Bala ambulance station, administered by Gwynedd health authority and Chirk ambulance station, administered by Clwyd health authority.

Rural Roads

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any further plans to give extra financial aid to local authorities in Wales to improve rural roads; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be announcing local authority capital allocations for 1988-89 shortly.

Rating Reform

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the likely impact on farmers in Wales of the proposed community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have made no separate estimate of the likely impact of our proposals upon farmers. Like everyone else, they will be individually liable for the community charge.

University Hospital of Wales

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when the appointment of a paediatric cardiologist at the University Hospital of Wales will be confirmed.

Mr. Grist: The Department indicated to South Glamorgan health authority in April 1986 that funds were available to appoint a consultant paediatric cardiologist. I understand that the authority has since been seeking to make an appointment.

Cardiothoracic Services

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will act on the recommendations made in the 1981 working party report on cardiothoracic services in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Action has already been taken to implement the conclusions of the Welsh Medical Committee working party on cardiothoracic services. Heartbeat Wales was established and funded by the Welsh Office and Health Education Council to develop a strategy for preventing heart disease. The majority of district health authorities in Wales have appointed consultant physicians with a special interest in cardiology. The development of a cardiac centre in Cardiff is presently being planned and approved in principle for the first phase of the development, the paediatric cardiac unit, has already been given to South Glamorgan health authority.

Infant Cardiology Services

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to improve infant cardiology services in south and west Wales.

Mr. Grist: Approval in principle has been given to South Glamorgan health authority to develop a paediatric cardiac centre at the University Hospital of Wales, Cardiff, which will provide cardiology services for children of all ages, including infants.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to assume responsibility for approving and monitoring the use of waste disposal facilities in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: We are satisfied that the regulatory functions under the Control of Pollution Act 1974 can continue to be undertaken by district councils in Wales.

Contaminated Soil

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received concerning the dumping of a consignment of 800 tons of contaminated soil at the Dark lane tip near Rossett in Clwyd, following importation through the port of Mostyn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: I have received a letter from the hon. Gentleman.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Entry Visas

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will indicate the average length of time taken to dispose of applications made by Pakistan nationals for a visa to enter the United Kingdom as a student; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: Student visas for Pakistani and other nationals are normally granted within 24 hours of application. Doubtful cases may take longer depending on the extent to which further inquiries are necessary to establish that the requirements of the immigration rules are met.

Diplomatic Representation

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the cost of maintaining a diplomatic presence in (a) Nicaragua, (b) Honduras, (c) Guatemala, (d) Costa Rica, (e) El Salvador and (f) Panama in each of the past three years.

Mrs. Chalker: The cost of maintaining a diplomatic presence in the nominated countries, for the years from 1984-85 to 1986-87, is shown in the table.

Figures for Nicaragua are included with those for Costa Rica, where most of the staff accredited to Managua are resident.

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Nicaragua	Included with Costa Rica
Honduras	350	396	357
Guatemala	213	109	245
Costa Rica	[1]428	[1]382	[1]419
El Salvador	106	78	104
Panama	412	423	401

[1] Including Nicaragua.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Hungerford Shootings

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to make the full report and finding of the coroner's inquest into the Hungerford shootings available to hon. Members.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. This is a matter within the discretion of the coroner, who is an independent judicial officer, to whose attention my hon. Friend's question has been drawn.

Foreign Nationals

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each year since 1978, how many foreign nationals have successfully applied for residence in the United Kingdom from (a) Australia, (b) Bangladesh, (c) Canada, (d) East Africa, (e) Hong Kong, (f) India, (g) New Zealand, (h) Pakistan, (i) South Africa, (j) South America, (k) Sri Lanka, (l) United States of America, (m) West Africa, (n) the West Indies and (o) Zimbabwe.

Mr. Renton: The numbers of persons granted settlement in the United Kingdom in each year from 1978 to 1986 are published by nationality in table 21 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1986" (Cm. 166), copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many foreign nationals have successfully applied for refugee status in the United Kingdom; and what were their countries of origin, for each year since 1978;

(2) how many foreign nationals have unsuccessfully applied for refugee status in the United Kingdom; and what were their countries of origin, for each year since 1978.

Mr. Renton: The available information on the outcome of applications for refugee status, by nationality, is for the years 1979 to 1986. The figures for 1979 to 1984 were published in tables 5A-5F of Home Office statistical bulletin "Refugee Statistics, United Kingdom, 1985" (issue 12/86). The corresponding figures for 1985 (which have been revised since the issue of that bulletin) and 1986 were published in tables 6 and 7 of the corresponding bulletin for 1986 (issue 13/87). Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Police (Carlisle)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cumbria as to the number of police deployed in the Carlisle area per year since 1977.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Cumbria that the information requested is as follows:

ON 1 JANUARY	NORTHERN DIVISION (Carlisle City and Carlisle Rural Sub-Divisions)
	Police Establishment	Police Strength
1977	217	198
1978	218	204
1979	218	198
1980	226	210
1981	223	216
1982	228	222
1983	227	216
1984	226	221
1985	228	221
1986	227	220
1987	227	221
1 November 1987	230	224

Licensing Hours

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what information he has as to licensing hours for (a) restaurants and (b) public houses and similar establishments in other EEC countries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information indicates that there are no restrictions on the hours during which alcohol may be sold in France, Belgium, Portugal and Italy, and few restrictions in Spain. Licensing hours in the Federal Republic of Germany vary by area but are generally from 6 am to 1 am; in the Netherlands they are from 5 am to 1 am; and in Denmark from 5 am to midnight, with extensions available to restaurants.

English Wine

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to liberalise the licensing restrictions applying to wine tasting at English vineyards.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Vineyard proprietors with a justices' on-licence, authorising the sale and consumption of wine on the premises, would benefit from the revised licensing hours on weekdays provided by the Licensing Bill. We are not at present persuaded that the law should be relaxed further.

Police (Wales)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visits he has made to police headquarters in Wales in the last 12 months.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has made no such visits.

Emergency Services

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the arrangements for mobilising the emergency services in the event of a major incident in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The operational response to a major incident is a matter for the emergency services concerned. The recent tragic fire at King's Cross underground station has shown how effectively the London services carry out their responsibilities.

Firearms

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the proposed changes in firearms legislation and shotgun certificates.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Next week.

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what matters concerning those employed, directly or indirectly by Electronic Data Systems, have been referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions during the last two years; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many people, employed directly or indirectly by Electronic Data Systems, have breached immigration law, rules or procedures on entering the United Kingdom, in the last two years; what were the names and nationalities of those persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Following allegations in September 1986 that breaches of the immigration laws had been committed by employees of Electronic Data Systems, irregularities were identified in 25 cases after investigation by the immigration service. All these concerned were citizens of the United States of America. We do not consider that it would be right to publish their names. In none of the cases was prosecution considered practicable by the police and none was referred to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he, or his officials, have had any meetings in the United States of America with representatives of Electronic Data Systems to discuss any matters, including those employed directly or indirectly by the company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Over the past two years, Home Office officials and Electronic Data Systems representatives have met on two occasions: in April 1986, at EDS headquarters, in the course of market research into prospective computer suppliers and systems; and in January 1987, as part of a technical equipment appraisal, at the sites of major computer users, where EDS representatives were present in an advisory capacity.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations from or met right hon. and hon. Members to discuss any matters concerning Electronic Data Systems, or those employed directly or indirectly by the company; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I have not met any right hon. or hon. Members to discuss matters concerning Electronic Data Systems or its employees. I have received representations concerning immigration irregularities from the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) to which my right hon. and learned Friend, the then Minister of State, the Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Waddington) replied.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people employed directly or indirectly by Electronic Data Systems, have been refused entry into the United Kingdom; if any such persons appealed against such refusals; if any right hon. or hon. Members have made representations on behalf of such persons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: I regret that the information requested is not available.

DNA Tests

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the results of the DNA blood testing trials which have recently taken place; and whether Her Majesty's Government will introduce them for all applicants for settlement.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, West (Mr. Randall) on 9 November at column 21.

Citizenship

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he will take to reassure those with an entitlement to register as British citizens under the British Nationality Act 1981 who fail to do so by 31 December about their position in the United Kingdom after that date.

Mr. Hurd: I am today publishing a free information leaflet entitled "British citizenship: A Reminder" which explains that, other than the right to register, the rights of those affected will not be changed in any way if they do not apply to be registered as British citizens. The leaflet explains that they will not lose their entitlements to special benefits or their right to vote and that their position under the immigration laws is not changed. The leaflet also makes clear that an application for naturalisation may still be made at any time. The leaflet is now available from the nationality division of the Home Office and is being sent to community relations councils, citizens advice bureaux and other organisations so that they can give them to inquirers. I am placing copies of the leaflet in the Library. I hope this information will help to reassure people who do not use their right to register about their position here after 31 December.

Refugees

Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will implement the main recommendation of the British Refugee Council's policy document "Settling for a Future", a copy of which has been sent to him, by taking the lead in bringing together the relevant Government departments, local authorities and voluntary agencies to develop a co-ordinated plan for the resettlement of refugees in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: Consideration of the Government's response is well advanced under the co-ordination of the voluntary services unit at the Home Office. The response will shortly be conveyed to Lord Chitnis, chairman of the British Refugee Council.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

HMI Reports

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average time lapse between the inspection of a school by Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools and the publication of the report consequent on each inspection.

Mr. Dunn: Of those inspections which have taken place since June 1986, and for which a report has been issued, the average time lapse between the two events was 42 weeks. Of those 90 per cent. were issued within 38 weeks. Reports are not issued, as a general rule, during school holidays and were not issued during the general election campaign. This has worsened the average.

However, no institution or governing body has to wait that long to know the findings of inspections as HMI discusses these and other matters with the head and staff during and at the end of each inspection, and with the governing bodies shortly after.

It remains the aim of HMI that reports should be issued within six months of an inspection and it is working to achieve that time scale. It is hoped to introduce new procedures in the new year that will reduce the overall time taken to the six-month target.

Literacy

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many seven year olds undergoing state education are assessed as being unable to read and comprehend a single sentence.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected centrally.

Education Reform

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provisions he intends to make to enable the classics to be taught when the core curriculum comes into operation.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under our national curriculum proposals, it will be for schools and teachers to decide how much time to spend on each subject. The essential core and other foundation subjects will not take up all the available curricular space. There will therefore be scope for maintained schools to continue to offer other subjects such as classics to some or all pupils if they wish to do so.

Academically Gifted Children

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received with regard to the position of academically gifted children in the state maintained sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A number of responses to the Government's consultations on their proposals for educational reform have included comments about the position of academically gifted children. My right hon.

Friend has made it clear in the remit letter to science and maths working groups, as he will for the other working groups as they are set up, that he wants attainment targets and programmes of study for foundation subjects in the national curriculum to be framed so as to challenge all gifted children to develop their talents to the utmost.

University Posts

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will give the numbers of full-time academic posts of each university in Scotland in each year since 1977-78, differentiating between those posts wholly funded by the university, those externally funded research posts, and those externally funded non-research posts;

(2) if he will give the numbers of full-time academic posts of each university in England and Wales in each year since 1977-78, differentiating between those posts wholly funded by the university, those externally funded research posts, and those externally funded non-research posts.

Mr. Jackson: The information for 1986-87 is given in the following table. Figures for earlier years from 1980-81 have been published in volume 1, "University Statistics" published by the University Statistical Record. Figures for 1977-78 and 1978-79 are contained in "Statistics of Education: Universities" published by the University Grants Committee. Copies of these documents are in the Library.

Medical Research Council

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table showing the annual expenditure in England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland of the Medical Research Council, including administration costs, in each of the last three years.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is as follows:

	1984-85 £ million	1985-86 £ million	1986-87 £ million
England[1]	98·7	102·7	108·3
Scotland	12·4	12·3	13·4
Wales	2·0	1·7	1·3
Northern Ireland	0·2	0·1	0·4
Total	113·3	116·8	123·4

[1] Includes headquarters and central expenses. MRC unit administrative expenses are included under the costs for each country.

Truancy

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will instigate a procedure to collect central statistics on the incidence of truancy.

Mrs. Rumbold: Under the Education Acts, the responsibility for taking action on truancy rests with local education authorities. It is they who should ensure that truancy levels in their schools are monitored and that action is taken to keep them under control. Against this background, and as my right hon. Friend obtains advice on school attendance as on other matters from Her Majesty's Inspectorate, he does not consider that the collection of truancy statistics centrally is at present justified.

School Numbers

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of Education and Science what information about standard numbers applying to primary and secondary schools under section 15 of the Education Act 1980 is held centrally; and whether comparable actual numbers are held centrally.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not keep a central record of standard numbers or planned admissions limits for individual schools. But LEAs and governors have a duty annually to publish planned admissions limits in respect of each school in literature for parents; and some of this information is made available to the Department. In addition, in January of each year, LEAs make a statistical return to the Department of the numbers of pupils on the roll of each school.

University Funding (Wales)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on university funding in Wales.

Mr. Jackson: Grant allocations to university institutions in Wales are assessed by the University Grants Committee in accordance with the principals applied to all other universities in Great Britain, with appropriate allowances for special factors, including the university registry and the needs of Welsh medium teaching.

Education Reform

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of the substantial number of responses to his consultative paper on educational reform, he will send each correspondent, or otherwise publicise, a circular indicating the areas of the Education Bill where the detailed plans were influenced by the nature of the responses received by him; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: There have been more than 17,000 responses to our consultation papers. It would not be appropriate to reply to each of these individually. The Government will, however, draw attention during Parliament's consideration of the Education Reform Bill to the many detailed aspects which have been influenced by the consultation process.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what studies his Department has carried out, or is aware of, into the level of demand amongst parents for (a) devolved financial control over school budgets and (b) opting out of local education authority control.

Mr. Dunn: Correspondence and meetings with parents throughout the country have satisfied the Government that there is considerable support for these proposals, which were resoundingly endorsed by the electorate only a few months ago.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the treatment by him of capital receipts available to local authorities in respect of the overall allocation for England of education capital expenditure, and in respect of each allocation to each individual local authority.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The relationship between gross provision for local authority capital expenditure, allocations and the spending power from capital receipts is set out for 1987-88 in chapter 4 of the 1987 public expenditure White Paper (Cm. 56). As table 4.7 in Cm. 56 shows, spending power from receipts is taken into account in setting a total for capital allocations across the relevant authority services concerned which is compatible with the Government's public expenditure plans. The allocations made to individual local authorities cannot under the existing legislation take account of the receipts available to those authorities.

Testing

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) when he received the report on testing prepared by the centre for educational studies at King's college, London; and if he will make a statement on the conclusions of the report;

(2) if he will publish the report on testing prepared for him by the centre for educational studies at King's college, London.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The final version of the report "Attainment Targets and Assessment in the Primary Phase: Mathematics Feasibility Study" was delivered to the Department at the end of October and will be published shortly. I have made advance copies available to the task group on assessment and testing and to the national curriculum mathematics working group and I have asked these groups to take account of the report's conclusions in framing their advice.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Violence

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions British and Irish Ministers have reaffirmed their determination to continue to work together against those who use or support violance and their belief that the continued development of co-operation between the two police forces would contribute substantially towards this end.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 13 November 1987]: Frequently, and most recently when British and Irish Ministers met on 16 November when their discussion was devoted exclusively to security matters.

ENERGY

Continental Shelf

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the additional volume of oil and gas discovered within the United Kingdom continental shelf since April 1986.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Estimates of the additional recoverable oil and gas reserves made in 1986 were given in the 1987 Brown Book and amounted to 220 million tonnes of oil (1,650 million barrels) and 4·4 trillion cu ft of gas.

Figures for 1987 are not yet available and will be published in the 1988 Brown Book.

Sellafield

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the implications for the work currently being carried out at Sellafield by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., as a result of the nuclear installations safety audit published in December 1986, of the re-assessment made by the National Radiological Protection Board of increased risks from radiation and recommendations for a reduced dose level of radiation exposure.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised that the findings, conclusions and recommendations of the NRPB report do not directly affect the work programme agreed between BNF plc and the HSE as a result of the HSE's "Safety Audit of BNFL Sellafield" report. However BNF plc assures me that in its detailed implementation of this work programme it will take account of the NRPB guidance.

Electricity (Privatisation)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to ensure that in the forthcoming privatisation of the electricity supply industry present and future nuclear and coal-fired power stations will be treated equally with regard to obligations on the new owner-operator companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am considering a range of options for the future structure of the privatised electricity supply industry and for the regulatory arrangements which will be needed. No decisions have yet been taken.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to ensure that in any privatisation plan put forward for nuclear power, full consideration is given to the implications for the economics of present and future nuclear power stations of the report released on 18 November 1987 by the National Radiological Protection Board, entitled "Interim Guidance on the Implications of Recent Revisions of Risk Estimates" and the ICRP 1987 Como statement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It will be for the privatised electricity supply industry to make its own assessment of the economics of various forms of electricity generation, taking into account whatever factors are relevant. Proposals for the structure of the industry after privatisation and the means for ensuring a continuing role for the nuclear programme are being developed; decisions have not yet been taken.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will publish the number of visits made annually by safeguards inspectors from EURATOM to (a) each nuclear reactor operated in England and Wales by the CEGB, (b) each nuclear facility operated by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and (c) each nuclear fuel cycle facility and each nuclear reactor operated by British Nuclear Fuels plc., in each year since 1973;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (a) the number of safeguards visits made to each nuclear reactor site operated by the Central Electricity Generating Board in England and Wales by Inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency in each of the periods 1957 to 1965, 1966 to 1972, 1973 to 1978, and 1979 to 1987 inclusive, (b) the number of safeguards visits made to each nuclear fuel cycle facility in the United Kingdom operated now by British Nuclear Fuels plc. by International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards inspectors in each of the aforementioned periods and (c) the numbers of safeguards visits made to nuclear sites operated in the United Kingdom by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority by the International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards inspectors in each of the above mentioned periods.

(3) if he will publish in the Official Report a table consisting of the number of safeguard visits made to each nuclear reactor site operated by the South of Scotland electricity board by inspectors from the International Atomic Energy Agency in each of the periods 1957 to 1965, 1966 to 1972, 1973 to 1978 and 1979 to 1987 inclusive.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Information about individual visits by inspectors over this period could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

Submarine and Supply Bases (Personnel)

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the total number of non-military personnel employed at each of Britain's nuclear submarine and supply bases for each of the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of non-military personnel employed at each of the bases is as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Her Majesty's Naval Base, Devonport	16,500	17,200	16,700	15,600	3,500
Her Majesty's Naval Base, Rosyth	7,400	7,700	7,600	7,400	1,700
Clyde Submarine Base	3,100	3,100	3,100	3,000	2,800

Notes:

(1) The figures indicate all those employed at bases where nuclear submarines are base ported. Other vessels are also base ported at these locations and the figures above do not reflect those dedicated to work on nuclear submarines. No information specifically relating to the latter is available.

(2) The figures exclude Ministry of Defence police deployed at these locations.

(3) The steep reductions for Devonport and Rosyth between 1986 and 1987 reflect the transition of the former naval dockyards to commercial management.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of non-military personnel employed at each of Britain's nuclear submarine and supply bases who are currently undergoing, or registered with, Government-sponsored training schemes.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is as follows:

	Number
Clyde Submarine Base	22
Her Majesty's Naval Base, Devonport	15
Her Majesty's Naval Base, Rosyth	Nil

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many non-military personnel employed over the last five years at each of Britain's nuclear submarine and supply bases were recruited locally; and if he will express the figures as (a) a percentage of the total local work force and (b) a percentage of the total work force employed at each base.

Mr. Sainsbury: We do not hold separately the numbers of personnel who work directly on nuclear submarines at their base ports because other vessels share these bases. The estimated numbers of personnel recruited locally and employed at these bases (excluding Ministry of Defence Police) are as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
HM Naval Base, Devonport	13,200	13,600	13,300	12,400	2,700
as a percentage of local workforce	10	10	10	9	2
as a percentage of workforce employed at the base	80	80	80	80	77
HM Naval Base, Rosyth	5,900	6,100	6,000	5,800	1,200
as a percentage of local workforce	11	11	11	11	2
as a percentage of workforce employed at the base	80	79	79	78	71
Clyde Submarine Base	2,300	2,200	2,200	2,000	1,900
as a percentage of local workforce	8	8	8	7	7
as a percentage of workforce employed at the base	75	71	71	67	68

The local work force is based on the numbers recorded as at 1986 in the Department of Employment defined travel-to-work areas which includes these naval bases. It excludes those in HM forces and the self-employed.

The steep reductions for Devonport and Rosyth between 1986 and 1987 reflect the transition of the former naval dockyards to commercial management.

Mileage Allowances

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in the Official Report the number of communications he has received since May from organisations involved in the administration of territorial and reserve units about the taxation of mileage allowances of personnel involved in such administration.

Mr. Freeman: One, from the Council of Territorial, Auxiliary and Volunteer Reserve Associations.

Equestrianism

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the mounted units in the Army.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 27 February 1987, at columns 212-13.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what circumstances personnel in non-mounted units are permitted to hunt in duty hours.

Mr. Freeman: Personnel in non-mounted units are not normally permitted to hunt in duty hours. However, in exceptional circumstances and at the commanding officer's discretion it may be permitted provided there is no detriment to military tasks.

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take action to ensure the benefits of equestrian training afforded by playing polo in duty hours are spread according to the training needs of individuals.

Mr. Freeman: Polo takes place in duty time only at the commanding officer's discretion and not to the detriment of any military task.

Privately-owned horses only are used and personnel paticipate largely at their own expense and preference. I see no reason to seek to influence their choice.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any Ministry of Defence contractors have been prosecuted for fraud connected with defence contracts since 1979.

Mr. Sainsbury: Yes. Between January 1979 and October 1986 (the end of the most recent period for which full annual crime statistics are available) the Ministry of Defence police inquired into 36 allegations of serious crime involving defence contractors. Of these, 10 were classified as "no crime", nine were resolved by administrative action, eight resulted in prosecutions, and in the remaining cases investigations were still incomplete at the end of the period. I understand that there have also been a few such cases investigated by Home or Scottish Office police forces which have resulted in prosecutions but these are not centrally recorded.

Nuclear Test (Radiation)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects the report of the National Radiological Protection Board concerning nuclear test veterans to be published.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am pleased to be able to confirm that the work of the study is nearing completion and is expected to be received by the Ministry of Defence in December. I expect the report to be published very early next year.

SCOTLAND

Housing

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the £45 million receipts from the sale of council housing will be allocated to Scottish councils for urgent housing works; and how much of this will be allocated to Glasgow district and Strathclyde regional councils.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Individual gross housing revenue account capital allocations are determined, within the total gross resources available, on the basis of authorities' relative needs. Net allocations are calculated by deducting estimated receipts from gross allocations and each authority receives consent to incur capital expenditure up to its net figure, plus actual receipts generated. It is for authorities themselves to determine the priorities for expenditure within the resources allocated.

The estimated receipts assumed in Glasgow district council's gross housing revenue account allocation for 1987-88 amount to £15·61 million. The latest information I have indicates that the council expects actual receipts to total £17·98 million.

Stratchclyde regional council is not a housing authority.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council tenants in (a) Glasgow and (b) Scotland reported dampness in their homes in 1987; and if he will make a statement on the average waiting times for repairs or rehousing of persons and families reporting such conditions to their local authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested on the incidence of dampness is not yet available for the current year. Treatment of dampness-related problems in council housing is a matter for the local authorities concerned and no information is held centrally on waiting times.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for the number of homes built by the public and private sectors in Glasgow, Pollock constituency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information is collected centrally only for complete district council areas and it is therefore not possible to give figures for individual parliamentary constituencies.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to extend tenants' rights to buy homes at discounted prices to cover property in the private or independent sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to introduce such legislation. Such sales are best left for agreement on a voluntary basis between landlord and tenant.

Electricity Costs

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the funds available to health authorities will be adjusted to take account of any increases in electricity costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. It is for health boards to meet these costs from their general allocations.

Cardiologists

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of National Health Service consultant cardiologists, and the number of consultant physicians practising cardiology, currently in posts in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: At 30 September 1986, the latest date for which information is available, there were 16 consultant cardiologists in post. Information on consultant physicians practising cardiology is not held centrally.

Private Hospital, Clydebank

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what will be the total amount of financial aid that will be made available by various Government agencies to the private hospital to be built at Clydebank.

Mr. Lang: The company has yet to apply for Government assistance, so the level of support has not been determined. The project will be eligible for assistance, including the normal incentives available in enterprise zones, on the same basis as any other commercial undertaking.

Parole

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he expects to announce the remit and membership of the review group on parole in Scotland;

(2) if he will make it his policy to ensure that voluntary organisations with an interest in work with offenders will be represented in the membership of the review group on parole in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to the hon. Member for Falkirk, East (Mr. Ewing) on 9 November, at column 33.

Prison Rules and Standing Orders

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to revise the Prison (Scotland) Rules 1954; and when he plans to publish them;

(2) what progress has been made in the revision of the Prison (Scotland) Standing Orders; and when they will be published.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is intended to consolidate and revise the Prison (Scotland) Rules and Standing Orders as soon as resources and other demands on the Scottish prison service permit. Revision of the rules will require a statutory instrument, which would be laid before Parliament in accordance with Prisons (Scotland) Act 1952, and published in the usual way. One section of standing orders, on communications between inmates and their families, was revised in 1983 and published with an abbreviated version for inmates. Where appropriate, future revisions of sections of standing orders will be made available in the same way.

Regional Development

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sum was spent on regional development grant in 1986-87 in Scotland; and what sum he now intends to spend in 1987-88.

Mr. Ian Lang: Gross expenditure in Scotland on regional development grant in 1986-87 was £170 million. Provision for regional development grant in 1987-88 is £69 million.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether recently released mental patients will be liable for the poll tax..

Mr. Lang: The Abolition of Domestic Rates Etc. (Scotland) Act 1987 makes no provision for the exemption of mentally ill people as a group from personal community charge liability.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers of men unemployed in Clydebank and Milngavie in September 1979 and September 1987, excluding the effect of Government special measures and part-time employment.

Mr. Lang: I understand the question is intended to relate to employment rather than unemployment. The available estimates, derived from the censuses of employment, show 9,308 males in employment in September 1981, and 8,846, of whom 8,401 were full-time, in employment in September 1984. Information on the numbers on Government employment and training programmes is not collected by parliamentary constituency.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each postal code area and local authority ward in Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy district council areas the number unemployed for October 1987, October 1986 and October 1983.

Mr. Lang: [holding answer 19 November 1987]: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Postcode sectors do not necessarily match district boundaries. The number of unemployed claimants in Kirkcaldy postcode sectors, which include Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy districts, in October 1983, October 1986 and October 1987 is shown in table 1. The number of unemployed claimants within each ward in Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy districts in October 1983, 1986 and 1987 is shown in tables 2 and 3. Figures for October 1983 are not comparable with those for October 1986 and October 1987 because of changes in the coverage of the count.

This information is available in the Library.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The mean waiting times of patients who were admitted from the waiting list and have undergone an operation for glue ear in 1985, the latest year for which statistics are centrally available, are as follows. 94 per cent. of the cases were under age 16.

Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply of 10 November to the hon. Member for Monklands, West, Official Report, column 138, whether he is now in a position to make a further statement on the implementation of section 13 of the Disabled Persons (Services, Representation and Consultation) Act 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following discussion with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, my right hon. and learned Friend has decided to implement section 13 of the Act from 1 February 1988.

The first group of disabled school children to receive statutory assessment by local authority social work departments under the terms of section 13 will effectively be those reaching the statutory school leaving age in 1990. Local authorities will be able to decide for themselves how far they can apply the new arrangements on a non-statutory basis to children and young persons who may leave school before then.

These arrangements will improve considerably the transition from special education to other forms of provision, and will be of material benefit to disabled children at this critical stage of their lives.

Aberdeen College of Commerce

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has received from Grampian regional council on the closure of the main building at Aberdeen college of commerce.

Mr. Rifkind: I understand from Grampian regional council that as a result of a structural survey of the main building of Aberdeen college of commerce, carried out by a firm of consultant engineers, the education authority has decided to close the main college building on grounds of safety.

Alternative accommodation is actively being sought for the 2,000 or so staff and students who use the building. The college's other annexes are not affected, and classes are proceeding there as normal. The education authority has already identified spare capacity in a number of schools and other buildings, and many others in Aberdeen have been generous with offers of help. In some cases, college lecturers are teaching students at their employers' premises, and in other cases church halls, hotel rooms and banks are being used.

The education authority expects that no significant teaching time will be lost, and examinations should not be affected; and I understand that SCOTVEC will be adopting a sympathetic treatment of students at the college whose courses have been interrupted.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep (Restrictions)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will impose restrictions under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 on the movement of sheep in north Yorkshire similar to those in operation in Cumbria where radioactivity levels in sheep have been found above the 1,000 becquerel level limit; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: In view of the very small number of breeding ewes that we have recorded in north Yorkshire as being above our action level, I do not think that at present there is any need to impose general movement restrictions on sheep in that area in order to protect food supplies. As a precaution, however, I have served a direction under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 on the owner of the one flock involved preventing him from moving sheep out of his flock without my express permission.

Council of Agriculture Ministers

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers meeting in Brussels, which reconvened on 23 November.

Mr. MacGregor: The Council of Agriculture Ministers met in Brussels on 23-24 November to discuss budgetary stabilisers; that is to say, amendments to the common agricultural policy designed to ensure that its costs can be kept under control, and in particular the proposed stabilisers for a wide range of commodities which the House debated on 24 November.

The Council reconvened yesterday evening for further discussions on the basis of the revised document tabled by the Danish presidency. I greatly regret that, despite lengthy negotiations, it proved impossible to reach agreement. I of course defended the position which I explained to the House during the debate on 24 November.

The lack of agreement will be reported to the Ministers of Foreign Affairs who are meeting informally on Sunday and Monday, prior to the meeting of Heads of Government on 4 and 5 December.

The Council has adopted a decision to allow meat from animals treated with hormones to be traded within the Community for a further 12 months beyond the date of 31 December 1987 laid down in directive 85/649. The effect will be that, for that period, meat (and offals) from animals treated within the Community or in third countries, may be traded in accordance with existing arrangements. The Community deadline of 1 January 1988 for a ban on the administration to livestock of hormones for growth promotion will not be affected; and from that date there will be free trade within the Community in untreated meat. Our producers should benefit from that. The Council took its decision before the normal process of parliamentary scrutiny had been completed.

Lindane and Pentachlcrophenol

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to investigate the use of the chemicals Lindane and Pentachlcrophenol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 9 November 1987]: I have been asked to reply.

Pesticides including those containing Lindane and PCP are subject to the Control of Pesticide Regulations 1986. They can be used only following formal approval based on the advice of the Advisory Committee on Pesticides which reviews the evidence of risk and advises on precautions. The aim of these procedures is to safeguard human health and the environment. The advisory committee is able to review its advice if new information becomes available.

Mr. Lilley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on 19 November.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the number of value added tax refund claims under Customs and Excise notice 714 processed for the fiscal year 1986-87.

Mr. Lilley: I presume my hon. Friend refers to Customs and Excise notice No. 719 (Refund of VAT to do-it-yourself builders). The number of claims processed in the fiscal year 1986-87 was 8,950.

27. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the balance of trade in manufactured goods for the United Kingdom in 1979; and what is the anticipated figure for 1988.

Mr. Major: Since 1979 the volume of the United Kingdom's manufactured exports have grown by 27 per cent. In 1988 the deficit in manufactured trade is likely to show a £9 billion deficit, largely because of the rapid growth in the United Kingdom economy compared to that of its competitors. In 1979 exports of manufactures were £31 billion and there was a surplus of £2·7 billion on manufactured trade.

43. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of United Kingdom manufacturing productivity since 1980.

91. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of United Kingdom manufacturing productivity since 1980.

19. Mr. French: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the main factors currently influencing the level of public borrowing in the United Kingdom.

40. Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for growth of productivity in the United Kingdom economy as a whole; and what are the comparable figures in other major industrialised countries.

37. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on how the rate of economic growth in the United Kingdom compares with that of other major industrialised countries.

72. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on how the rate of economic growth in the United Kingdom compares with that of other major industrialised countries.

Mr. Lilley: Between 1983 and 1986 the number of jobs in the United Kingdom grew by almost 1 million, more than in the rest of the European Community put together.

Job Creation

39. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he makes of the extent to which Government economic policy has contributed to the fall in adult unemployment over the last 12 months.

54. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the extent to which Government economic policy has contributed to the fall in adult unemployment over the last 12 months.

89. Mrs. Hicks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he makes of the extent to which Government economic policy has contributed to the fall in adult unemployment over the last 12 months.

Mr. Major: The Government's policies have created a stable financial framework, and encouraged greater effort and enterprise. As a result, the United Kingdom is growing faster than any other major economy, and firms are taking on new workers at an accelerating rate. This has contributed to a fall in adult unemployment of almost 450,000 since October 1986, the largest 12-monthly fall on record.

Capital Gains Tax

23. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding the impact of current levels of capital gains tax; and if he will make a statement.

26. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he now expects the total proceeds from capital gains tax to be in the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimated receipts from capital gains tax and corporation tax on gains are expected to be around £1·3 billion and £0·8 billion respectively. These estimates are unchanged from the 1987 FSBR.

Personal Credit

24. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the growth in personal credit over the past year.

Mr. Major: There is no evidence that consumer credit has been accelerating recently. Much of the increase in personal debt takes the form of lending for house purchase or home improvement.

83. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current level of industrial production in the United Kingdom; and what was the comparable figure in 1983.

Mr. Major: In the third quarter of 1987, the index of output of the production industries was 114·3, more than 12 per cent. above its average level in 1983.

Take-Home Pay

34. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the real take-home pay of a married man with two children on male average earnings and on half male average earnings; and how these compare with 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Real take-home pay for a married man with two children on average male earnings is estimated to be £181·30 per week in 1987-88, an increase of 22·9 per cent. over 1978-79. The equivalent figure for real take-home pay for a man on half average earnings is £107·75, an increase of 18·5 per cent. over 1978-79. Average male earnings are calculated over all occupations for men paid at adult rates working a full week.

New Coins

42. Mr. Speller: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the proposed new coins will be in circulation; in what denominations they will be; and if he will make a statement on their sizes and shapes.

47. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the movement of general Government expenditure since 1982-83; and what this now represents as a proportion of gross domestic product.

Mr. Major: In real terms general Government expenditure, excluding privatisation proceeds, grew by about 1¾ per cent. a year in the period 1982-83 to 1986-87; as a percentage of GDP it is expected to be about 42¼ per cent. in 1987-88. For further details see tables 2.1 and 2.2 of the Autumn Statement 1987 HC No. 110.

90. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest figure for the public expenditure outturn in 1987-88.

Mr. Major: The latest forecast of the planning total for 1987-88 is £147·6 billion as set out in the 1987 Autumn Statement.

Mr. Lamont: I have noted my hon. Friend's suggestion.

Unemployment Costs

52. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the current cost of unemployment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: The estimated expenditure on unemployment and supplementary benefit paid to the unemployed is £6,050 million. In addition, it is estimated that £1,300 million will be paid in housing benefit, a benefit which can continue to be paid if the recipient finds employment.

Meals (Taxation)

53. Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to update the tax treatment of meals provided by employers for employees whilst at work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In common with other benefits in kind, the tax treatment of meals provided by employers for employees whilst at work is kept under review.

Stock Exchange

55. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the chairman of the stock exchange; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has met Sir Nicholas Goodison on a number of recent occasions and they discussed a wide range of topics.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No further privatisations are planned before the end of 1987.

75. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which will be the next industry in the public sector to be privatised; whether the Bank of England will offer a buy-back option to the underwriters, sub-underwriters or investors; and whether the privatised company will be debarred from acquiring smaller companies in the same British industrial sector for any period of time after privatisation.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No decisions have yet been taken on the next privatisation. We do not anticipate that there will be buy-back arrangements in future privatisations.

77. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the receipts from the privatisation programme in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether, in the light of recent events, he has revised his estimates of privatisation proceeds to the Exchequer over the next few years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor indicated in his Autumn Statement that central estimates of privatisation proceeds were £5 billion per annum for 1987-88; 1988-89 and 1989-90. These estimates are subject to the extent of take-up of the Bank of England's BP share purchase arrangements.

Sovereign Debt

61. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue staff specialise in the assessment of sovereign debt problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About 20 senior Inland Revenue officials (with supporting staff) are engaged, among their other duties, in establishing deductions legally due in respect of sovereign debts in computing taxable profits of banks.

62. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what subjects he has had recent discussions with other Finance Ministers in the Group of Seven countries.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Cash).

Mortgage Interest Tax Relief

65. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to reduce the maximum amount of mortgage interest tax relief which may be claimed by joint owners of a single dwelling.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 29 October at column 398, to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin).

87. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax units are currently receiving mortgage interest relief at source.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1987-88, about 8 million tax units are expected to benefit from the mortgage interest relief at source (MIRAS) scheme.

Government Expenditure

66. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish figures for general Government expenditure as a proportion of gross domestic product, excluding social security, since 1978-79.

Mr. Major: General Government expenditure, excluding social security benefits, as a percentage of GDP is as follows:

1978-79	34·00
1979-80	34·25
1980-81	36·25
1981-82	35·50

Mr. Lilley: Decisions on changes in car tax are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget judgment.

69. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on progress on his call for concerted international action to reduce interest rates on rescheduled official debt.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor's proposal to reduce interest rates on rescheduled official debt is supported by several Paris Club creditor countries. He will continue to take every opportunity to press for support from those countries that have difficulties with his proposal.

Interest Rates

73. Mr. Latham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement on the movement of interest rates since the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates have fallen by ½ per cent. to 9 per cent. since the Autumn Statement.

74. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 9 per cent.

Economic Progress

78. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the criteria by which he judges economic progress.

Mr. Major: Steady sustained growth, rising living standards, an improved supply side performance, and a reduction in inflation, a combination which has been experienced in the United Kingdom throughout the last five years.

Tobacco

79. Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to reduce the duty on tobacco.

Mr. Lilley: Decisions on excise duties are a matter for my right hon. Friend's Budget judgment.

80. Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth of unit labour costs in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: In the second quarter of 1987 unit labour costs for the whole economy were 4 per cent. higher than a year earlier. Manufacturing unit wage costs were 1·5 per cent. higher than a year earlier in the third quarter of 1987.

Forestry

82. Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is considering any changes in the tax system governing investment in forestry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Decisions on changes in taxation are a matter for the Chancellor's Budget statement.

84. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will call for a meeting of the Group of Seven to address the economic consequences for the United Kingdom and other countries of the recent crisis in the financial markets.

Mr. Lilley: The Finance Ministers of the major industrial countries meet from time to time to discuss a range of international economic issues. The next meeting will take place when judged appropriate.

Inflation

98. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on the estimated rise in inflation in Japan, West Germany and France over the next 12 months.

Mr. Lilley: Inflation is expected to remain low in all three countries.

Manufactured Exports

99. Mr. Curry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth of United Kingdom manufactured exports since 1981.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Boothferry (Mr. Davis).

Latin-American Debt

101. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the impact on leading United Kingdom banks of the reduced ability of Latin American countries to repay debt in the event of a cut in the United States budget deficit.

Mr. Lilley: The effect on world financial and trading conditions of a cut in the United States budget deficit should benefit all countries, including those in Latin America.

National Debt (Statistics)

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the United Kingdom national debt as a percentage of gross national product, and any similar information available to him for the United States of America, France, Italy, Japan and Canada.

Mr. Lilley: United Kingdom national debt is defined as liabilities of the national loans fund which has no counterpart in many other countries. The normal basis for international comparisons is general Government net debt which, in the United Kingdom, comprises general Government debt held outside the public sector less general Government bank deposits and claims on the non-bank private sector, principally housing loans and outstanding taxes.

Comparable international OECD figures for general Government net national debt as a percentage of GDP/GNP are as follows:

Per cent.

Inland Revenue Computer

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate what the cost would be of ensuring that (a) 80 per cent., (b) 90 per cent., (c) 95 per cent. and (d) 98 per cent. of the records for individuals held on the Inland Revenue computer included the correct address of the individual concerned.

Mr. Lawson: I regret that the information on which to base a reliable estimate is not available.

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on how many individuals computer-based data are held by the Inland Revenue; and if he will estimate for what proportion of these addresses are (a) not recorded or (b) recorded inaccurately.

Mr. Lawson: The Inland Revenue holds computer-based information for about 30 million individuals, and has home addresses for almost all of these.

There is no means of giving a reliable estimate of how many home addresses are inaccurate, since there are many taxpayers to whom the Revenue does not need to write at their home address from one year to the next.

Less-Developed Countries

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he intends to take any further initiatives to assist the debt problems of less-developed countries.

Mr. Lilley: There is now a widespread support internationally for two of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's proposals — that is, that aid loans be converted to grants and that longer grace and repayment periods be applied to rescheduled officially guaranteed debt for the poorest and most heavily indebted countries of sub-Saharan Africa. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor will continue to press for further support for his proposal to reduce interest rates on rescheduled official debts and for the proposal to enlarge the IMF's concessional structural adjustment facility.

Mileage Allowances

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what consultations he held with voluntary organisations prior to implementing, through the Finance Act 1987, taxation of mileage allowances payable to those in voluntary work; and if he will list in the Official Report the names of those organisations he consulted;

(2) what is the total amount of revenue which has accrued to the Treasury since the implementation of the Finance Act 1987 through the taxation of mileage allowances payable to voluntary organisations.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not clear what the hon. Member has in mind. The Finance Act 1987 does not contain any provisions relating to the tax treatment of mileage allowances payable to voluntary workers. If the hon. Member has a particular problem in mind perhaps she would like to write and let me have details.

Government Data Network

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he will use in selecting the successful contractor for the Government data network.

Mr. Brooke: Value for money, which includes quality, delivery against price and whole life costs.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received from members of the public concerning the commercial banks' claim for tax relief on development country debt provisions.

Mr. Lilley: Approximately 840 representations have been received from members of the public, the vast majority of which are pre-printed cards as part of a campaign by War on Want.

Sovereign Debt

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue staff specialise in the assessment of sovereign debt problems.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 24 November 1987]: About 20 senior Inland Revenue officials (with supporting staff) are engaged, among their other duties, in establishing deductions legally due in respect of sovereign debts in computing taxable profits of banks.

Grande Carajas Project (Brazil)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the question of Her Majesty's Government's contribution to the EEC funding of the Grande Carajas project in Brazil.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 19 November 1987]: I have received no such representations.

Profit-related Pay Schemes

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employers have applied to register profit-related schemes with the Inland Revenue; and how many profit-related pay schemes have been accepted and registered by the Inland Revenue.

Mr. Brooke: [holding answer 19 November 1987]: By the end of October, 243 applications had been received and 146 schemes had been registered by the Inland Revenue.

ENVIRONMENT

Property Services Agency

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of the expenditure incurred by the Property Services Agency on construction and maintenance for clients carried out on a repayment basis is added to the cost of such work to cover the Property Services Agency's administration costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Actual administration costs as recorded in the PSA's staff costing system are recovered from the following:

Royal Ordnance Factory Organisation
Manpower Services Commission
British Telecom
Land Registry
Department of National Savings
Her Majesty's Stationery Office
Major new construction projects for other repayment clients

For other clients, administration costs are recovered by percentage additions to works expenditure as follows:

	Major New Works	Minor New Works	Maintenance
NATO	13·5	22	19
Property Repayment Service Departments	—	30	18
Other Repayment Clients	—	22	19
Work by PSA's Directly Employed Labour for all Clients	—	—	10
Work for United States Forces under the Cost Sharing Agreement	7·5	7·5	7·5
Other Work for United States Forces	—	—	20

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of homeless households accepted by non-metropolitan authorities in the south-east became homeless through mortgage arrears (a) between 1 July 1981 and 30 June 1982, (b) between 1 July 1982 and 30 June 1983, (c) between 1 July 1983 and 30 June 1984, (d) between 1 July 1984 and 30 June 1985, (e) between 1 July 1985 and 30 June 1986 and (f) between 1 July 1986 and 30 June 1987; and if he will give this information for the south-east as a whole, and for each local authority in the region.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the number of homeless households in priority need who were accepted by non-metropolitan authorities in the south-east region (a) between 1 April 1981 and 31 March 1982, (b) between 1 April 1982 and 31 March 1983, (c) between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1984, (d) between 1 April 1984 and 31 March 1985, (e) between 1 April 1985 and 31 March 1986 and (f) between 1 April 1986 and 31 March 1987; and if he will give this information for the south-east region as a whole, and for each local authority in the region.

Mr. Waldegrave: Figures provided by local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns appear in the "HIP1 All Items print": copies of these prints for the years 1984 to 1987 are available in the Library and copies of those for 1982 and 1983 will be placed there shortly.

Following are estimates derived from the local authorities' figures:

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make extra resources available to help with the problem of homelessness.

Mr. Waldegrave: For this financial year, we have already offered an extra grant for housing associations providing better interim accommodation for homeless families under the mixed funding initiative.

In addition, my right hon. Friend announced on 3 November that further resources would be made available for local authorities with the most pressing needs to spend this year on projects for families who would otherwise be homeless.

For next year, provision for housing capital spending has been increased by £384 million as compared with previous plans, including an increase in the Housing Corporation's programme to £735 million. The new initiative on mixed funding will also draw on additional private resouces and harness them to the provision of social housing.

Housing Association Tenancies

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was (a) the total number of households and (b) the number of homeless households taking up nominations by non-metropolitan authorities in the south-east to secure housing association tenancies (i) between 1 April 1981 and 31 March 1982, (ii) between 1 April 1982 and 31 March 1983, (iii) between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1984, (iv) between 1 April 1984 and 31 March 1985, (v) between 1 April 1985 and 31 March 1986 and (vi) between 1 April 1986 and 31 March 1987; and if he will give this information for the south-east as a whole, and for each local authority in the region.

Mr. Waldegrave: Figures provided by local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns appear in the "HIP All items print" for the years 1982 to 1987; copies of the prints for 1984 to 1987 are available in the Library and those for 1982 and 1983 will be placed there shortly.

(2) what was the number of dwellings let by non-metropolitan authorities in the south-east to new tenants who were homeless householders (a) under secure tenancies and (b) under non-secure tenancies between (i) 1 April 1981 and 30 March 1982, (ii) between 1 April 1982 and 30 March 1983, (iii) between 1 April 1983 and 30 March 1984, (iv) between 1 April 1984 and 30 March 1985, (v) between 1 April 1985 and 30 March 1986 and (vi) between 1 April 1986 and 30 March 1987; and if he will give this information for the south-east as a whole, and for each local authority in the region.

Peak Park Planning Board

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment of the planning applications made to the Peak park planning board in the last year, how many were successful and how many failed.

Mr. Waldegrave: In 1986-87, the Peak park joint planning board granted 596 planning applications and refused 185.

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications in the years 1980-81, 1981-82, 1983-84, 1984-85 and 1985-86 were made to the Peak park planning board; in each year, how many were successful and how many failed; in each year, how many appeals from decisions of the board he received; and how many of those were successful.

Mr. Waldegrave: The available information is given in the two following tables. With the exception of the figures indicated, the information given is published in the annual reports of the Peak park joint planning board (copies of which are in the Library).

Basingstoke and Deane

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning applications from the borough of Basingstoke and Deane have gone to appeal in each year since 1979; and what percentage of the appeals in each year has been successful.

Mr. Waldegrave: The table shows the number of planning appeals received and decided in relation to the Basingstoke and Deane district between 1 January 1984, the earliest date from which information on an individual planning authority basis is available, and 30 June 1987. Decisions issued in a particular year do not necessarily relate to appeals lodged in that year. Some of the appeals received were withdrawn before being determined.

Appeals received	96	92	106	57
Appeals decided	72	101	57	45
Percentage allowed (of appeals decided)	18 per cent.	44 per cent.	35 per cent.	18 per cent.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to increase resources available to local authorities for housing expenditure intended to halt the physical deterioration of housing estates.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is already Government policy to make additional resources available for the renovation of local authority estates. Gross provision for all local authority capital expenditure on housing in 1988-89 will be £3,048 million, an increase of 4 per cent. over this year and the third successive annual increase. This includes £140 million specifically for Estate Action schemes, which is nearly double the current year's provision.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning appeals are currently awaiting his decision.

Mr. Waldegrave: Approximately 11,700 planning appeals are currently awaiting decision by the Secretary of State, or by planning inspectors appointed by him.

Green Belt

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to issue new guidance on development within the metropolitan green belt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We remain committed to green belt policy as set out in DOE circular 14/84 and our subsequent statements on the use which may be made of redundant farm buildings (Official Report, 30 April 1986, column 414) and redundant hospital sites (DOE circular 12/87) without detriment to the green belt.

Darenth Park

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment what representations he has received concerning the proposed redevelopment of the Darenth Park hospital site.

Mr. Waldegrave: Representations have been received from a number of local bodies and residents, including 19 letters supporting the proposal and nine opposing it.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations (a) for the creation of new enterprise zones or (b) for the extension of existing enterprise zones.

Mr. Trippier: Representations have been received from local authorities, hon. Members and others seeking the designation of new enterprise zones and the extension of existing zones.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to introduce any new enterprise zones or grant extensions to existing enterprise zones.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend has no statement to make on this at present.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the number of jobs (a) created and (b) retained in each enterprise zone since its creation.

Mr. Trippier: The number of jobs that existed in enterprise zones at designation and those that were present at October 1985 are given in the table below. Information as to whether specific jobs at designation were in existence in October 1985 is not available.

Rating Reform

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from businesses in the north-west region concerning the proposals for a unified business rate.

Mr. Howard: My right hon. Friend has received several representations from businesses in the north-west. If the unified business rate had been implemented this year, it would have saved businesses in the north-west £180 million, or 18 per cent. of their present rate bills.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the likely impact of the proposed unified business rate on non-domestic ratepayers in each of the districts in Staffordshire expressed in percentage terms.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) of 29 June at column 44, which showed the percentage change in non-domestic rates in each district in the event of a move to a national non-domestic rate set at the 1987-88 average. The changes illustrate for Staffordshire districts range from +4·2 per cent. to −1·6 per cent.

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether recently released mental patients will be liable for the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: Patients released from psychiatric hospitals will cease to be exempt from the personal community charge, unless they fall within any of the categories of exempt person which we have announced.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will set out the formula showing the effect on all local authorities not benefiting from the maximum poll tax safety net of each £1 change in the safety net both upward and downward.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 November 1987]: Areas contributing to the safety net, but below the level of the maximum contribution, are unaffected by the decision to have such a maximum. For each £1 fall in the maximum contribution (for example from £75 to £74), areas benefiting from the safey net would see that benefit reduced by £1 × the adult population of the areas benefiting from that reduction over the total adult population of areas benefiting from the safety net except that no area is required to become a net contributor to the safety net as a result of this calculation.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 19 November on households gaining and losing on the introduction of the poll tax, he will give figures for the estimated amount of money which each of the defined households will lose for the losers and gain for the gainers, giving separate figures for gainers and losers.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 November 1987]: The figures requested are as follows:

Rounded estimates of gains and losses for main household types from full introduction of the Community Charge

	Losers £ million	Gainers £ million	Net gain £ million
Single pensioners	10	140	130

Two adults	550	660	110
Three plus adults	440	70	−370

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 17 November, Official Report, columns 483-4, relating to the transitional arrangements for the poll tax, he will provide an update of his reply on 26 October, Official Report, columns 37-38, on regional loser and gainer households for the illustrative year 1990-91.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 25 November 1987]: The figures requested are as follows. They have been produced on the same basis and are subject to the same qualifications as those I gave the hon. Member on 26 October at column 38.

Rivers (Purity)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which rivers in England are wholly or partly within the lowest category of wholesomeness.

Mr. Moynihan: The river quality survey 1985 showed that about 2 per cent. of total river length in England was classified as being of bad quality—class 4—which is the lowest category in the national classification scheme. Three quarters of these rivers are in the older industrial areas of the north-west and Yorkshire, and major schemes of improvement are underway. The Government's policy is for upgrading of all remaining class 4 rivers.

I am sending the hon. Member a copy of the map which shows the location of rivers within this classification. Further details are contained in the survey, copies of which are available in the Library.

Houses of Parliament (Emergency Heating)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that in the interests of safety, when emergency heating has to be introduced into any part of the Houses of Parliament or its outbuildings, that it is electric and thermostatically operated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Existing electric circuits in buildings can carry only a limited load which severely restricts the use of electric heaters in an emergency.

Bird and Wildlife Sanctuaries

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to ensure that important bird and wildlife sanctuaries located in gravel pits, are not used for housing development.

Mr. Moynihan: Each case must be considered on its merits, but we have already issued advice to local authorities, emphasising the importance of taking full account of the needs of nature conservation in considering development proposals affecting important wildlife sites. This is contained in DOE circular 108/77, which is currently being revised. I expect shortly to issue updated advice.

Merseyside Development Corporation

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is in a position to make a statement about the development plans of the Merseyside development corporation on the Wirral side of the Mersey; if he will detail the size of the Merseyside development corporation's budget for the next three years; and what proportion of this is expected to be spent on developments in the Wirral.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The development plans of the Merseyside development corporation for its Wirral development area relate, primarily, to the reclamation of 114 acres of derelict dockland for industrial, commercial and residential purposes. In order to progress these plans, the corporation needs to own the land. It has announced today that agreement to purchase has now been reached with the landowners, the Mersey Docks and Harbour Company. I welcome this agreement. I hope it will lead to the early regeneration of this area. To this end an increasing proportion of MDC's spending will be devoted. Their estimated annual expenditure is shown in the table. Staff, office and estate management costs are excluded.

SOCIAL SERVICES

NHS Land

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Norfolk, North, on 13 November, if in the light of the fact that his Department has already provided information on the acreage of land held in the Norwich district health authority area, he will list in league order, with the highest at the top, the acreage of land held in those district health authority areas within the National Health Service in England about which he has readily available information centrally; and if he will also give the total.

Mrs. Currie: The figures provided on 13 November for the major property by the Norwich health authority, were obtained from a special scrutiny of that authority's land terriers. Smaller sites were, as now, excluded. A table follows which includes the available information from authorities who have returned aggregated information for their major sites in the format requested. It is estimated that the total site area is 51,000 acres.

In-Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received about in-vitro fertilisation research; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Nuneaton (Mr. Stevens) today.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy towards community hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: Small community hospitals make an important contribution to the National Health Service. It is, however, for each health authority to determine the appropriate pattern of district services. In doing so they will balance the benefits of well used community hospitals alongside those of larger district hospitals in the light of changing circumstances and so as to secure the best possible value and level of service provision for all the local communities they serve.

Retirement Pensions

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will estimate the number of retirement pensions payable in 1988-89 to male and female persons aged 75 years or over and to those aged 80 years and over; and how many of the latter are expected to qualify for an increased level of income support on account of their age.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that about 1·3 million men and 2·5 million women over 75 will be receiving retirement pension in 1988-89. Of these, about 580,000 men and 1·4 million women recipients will be over 80. The figures include recipients of non-contributory retirement pension, and relate to individuals.

It is also estimated that there will be about 490,000 recipients of income support with the over-80 pensioner premium in 1988-89. The figures relate to claimants and may represent either single people or couples.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of pensioners male and female, currently receive less than the basic state retirement pension on account of incomplete contributions; and what percentage receive an uplifted pension at or exceeding 125 per cent. of the basic on account of additional, graduated or earnings-related contributions.

Mr. Scott: As at September 1986, 3·7 per cent. of men received less than the standard rate of retirement pension because of incomplete contributions. 11·2 per cent. of women received less than the appropriate standard rate of pension because of defects in their own or their husband's contribution record. I regret that the other information requested is not held in that form, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospital Beds, Norwich

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of National Health Service beds available in hospitals under the control of Norwich health authority in each of the years 1960, 1970, 1972, 1975, 1980 and 1987.

Mrs. Currie: I cannot give my hon. Friend all the information he seeks. Due to restructuring in 1974, comparable figures for earlier years requested are not available. 1986 is the latest year for which figures are available.

NHS hospitals activity in Norwich District Health Authority

	Year
	1975	1980	1986
Available beds	3,965·1	3,979·2	3,452·5

Total out-patient att.,	182,217	245,009	286,737
Throughput	10·4	13·3	18·2

Over the period the number of in-patient cases treated increased from 41,173 in 1975 to 62,726 in 1986. This represents an increase in the number of in-patient cases treated per available bed from 10·4 to 18·2.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the cost per in-patient week for each of the London postgraduate hospitals in each of the last three financial years.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the revenue allocations to the special health authorities for the London postgraduate hospitals in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is shown in the table.

Alternative Medicine

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will establish a committee under section 4 of the Medicines Act 1968 so that he may have competent advice on alternative medicine; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Under the Medicines Act the Medicines Commission has a statutory duty to make recommendations to Ministers regarding the number and functions of section 4 committees. The existing structure of statutory committees has been established following its advice and I understand that the commission has no plans at present to recommend the appointment of any additional committee.

Towers Hospital, Leicester

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the recommendations of the report of the Health Advisory Service concerning the Towers hospital in Leicester.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the Health Advisory Service has not yet produced a written report on the recent visit to Leicestershire. It is the responsibility of the district health authority concerned to consider what action should be taken on any recommendation.

Homes for the Elderly

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of privately owned homes for the elderly in Brighton, Hove, Worthing, Bournemouth, Eastbourne, Chichester, Lewes and Clacton; what percentage of residents in these homes have their payments for being there mainly or wholly met by his Department; and if he will give the average weekly sum per resident.

Mr. Newton: Information on the number of private homes is available only on the basis of social services authority areas. As at 31 March 1986 the counties containing the districts mentioned had the following numbers of private residential care homes for elderly people:

	Number
East Sussex	304
West Sussex	267
Dorset	269
Essex	162

Further information about private homes is available in "The Directory of Private Hospitals and Health Services" a copy of which is in the Library. Information about the proportion of residents in these homes in receipt of supplementary benefit and the average weekly payment is not available.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if it is his intention to introduce regulations whereby the local social services department would be obliged to give a view on the suitability of an elderly person to enter a privately owned home where further funding will be required for that person; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The joint central and local government working party on public support for residential care considered whether people entering residential care and requiring support from public funds should have their need for care assessed by local authorities. Decisions on the working party's report will be considered in the context of the work of Lady Wagner's group on the role of residential care and Sir Roy Griffiths' wider examination of the use of resources in relation to community care, both of which should be completed early next year.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the inspection of all privately owned homes for use by the elderly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Central, Fife (Mr. McLeish) on 24 November.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average amount paid out weekly per resident by his Department to owners of privately owned homes for the elderly on behalf of residents.

Mr. Portillo: Where the resident is entitled to supplementary benefit help with the fees, payment is made to the resident himself and not to the home owner, except where, very exceptionally, payment is received by the owner because either the resident cannot manage his own affairs and there is no one else to act for him, or the resident has fallen into arrears with his fees and direct payment is the best way to safeguard his accommodation. In May 1987, the latest date for which information is available, the average weekly payment of supplementary benefit to those elderly people in receipt of supplementary benefit in residential care and nursing homes was £107·13.

Home owners also receive payments made by local authorities in respect of sponsored residents.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the infant mortality rate within the first year of birth for each year from 1981 to 1986 in each regional health authority area in England and Wales.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table.

Infant mortality rates (deaths under one year of age per 1,000 live births) for England and Wales, and usual residents of Wales and regional health authorities—1981 to 1986

Ambulances

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will outline the average expenditure per mile paid by each area health authority towards the use of an ambulance.

Mrs. Currie: The information for 1985-86 is available on pages 164-166 of the Department's publication "Health Service Costing Returns", copies of which are held in the Library. Information for 1986-87 is not yet available.

Hospitals (Cornwall and Isles of Scilly)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations have been received regarding recent cuts in hospital services in the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members about the measures recently announced by the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority to enable it to keep within its budget. I refer the hon. Member to my reply to him on 26 October at column 179.

Nurses (Special Duty Payments)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any study has been conducted to establish the likely effects of cuts in special duty payments to nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Nursing and Midwifery Staff Negotiating Council, the body responsible for negotiating nurses' terms and conditions of service, is carrying out a review of allowances for patterns of working, including special duty payments. As part of this review, data have been collected for the council on hours worked and special duty payments received by nurses, midwives and health visitors.

Manchester Royal Eye Hospital

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to make additional resources available to Central Manchester health authority so as to reduce waiting lists at Manchester royal eye hospital.

Mr. Newton: The funding of Central Manchester district health authority is a matter for the North Western regional health authority. The hon. Member may, therefore, like to write direct to the chairman of that authority. For 1988-89 we are making £30 million available to regional health authorities to assist them to reduce the time people wait for hospital treatment.

Adjudication Officers

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he or the chief adjudication officer has taken or intends to take to ensure that adjudication officers comply with the Social Security Commissioner's direction in decision no. R(U) 4/87 that they should abandon their old habit of virtually automatically imposing the maximum period of disqualification when a person has been ruled to have left or refused employment without good cause.

Mr. Portillo: On 23 September 1987 the chief adjudication officer issued a memorandum to adjudication officers (RAO 65/86) which drew attention to the increase in the maximum period of disqualification from six weeks to 13 weeks. Among other things the memorandum stated:

"3. This increase in the maximum penalty for voluntary unemployment means that it is now particularly important that AOs should exercise a proper judicial discretion when deciding the appropriate period of disqualification, and should be able to justify that decision in the event of an appeal to the SSAT. The guidelines laid down in R(U) 8/74 should continue to be applied, ie:

(a) The statutory authorities have a complete unfettered discretion, provided it is exercised judicially, no matter which part of Sec 20(1) is under consideration.

(b) It is wrong to say that the only two possible approaches to deciding the period of disqualification are by starting at the maximum and working down, or by starting at the minimum and working up.

(c) It is not correct to say that the maximum period should be imposed unless the claimant proves that there are mitigating circumstances. R(U) 17/54, and any other decision adopting the same line, should not be followed in this respect. (This point should be borne in mind when reading Commissioners' decisions which pre-date R(U) 8/74.)

(d) The correct approach is to regard each case as one in which a sensible discretion has to be exercised in such manner as the justice of the case requires. All the circumstances must be taken into account."

The duration of periods of disqualification is covered in paragraph 89023 of the adjudication officers' guide and this paragraph is in the process of being amended to refer to commissioner's decision R(U) 4/87. Copies of the reported decision, including the headnotes, will be issued to adjudication officers as soon as it has been published. Training courses for adjudication officers include reference to the subject.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether, under the proposed income support regulations, adjudication officers will still have the power to disregard the value of a claimant's former home for such period as is necessary for the completion of its sale.

Mr. Portillo: In income support the value of a property occupied by a claimant as his home will continue to be disregarded whether or not it is for sale. However, in the context of such a scheme, it is not considered appropriate to continue to disregard a substantial capital asset in the form of a property which a claimant owns but does not occupy as his home. We consider that a person should look to raise a loan against the equity of the property from a bank or other commercial source rather than have recourse to state benefit.

Social Fund Commissioner

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services for how many days per week Mrs. Rosalind Mackworth will work as Social Fund Commissioner; and what remuneration she will receive.

Mr. Scott: Two days a week; £14,600 per annum.

NHS Staff

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the speech therapists employed in the National Health Service are in (i) grade B and (ii) grade C.

Mr. Newton: These grades do not exist at present in the National Health Service, but I understand that an offer has been made to the staff side representing speech therapists which would introduce them in a new structure. Staff side is consulting its members about the offer.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest salary scales on offer to teachers of (a) physiotherapy and (b) speech therapy in National Health Service employ.

Mr. Newton: The pay of physiotherapy teachers employed in the National Health Service is determined following the recommendations of the independent pay review body for nursing staff, midwives, health visitors and professions allied to medicine. The current salary scales effective from 1 April 1987 range from £13,060 per annum to £18,950 per annum. An offer to teachers of speech therapy, worth £11,916 to £16,137 in 1987-88 is under consideration by the staff side. The offer also includes a commitment to a special review of teaching grades.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentages and what numbers of physiotherapists are employed by the National Health Service at grade principal I.

Mr. Newton: The number of physiotherapist grade principal I whole-time equivalents employed by the National Health Service is 20 which represents 0·2 per cent. of the total physiotherapy staff.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the percentage and absolute number of speech therapy teachers employed by the National Health Service who are graded at principal I.

Mr. Newton: There is one speech therapy teacher employed in the National Health Service who is graded at principal I, representing 6·7 per cent. of the total number of speech therapy teachers employed by the National Health Service.

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the percentages of (a) speech therapists and (b) physiotherapists in National Health Service employ who have (i) undergraduate and (ii) part-graduate degrees.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

Benefits (Liverpool)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the number of retirement pensioners in Liverpool in receipt of supplementary benefit or housing benefit supplement who receive assistance through housing benefit with charges for heating, hot water, cooking and lighting.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information requested is not available, but I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 24 November 1987.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled claimants in Liverpool he estimates will receive a lower entitlement under income support than they currently receive.

Mr. Scott: None. Under our proposals for transitional protection, claimants whose benefit entitlement on the introduction of the income support scheme would be less than their existing benefit entitlement will have their benefit level maintained.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children in Liverpool are currently in receipt of free school meals; and how many he estimates will lose this entitlement from April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that on the latest information (for October 1986) over 27,000 pupils in Liverpool schools were receiving free school meals. Of these 3,200 were from families receiving family income supplement and 4,700 were receiving free school meals under the exercise of the local education authorities' discretionary power. These two groups will cease to be entitled to free school meals from April 1988.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Liverpool claiming supplementary benefit were in receipt of the heating addition for each of the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88; what amounts were involved in each case; and what provision will be made to cover these costs after April 1988.

Mr. Scott: I regret that no information is available concerning the number of people in Liverpool claiming supplementary benefit who were in receipt of a heating addition nor of the amounts involved for the years requested. The amount of money spent on heating additions has been included in the resources for the new income support scheme. Extra help will be directed more effectively through the premiums at those in greatest need —pensioners, sick and disabled people and families.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many claimants of housing benefit in Liverpool he estimates will receive lower benefit from April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost to his Department for the next four years, respectively, of increased payments of housing benefit arising from the proposals for rents outlined in the White Paper "Housing: the Government's Proposals for Scotland".

Mr. Portillo: Any estimates of the effects of these proposals on benefit expenditure made at this stage would be purely speculative.

Health Authorities (Surplus Land)

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he places any restrictions on the use made by health authorities of funds raised by the sale of their surplus land; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Our present policy is that proceeds from sales should be retained by the district health authority which initiated the sale and reinvested in the local health service. On occasions proceeds, or part of them, may be retained by regional health authorities, for example if the sale was made possible by the provision of new capital funded facilities—when the region may wish to recoup its capital outlay — or if the proceeds are unusually large.

Tobacco-related Deaths

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give an estimate of the total number of deaths which are caused each year as a direct or indirect result of tobacco smoking.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) on 12 November at column 280.

Warnock Report

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to publish a White Paper on matters raised on the Warnock report on human fertilisation and embryology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The White Paper, "Human Fertilisation and Embryology: A Framework for Legislation" (Cm. 259) is published today. This sets out the Government's proposals for legislation on the range of issues covered in the 1984 Warnock report. We are committed to introducing legislation in this Parliament. The aim of the Government's proposals is to make it sufficiently flexible to meet the concerns people have about the new reproductive technologies, while recognising the benefits they can bring.

The White Paper describes the alternative draft clauses on embryo research—one banning it, the other allowing it under strict controls—on which Parliament will have a free vote when the Bill is introduced. Even if the principle of embryo research is accepted by parliament, certain areas of research, including genetic manipulation of the embryos and creation of hybrids would be prohibited under the proposed legislation.

We have accepted the principal recommendation in the Warnock report that a statutory licensing authority independent of Government, should be set up to regulate certain infertility treatments including in-vitro fertilisation and artificial insemination by donor; and, if Parliament permits it, research involving human embryos. The SLA would have a lay chairman and a membership with wide-ranging interests, including substantial lay representation. Those wishing to carry out IVF, AID and other regulated treatments will need, by law, a licence from the SLA.

As the Warnock report recommended, the Government have already banned commercial surrogacy agencies—and now propose to make clear in law that surrogacy contracts are unenforceable in the courts. We do not at present propose to extend the criminal law any further in this field of surrogacy, but intend that the SLA should be asked to examine the practice of surrogacy so that Parliament can review the situation from time to time on the basis of informed advice.

The White Paper makes proposals on a wide range of other issues including the storage of human gametes and embryos; counselling of couples undergoing treatment; the legal status of children born as a result of gamete or embryo donation and the provision of information to children born of these techniques.

I hope right hon. and hon. Members will have an opportunity to debate the White Paper proposals early in the new year.

Single Payments

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will announce the restoration of supplementary benefit single payments for travelling expenses to attend the funeral of a close relative.

Mr. Portillo: We have today laid regulations[1] before Parliament for this purpose.

[1]The Supplementary Benefit (Single Payments) Amendment (No. 2) Regulations 1987.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those district health authorities which have made contractual arrangements with private hospitals so far in 1987.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 20 November 1987]: This information is not yet available. We expect to have it by the end of August 1988.

Foster Children

Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to the changing of a child's surname by its foster parents, and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 November 1987]: I would expect foster parents of a child in care to seek the local authority's agreement before calling the child by a different name and that as a matter of good practice this would usually be discussed with the child's family. A formal change of name, for example, by deed poll would only be made with the agreement of the parents or, if the parental rights were vested in the authority, by leave of the authority. Where a child is a ward of court, a change of name by which a child is known may properly be regarded as a step in the child's life for which the court's approval is necessary even where the child has been committed to the care of a local authority.

Low Calorie Diets

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he expects to publish the report on low calorie diets by the working party of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Health; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will institute an inquiry into the circumstances in which the report on low calorie diets by the working party of the Committee on Medical Aspects of Health was leaked to the press before official publication by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 November 1987]: We hope to publish the report "The Use of Very Low Calorie Diets in Obesity" from the chief medical officer's committee on the medical aspects of food policy (COMA) before the Christmas recess. The disclosure to which my hon. Friend refers took place many months ago and involved an early draft of the report prepared some three months previously. Inquiries at the time suggested that it had occurred accidentally.

Moss Side Hospital

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether patients held in seclusion in Moss Side hospital are held in accordance with the normal procedures for secluding patients.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 November 1987]: When patients are cared for in seclusion on clinical grounds, this is done in accordance with the normal procedures.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for resolving the industrial dispute at Moss Side hospital.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The hospital authorities are continuing discussions with the Moss Side branch of the Prison Officers Association to secure a return to normal working.

Dental Examinations

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to introduce patient charges for routine dental examinations.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's statement to the House on 25 November, and to the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cmnd. 249).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to which EEC member states currently operate cigarette duty rates higher than those generally prevailing in the United Kingdom; and what proportion of total EEC cigarette sales, sales in those member states represent.

Mr. Lilley: One member state, Denmark, applies a higher level of excise duty to cigarettes than the United Kingdom. It is estimated that the volume of cigarette sales in Denmark represent less than 1½ per cent of total cigarette sales in the Community.

Building Societies

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recommendation he has received from the Building Societies Commission on the building societies' request that the limit on their wholesale funds be raised; and what decision he has made.

Mr. Lilley: The Building Societies Commission has considered the submission put to it by the Building Societies Association and accepts the case made for an increase in the limit on wholesale funds. The commission accepts that the present limit adversely affects the ability of building societies to compete for mortgage business with other financial institutions which have no restrictions on their acceess to wholesale funds. The limit is at present a constraint on the operation of only a few societies, but it hinders the planning of many more. Although the submission from the association only proposed an increase in the limit to 30 per cent., the commission has concluded that it would be right in the circumstances to raise the limit direct to 40 per cent., the maximum permitted by the 1986 Act. Setting the figure at 40 per cent. now should give societies a more certain basis for their longer-term planning.

In addition to observing the statutory limit, each society is already required to agree with the Building Societies Commission an operatonal limit on its wholesale funding. That limit is set after taking account of each society's management expertise and systems and the types of funding instrument used. That system will continue.

I have agreed that Treasury consent be given to the necessary order which will be laid before the House shortly. That order will also give effect to a number of minor changes to the definition of wholesale funds requested by the Building Societies Association.

PRIME MINISTER

Electronic Data Systems

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister which Government Department is responsible for vetting applications by Government Departments to purchase equipment from Electronic Data Systems.

The Prime Minister: Each Department is responsible for its own purchasing decisions subject, where appropriate, to financial approval from the Treasury.

Security (Discussions)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Prime Minister whether there have been any (i) contacts or (ii) discussions between any of the security services and (a) the Provisional Irish Republican Army, (b) the Official Irish Republican Army; (c) the Ulster Volunteer Force, or (d) any other paramilitary or terrorist organisation in Northern Ireland since 1979.

The Prime Minister: It has been the policy of successive Governments not to give information on any matters relating to the operations of the security and intelligence services.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received urging him to take legal action against drug companies following the announcement of Her Majesty's Government's new measures of support for haemophiliac AIDS sufferers.

The Attorney-General: None.

Legal Aid

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Government propose to seek powers in the Legal Aid Bill to remove or alleviate the present effects on the conduct of the financial aspects of divorce cases of the Law Society charge on the former matrimonial home; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Primary legislation is not necessary to adjust the operation of the legal aid statutory charge. The Government have already announced their intention to amend the regulations governing the statutory charge in legally aided cases to allow the charge to be postponed where a lump sum is awarded to the legally aided person for the purchase of a new home at the end of matrimonial proceedings, and to provide for simple interest to be levied on all postponed charges. These amendments will be introduced as soon as possible. The Government do not intend to make any other changes to the provisions governing the legal aid statutory charge which provides an important discipline to the conduct of litigation under the legal aid scheme.

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Attorney-General what was the total amount of legal aid authorised by Legal Aid Office No. 4 (South-Western Area) in (a) 1980, (b) 1983 and (c) the last available year for which information is available.

The Attorney-General: The payment of civil legal aid bills is administered centrally and the amounts attributable to certificates issued by individual legal aid offices could not be ascertained without incurring disproportionate expense. The information available for the south-western area relates to legal advice and to criminal legal aid, and is as follows:

£ million

	1980-81	1983-84	1986-87
Legal Advice	2·034	4·096	6·618
Criminal Legal Aid	2·564	4·043	6·203

Legal advice includes assistance by way of representation and, for 1986-87, advice under the 24-hour duty solicitor scheme. The figures for criminal legal aid cover magistrates' court proceedings only and include, for 1986-87, payments under the magistrates' courts duty solicitor scheme.

Union Flag

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General why the Union Flag was not flown at the court room in Armagh City on Remembrance Sunday 8 November 1987; and if he will make arrangements to have it flown on all appropriate dates.

The Attorney-General: The Union Flag was flown at Armargh courthouse on 8 November 1987, but through oversight was not hoisted until approximately 11.15 am, contrary to standing instructions which require the flag to be hoisted at 8 am and remain up until sunset. The courthouse is in possession of standing instructions for the flying of flags on all appropriate dates.

EMPLOYMENT

National Council for Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will amend the name of the newly reconstituted National Council for Vocational Qualifications so that its name reflects the fact that its geographical area includes more than one nation.

Mr. Cope: No. I am satisfied that the term "National" used in such a context is commonly understood to cover more than one nation within the United Kingdom.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Agriculture Guidance and Guarantee Fund

Mr. Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is Her Majesty's Government policy on the European Commission's proposed changes to the European agriculture guidance and guarantee fund intended to redirect investment and marketing to structurally backward regions.

Mr. MacGregor: As required by article 23 of the Single European Act, the Commission has proposed a framework of general policy and financial principles to govern the operations of the three Community structural funds, of which EAGGF guidance section is one. The Commission identifies five priority objectives for the funds: the objective mainly relevant to the guidance section is, with a view to reform of the common agricultural policy, the speeding up of the adjustment of agricultural structures and the promotion of the development of rural areas. The guidance section would also have a role in a further objective, that of promoting the development and structural adjustment of the less-developed regions. No specific changes in the various measures financed at present from the guidance section have yet been proposed by the Commission: the Government's attitude to any such proposals would depend on their likely consequences for the United Kingdom.

Mobile Food Hawkers

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will seek to amend the Food Act 1984 to enable local authorities to revoke the registration of a mobile food hawker who in the opinion of the local authority causes a nuisance to the population in the area in which he operates; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

Officials have been asked to consult interested organisations to consider revision of the Food Act 1984. However, registration of food hawkers by local authorities under that Act is concerned solely with food hygiene.

Local authorities have general powers to deal with nuisances under part III of the Public Health Act 1936 if they consider that the activities of any trade or business are prejudicial to the health of, or a nuisance to, inhabitants of the neighbourhood.

Contaminated Soil

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what action his Department took with regard to the importation of 800 tonnes of contaminated soil from Holland at the Port of Mostyn, why the consignment was eventually allowed into the country and dumped near Rossett in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 26 November 1987]: Imported soil must be accompanied by a phytosanitary certificate confirming freedom from plant pests and diseases. In this particular case, special information was obtained from the Dutch Plant Health Authority to ensure that the consignment came from an industrial site and that there was no risk of it being infected with Rhizomania, a soil-borne disease of sugarbeet. The Ministry's plant health and seeds inspectorate checked that the waste soil did not come into contact with agricultural land and that it was safely transported and buried.

Milk

Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the quantities of milk supplied to each local education authority on which an EEC subsidy was claimed during the financial year 1985-86.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 26 November 1987]: Quantities of school milk on which EC subsidy was claimed by local education authorities and local authorities in Great Britain are recorded by school year, not by financial year. During the 1985-86 school year the quantities were as follows.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bannock Report

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken following the publication of the Bannock report about commercial representation overseas.

Mrs. Chalker: The Bannock report ("Bringing More Manufacturers into Active Exporting"), concerning inter alia the extent of untapped potention amongst smaller and medium sized firms, was commissioned by the British Overseas Trade Board.

In the light of the report, the Department of Trade and Industry, in consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, is examining ways in which some of the United Kingdom's official export promotion services can be refined, to meet more effectively the needs of small and medium sized firms.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Community Programme

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the applicability of currently proposed changes to the community programme in Britain to the operation of similar schemes in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: I wish to give careful consideration to the applicability in Northern Ireland of the Government's proposals for a new programme for the long-term unemployed, including changes in the community programme, and conclusions will be announced as soon as possible.

Apprentices

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his projection for the intake of apprentices over the next five years; and if he will provide a breakdown by trades.

Mr. Viggers: This is primarily a matter for the Northern Ireland Training Authority and the industry training boards which have informed me that the information is as follows:

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to ensure that Harland and Wolff maintains a design facility capable of catering for future orders without relying on subcontracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers: Maintenance of the design facility at Harland and Wolff is a commercial matter for the company and will be dependent on what future orders can be secured.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his projection of the numbers of employees in Harland and Wolff over the next five years.

Mr. Viggers: Future employment levels at Harland and Wolff are dependent on the company's ability to secure orders on a commercial basis. The company is seeking new orders but, like all other European shipyards, faces a highly competitive world market.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies Registration Bureau

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will institute criminal proceedings against the Companies Registration Bureau of Companies House, PO Box 59, Nantwich, Cheshire.

Mr. Maude: There have been a number of complaints about the activities of this bureau, and I understand that a man has been charged with criminal deception; he is due to appear before Crewe and Nantwich magistrates on 15 January 1987.

W H Smith and Octopus

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will consider referring to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission the announcement by W H Smith and Octopus that they are setting up a joint book merchandising company.

Mr. Maude: The joint venture proposed by W H Smith and Octopus may qualify for reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under the provision of the Fair Trading Act. If it is considered to qualify the Director General of Fair Trading has a duty to advise my right hon. and Noble Friend on the question of reference.

Japan (Trade Negotiations)

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the conclusion of trade negotiations with Japan following the accession to the Community of Spain and Portugal.

Mr. Alan Clark: When Spain and Portugal acceded to the Community in 1986 the revision of the Community's common customs tariff led to negotiations under article XXIV:6 of the general agreement on tariffs and trade with certain trading partners who were affected by that revision. In the case of Japan, the reduction of tariffs and progressive removal of other trade barriers in Spain and Portugal significantly improves the access of Japanese goods to the Community. After protracted negotiations, it has been agreed that in return Japan will grant to the Community a package of tariff reductions and market-opening measures on items of particular but not exclusive interest to Spain and Portugal. This agreement was approved by the Council of Ministers on 24 November. Although the British Government considered the Japanese offer inadequate a majority of member states was prepared to except it. A decision was urgent because appropriate tariff rates on items of interest to Japan had to be included in the Community's common customs tariff, as amended in accordance with the new harmonised system of goods classification, in time for this to come into effect on 1 January 1988. In the view of the Commission, negotiations with Japan could not be further prolonged. The Government judged that it was in the interest of the United Kingdom that a decision should be taken to conclude them.

I greatly regret that it was not possible for the House to complete scrutiny on this occasion.

TRANSPORT

Accident Statistics (Theddingworth)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the accident record in the last five years for the village of Theddingworth, Leicestershire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Theddingworth is situated on the A427, a local road. Information on the accident record may be obtained from the highway authority, Leicestershire county council.

A427 (Designation)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will designate the A427 as a trunk road for that section of the road which runs between Lutterworth and Market Harborough.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The proposed M1-A1 link, a new trunk road, will serve the movement of longer distance traffic in that area. Work on that scheme is expected to start during 1988.

London Underground (Fires)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library copies of the London Fire Brigade reports on each station on the London Underground for the current year and previous years.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am arranging for the most recent reports of the inspections undertaken by the London Fire Brigade (Fire Prevention Branch) and the Chief Fire Inspector of London Underground Limited on each deep-level tube section and station of the London Underground system to be placed in the Library.

SCOTLAND

Prisons (Suicides)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the numbers, location and status of self-inflicted deaths in Scottish penal institutions for each year from 1983 to the present; and how many of those were on suicide observation at the time of their death.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of self-inflicted deaths of inmates in Scottish penal establishments were six in 1983, five in 1984, six in 1985 and seven in 1986. Details of the establishment and status of the inmates in these instances were as follows:

Establishment	Status of inmate

In these 24 cases, 12 individuals were subject to observation or other precautions at the time of death and 12 individuals were not.

In 1987 there have been 11 deaths in Scottish penal establishments. The death of any person in legal custody is the subject of a fatal accident inquiry. So far, fatal accident inquiries have been completed for only two of the deaths in 1987 and in each case the cause was acute myocardial ischaemia and not self-inflicted injury. Determinations of fatal accident inquiries are still awaited in the other nine cases.

Remand Statistics

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of accused persons remanded in custody, for each year from 1985 to the present, principally on the grounds that they were of no fixed or unsatisfactory abode at the time of their remand.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I regret that this information is not available.

Fines Enforcement Officers

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the numbers and location of fines enforcement officers; and if he has any plans to increase their numbers.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Fifteen fines officers are in post in the Scottish court service. The sheriff courts at which they are based and the number of each court are as follows:

	Number
Aberdeen	1
Airdrie	1
Dundee	1
Dunfermline	1
Dumbarton	1
Edinburgh	2
Falkirk	1
Glasgow	3
Hamilton	2
Kilmarnock	1
Paisley	1

This scheme is currently being evaluated by the Scottish Home and Health Department, and in the light of the results I shall consider whether it might be extended.

Private Medicine (Debt)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will detail for each year since 1973 the average level of debt owed to the National Health Service by the private medicine sector (a) in the Strathclyde region and (b) in the Clydesdale area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information in the form requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, at 1987 prices (i) the full-time average wage for men and (ii) the full-time average wage for women in Scotland for each year since 1979, giving the percentage change between years.

Mr. Lang: The following information has been derived from the new earnings survey, conducted by the Department of Employment in April each year.

[2] These relate to full-time employees on adult rates, as 1987 figures for males aged 21 and over, and females aged 18 and over, are not yet available.

[3] Owing to the size of sample used in the survey all the annual figures are subject to sampling error, and the rates of growth may be particularly affected.

Oil Industry

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many people were employed in the oil industry in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lang: The information given on numbers of employees is taken from the census of employment:

(a) Extraction of Mineral Oil and Gas in Scotland
September 1981—17,500
September 1984—19,600

(b) Mineral Oil Processing in Scotland

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of his budget for assistance to industry in each year since 1979, at 1987 prices.

Mr. Lang: Gross expenditure on the items now forming part of my right hon. and learned Friend's industry programme in each year since 1979-80, at 1986-87 prices is as follows:

YTS

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the percentage of YTS leavers in Scotland going into full-time paid employment within one month of leaving the scheme for each year for which records are available; and what proportion obtained paid work in the sector in which they were trained.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the form requested. Of those who left YTS in Scotland in the period April 1985 to March 1986 47 per cent. were in full-time paid employment three months after leaving the scheme and in the period April 1986 to March 1987 46 per cent. were in full-time paid employment three months after leaving the scheme; 24 per cent. and 23 per cent. respectively of all YTS leavers were employed by the companies in which they trained.

Industrial Production and Construction

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the index of industrial production and construction figures for Scotland for each quarter of each year since 1977.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is shown in the table:

School Expulsions

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what information he has as to how many pupils have been excluded or expelled from more than one school in 1986 and 1987;

(2) what information he has as to how many expulsions or exclusions took place in (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Scotland in 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of those involved on the YTS in Scotland move straight into jobs.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 November 1987]: Information is not available in the form requested. Of those who left YTS in Scotland in the 14-month period to May 1987 (the latest figures available) 49 per cent. were in jobs three months after leaving the programme.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting period for the result after a woman has undergone a cervical smear test within the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: Information on which to calculate the average waiting period is not collected centrally.

The target for all health authorities is a turn-around at the laboratory within one month. I understand that most districts are meeting this target and that no district in Yorkshire region has a backlog exceeding five weeks.

Schizophrenia

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the total number of schizophrenic sufferers in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Portillo: I regret I do not have information on which to base an estimate.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plan to lower the qualifying age for eligibility for the mobility allowance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We have no present plans to do so.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of hospital beds (a) available and (b) occupied in England and Wales for the years 1985 and 1986.

Mrs. Currie: The requested information is given in the table for England.

The health services information steering group (chaired by Mrs. Körner) recommended in its first report that bed use data should include all patients using a ward in a 24-hour period and that aggregated bed occupancy statistics should not be used as an indicator of efficient bed use. A more useful measure of bed utilisation is patient throughput per available bed. For instance, in 1985 and 1986 respectively 19·5 and 20·3 in-patient cases were treated per available bed compared with 15 in 1979.

Statistics for Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

National Health Service Hospitals in England

	1985	1986
Average daily number:
available beds	325,487	315,714
occupied beds[1]	263,960	254,597

[1] Bed occupancy figures are based on a midnight count and do not therefore reflect the use of beds by patients who do not stay overnight.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of people and the number of dependants covered thereby claiming housing benefit in 1979 and the latest available date; and if he will distinguish whether these payments are made for tenants in the public sector, the private sector or for payment with rates.

Mr. Portillo: Figures for the number of people receiving housing benefit in the years requested are given in the table. I regret that detailed information is not kept of the number of people who make a claim for housing benefit, nor of the numbers of dependants in claimant households.

Housing Benefit Recipients: Great Britain

	(thousands) 1979-80	1986-87
Rent rebates (for public sector tenants)	1,205	3,745
Rent allowances (for private sector tenants)	220	1,190
Rate rebates	3,065	7,120

Notes:

1. Housing benefit was not introduced until 1983. It replaced the former DOE rent rebate, rent allowance and rate rebate schemes, and additionally brought in those who formerly received help for their rent and/or rates through supplementary benefit, who therefore do not appear in the 1979 total.
2. The 1986/87 figures are derived from local authority mid-year subsidy claims and are subject to revision.

Benefits (Western Isles)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the numbers of pensioners, unemployed, single parents and chronic sick in the Western Isles entitled to supplementary benefit but not claiming; and what is the average amount unclaimed per week by each of these groups.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Pay Beds

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost to the National Health Service of each pay bed; and how much of that cost is received by the National Health Service.

Mrs. Currie: The cost of individual pay beds varies considerably according to local factors, but since charges are set so as to recover the average full cost of pay beds, the charges themselves are the best available indication of pay bed costs. Although a small number of health authorities determined their own charges for 1987-88, the majority adopted a central list of charges, which was as follows:

1987-88 Charges for Private Resident Patients

	Daily charges to patients not paying consultant(s) separately		Daily charges to patients paying consultant(s) separately
	Single room £	Other accommodation £	Single room £	Other accommodation £

Class F (London Postgraduate teaching hospitals managed by Special Health Authorities (other than hospitals in Class G)	238	217	224	204

Claimants (Liverpool)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to help claimants in Liverpool claim their full benefit entitlement following the findings of the Liverpool Association for the Disabled that 58 per cent. of disabled people were underclaiming benefit entitlement by an average of almost £20 a week; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: There is a steady growth in the numbers receiving disability benefits and we shall continue our efforts to improve advice and information about the benefits available.

Norwich DHA

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the names and salaries of each of the officers on the main board, other senior officers, and all unit officers of the Norwich district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally. Health authority officers are employees of the individual authority concerned and my hon. Friend may like to approach the acting chairman of Norwich district health authority.

Mobility and Attendance Allowances (Carlisle)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for mobility allowance and attendance allowance have been made in the Carlisle constituency in 1985-86 and 1986-87, and how many have been rejected.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Hospital Patients (Carlisle)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, for each year since 1979, how many patients discharged from hospital in the Carlisle constituency area have been re-admitted again suffering from the same complaints or illnesses which had led to their original admission.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. Many conditions which persist over a long period may need repeated interventions. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of East Cumbria health authority, who may be able to provide the information he requires.

Supplementary Benefit

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish information on the number of claims for supplementary benefit from people required to be available for employment made in the three-month period before 5 October 1986, showing how many of these claims were initially abated as a result of the operation of section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975, together with a breakdown showing (a) the number of these initial disqualifications that were for less than six weeks, (b) the number that were later reviewed and the disqualification lifted or altered and (c) estimates of the proportions that fell under each of the heads (a) to (d) of section 20(1);

(2) if he will publish information on the number of claims for supplementary benefit made in the three-month period after 5 October 1986, showing how many of these claims were initially abated as a result of the operation of section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975, together with a breakdown showing (a) the number of these initial disqualifications that were for less than 13 weeks, (b) the number that were later reviewed and the disqualification lifted or altered and (c) estimates of the proportions that fell under each of the heads (a) to (d) of section 20(1).

Mr. Portillo: The number of claims for supplementary benefit from people required to be available for employment actually made in any given period is not available, but the number of such claims processed during the period in question is as follows:

	Number
12 week period ending 23 September 1986	1,264,222
12 week period ending 16 December 1986	983,959

Information on the number of awards initially reduced pending a decision under section 20(1) of the Social Security Act 1975 and the outcome of later reviews is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Gloucestershire Health Authority

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that the resources allocation working party system produces an equitable distribution of funds to Gloucestershire health authority.

Mrs. Currie: Allocation of resources to Gloucester health authority is a matter for the South-Western regional health authority. We have no grounds for supposing that regional allocation policies are inequitable.

Child Additions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will state the size of the child additions to (a) short-term and (b) long-term national insurance benefits in 1978-79 and currently; and if he will express changes in percentage terms.

Mr. Portillo: The following table sets out the rates of child dependency additions and the percentage changes since April 1978. The additions payable with short-term benefits were abolished with effect from 26 November 1984.

	Long-term benefits		Short-term benefits

Diabetic Diets

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence and representations he has received as to costs of a diabetic diet to low-income families, especially in respect of diabetic children; and what response he has made.

Mrs. Currie: Representations have been received from the British Diabetic Association and from the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed and other hon. Members concerning the future of the diet allowance for diabetics on supplementary benefit. Under the new income support scheme, which comes into effect in April, there will be no special dietary addition. However, many diabetics will be entitled to a special premium on account of long term sickness, disability or old age. As the British Diabetic Association acknowledged, a diabetic diet need be no more expensive than an ordinary diet.

Blood Glucose Monitoring Strips

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent discussions he has had about the possibility of making blood glucose monitoring strips available to diabetics on National Health Service prescription.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 24 November.

Myalgic Encephalomyelitis

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received about the diagnosis and treatment of myalgic encephalomyelitis; and what response he has made.

Mrs. Currie: Since 1 September, there have been 12 letters from hon. Members on behalf of constituents and 23 letters from members of the public. All of these have been or will be assured that the National Health Service recognises and treats this disease. As the symptoms of myalgic encephalomyelitis resemble those of other forms of debilitating illness, it is not easy to diagnose single cases or draw up diagnostic guidance; nor is it the Department's policy to advise the medical profession on clinical practice.

National Insurance and Social Security Operations (Computerisation)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what staff saving he estimates would result from purchase of a computer system for national insurance and social security operation; what are the running costs of such a system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: It would be impracticable to attempt to quantify savings or running costs in the absence of specific plans or proposals to purchase such a computer system. The Department's operational strategy, which is developing the social security computer system, estimates staff savings of around 16,000 from 1992-93; with running costs of the system estimated at £45 million per annum at today's prices.

Haringey Health Authority

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider removing the chairman of the Haringey health authority from his position on account of his handling of the health authority both financially and organisationally and the state of his local knowledge as a non-resident of Haringey.

Mrs. Currie: No.

Benefit Claimants (Correspondence)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to reply to the inquiries dated 1 October, 22 October and 10 November from the hon. Member for Easington in respect of Mrs. Jones of 43 Longnewton Street, Dawdon, Seaham and her claim for attendance and mobility allowance.

Mr. Portillo: I wrote to the hon. Member yesterday.

Drugs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action has been taken by the Committee on Safety of Medicines to investigate the activities of pharmaceutical companies prescribing drugs for the National Health Service which have been fined by the United States of America's Food and Drug Administration for convening drug regulations.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 November 1987]: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to him on 2 November at column 561. It is not licensing authority policy to give details of any action it may take in specific cases.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what checks are being carried out by the Committee on Safety of Medicines or his Department to ensure that all side effects, including deaths, which are known to a pharmaceutical company are reported to the committee; on how many occasions it has been found that a company has not made a complete report; and what action is taken in such circumstances.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 November 1987]: Power under the Medicines Act 1968 and its subordinate legislation is used to make it a condition of the grant of a product licence that the licence holder must report to the licensing authority, in accordance with standard directions, adverse reactions associated with the medicinal product immediately they come to notice. Licence holders have been reminded of this requirement on a number of occasions in Medicines Act information letters, and given detailed guidance on reporting: the most recent guidance, MAIL 49 issued in March 1987, is in the Library. When the safety of a marketed drug is under particular scrutiny the licence holder may be asked to provide all information known to the company about adverse drug reactions. Information provided in response to such a request is compared with previous reports made by the company, and any discrepancies are investigated. Where the licensing authority is satisfied that the licensing conditions have been breached, the action open to it can include the suspension, revocation, or variation of the licence where safety or other relevant factors apply. The Department is currently conducting two investigations which relate to the possible failure to disclose serious suspected adverse drug reactions. Because information on suspected under-reporting is held on files relating to specific products and giving the full licensing history, a count of earlier possible instances cannot be made without disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether the Committee on Safety of Medicines carried out any investigation into the circumstances surrounding Eli Lilley's failure to report deaths attributed to Opren to the United States of America's Food and Drug Administration;

(2) whether Eli Lilley gave any indication to the Committee on Safety of Medicines prior to the launch of Opren that the drug would cause particular problems for elderly people taking it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 November 1987]: I am advised that as both the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the Licensing Authority are involved in current legal actions concerning Opren, related matters are sub-judice.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take in the light of new evidence that pharmaceutical companies providing drugs for the National Health Service have tried to prevent doctors from making critical comments about the company's drugs in court actions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 November 1987]: If the right hon. Member has any evidence that a criminal offence (such as conspiracy to pervert the course of justice) has been committed, I hope he will bring it to the attention of the police.

ENERGY

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has had any communication with his counterparts in (a) Belgium, (b) France or (c) the Federal Republic of Germany about recent evidence that plutonium from the safeguarded reprocessing plants in the European Economic Community has been sold on the black market in Khartoum, Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office to the hon. Member for Meironnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 19 November at columns 617-18.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether bilateral or international atomic energy agency safeguards have been applied to all plutonium originating in Central Electricity Generating Boards or South of Scotland Electricity Generating Board reactors and subsequently exported to the United States of America.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 2 November 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 21 October 1987 at columns 749-50.

European Fast Reactor

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the implications for continued United Kingdom investment on European fast reactor collaborative research and development of (a) the meeting on 1 December of the European Fast Reactor Consortium partners and (b) the plans to privatise the electricity supply industry and their impact on the Central Electricity Generating Board's current investment in the project.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand that the meeting of the European Fast Reactor Utilities Group on 1 December will discuss proposals from the European design companies for work on a common model. Eventual investment in new collaborative facilities will be considered by the utilities at the appropriate time.

Council of Energy Ministers

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the meeting of the European Community Council of Energy Ministers on 13 November.

Mr. Parkinson: My hon. Friend the Minister of State represented the United Kingdom at the Council of Energy Ministers on 13 November.

The Council adopted a recommendation on measures to encourage, without distorting the market, the exploitation of renewable energy sources in the Community. Ministers noted the Commission's intention to prepare, with the assistance of experts from member states, an international conference in the second half of 1988 which would consider the marketability of renewable energy sources.

The Council agreed conclusions recognising the need to establish procedures for spreading information on the energy efficiency of buildings. Ministers considered the binding nature of a directive as proposed by the Commission inappropriate, but discussion will continue on a possible Council recommendation.

Ministers noted with interest the Commission's intention to prepare a programme for improving the efficiency of electricity use. The programme will be considered next year.

The Council discussed the potential for the conversion of foodstuffs into ethanol for use as a blending component for petrol. There was general support for the Commission's decision not to table proposals on bioethanol since it is clear from technical and economic evidence that development of bioethanol is unjustified.

Lastly, Ministers were unable to agree conclusions on the costs to refiners of complying with environmental legislation. The matter will be considered further.

Office of Gas Supplies

Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any changes are to be made to the Office of Gas Supplies running costs limit for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I am advised by the Director General of Gas Supply that his office's running costs limit will be reduced by £500,000 from £1,750,000 to £1,250,000, reflecting a more gradual build-up of work load and hence of staff than earlier estimated.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Conservation

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards energy efficiency in the light of the conclusions of the Association for the Conservation of Energy's report, "Regenerating The Inner City: The Energy Dimension", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will ensure all relevant inner city initiatives his Department takes include an energy efficiency dimension within their remit.

Mr. Trippier: The Government are concerned that construction and rehabilitation projects, whether in inner cities or elsewhere, should take account of the need for energy efficiency. The report reinforces this view. Following consultation with, amongst others, the Association for the Conservation of Energy, the Department is considering changes to the building regulations designed to raise standards of insulation.

Rating Reform

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimates he has made of the effect his new unified business rate will have on rate levels for business in inner cities.

Mr. Howard: If the uniform rate poundage had been introduced in 1987-88, non-domestic rates in urban progamme authority areas would have fallen by around £380 million or 14 per cent. The uniform business rate will be a major stimulus to economic development in the inner cities.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from businesses in (i) the London borough of Bexley and (ii) Greater London concerning the proposed national non-domestic rate.

Mr. Howard: I have received more than 3,500 letters about our proposal since June. They are not, however, categorised by subject or their place of origin. I am aware of concern from some businesses in both Greater London and the London borough of Bexley about the implications of a national non-domestic rate, but I believe that the advantages of the statutory guarantee that the business rate will not increase by more than the rate of inflation are increasingly recognised.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce firm details of his plans for a National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State expects to make a further announcement before the end of 1987.

Nuclear Waste

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is proposing to take to ensure that British Nuclear Fuels Limited uses the most modern available technology in relation to the control of discharge arising from nuclear waste reprocessing of Sellafield.

Mr. Moynihan: British Nuclear Fuels plc is already taking account of the best available technology to limit the discharge of radioactive pollutants and is developing further techniques to ensure that the radioactive content of discharges is further reduced in the 1990s.

Basildon

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria he used in reaching a decision as to the rate capping of Basildon council.

Mr. Howard: Basildon was selected for rate capping in 1988-89 because its budgeted total expenditure for 1987-88 was 112·3 per cent. above grant-related expenditure. The selection criterion for all the authorities previously selected for 1987-88, including Basildon, was that budgeted total expenditure was more than 12·5 per cent. above grant-related expenditure.

Local Authority Rents

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to prohibit cross-subsidisation between different tenants of one local authority in the setting of rents.

Mrs. Roe: We are still developing our proposals for all aspects of the financial arrangements for local authority housing and these will be the subject of consultation in due course.

Local Government Finance

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will update his reply of 20 January, Official Report, column 477, to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore), and list in the Official Report those Acts of Parliament since June 1979 concerning (a) local government finance and (b) local authority duties, powers and responsibilities.

Mr. Ridley: Five further Acts of Parliament passed this year should be added to update the list set out at columns 476-77 in the Official Report of 20 January 1987. They are:

The Local Government Finance Act 1987* (C.6)
The Access to Personal Files Act 1987 (C.37)
The Fire Safety and Safety of Places of Sport Act 1987 (C. 27)
The Rate Support Grants Act 1987* (C.51)
The Local Government Act 1987 (C.44)

I have again marked with an asterisk those Acts wholly or principally concerned with finance.

Mustard Gas (Rhydymwyn)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether his Department has recently investigated levels of mustard gas remaining at the site of the world war 2 valley plant, at Rhydymwyn in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will describe decontamination procedures carried out at the valley mustard gas plant at Rhydymwyn, Clwyd (a) at the time of the plant's closure and (b) on subsequent occasions;

(3) whether storage pits containing mustard gas production equipment at the world war 2 valley plant at Rhydymwyn, Clwyd are still in existence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: This is the responsibility of the Property Services Agency.

The PSA commissioned the Laboratory of the Government Chemist in October 1985 to carry out a comprehensive survey of the Rhydymwyn site and identify and report on any chemical contamination present.

Any contamination remaining is minimal and the risks involved are no higher than for any site which has been used for industrial purposes.

The pits originally containing mustard gas production equipment were cleared, decontaminated and backfilled after world war 2.

WALES

Dairy Industry

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will be meeting the chairman of the Milk Marketing Board to discuss the future of the dairy industry in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have no plans at present for such a meeting.

Land Authority for Wales

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what acreage of land was bought by the Land Authority for Wales in each district authority area in Wales in each year since its establishment to date;

(2) if he will name all the purchasers of each of the sites which have been sold by the Land Authority for Wales in each year since its inception; at what price each of the sites was sold; and for what purposes the sites were sold;

(3) how much money has been spent by the Land Authority for Wales on the management of each of the sites which are, and which have been, in its ownership since its establishment;

(4) how much was spent by the Land Authority for Wales on the purchase of land in Wales in each year since its establishment.

Mr. Grist: I have asked the chairman of the authority to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Secondary Pupils

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils attended each of the secondary schools in Wales in the school year 1986-87.

Secondary Schools (Annual Meetings)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what information he has as to the number of annual meetings of parents of secondary school pupils in Wales at which a sufficient number of parents attended in order to constitute a quorum;

(2) what information he has as to how many parents of secondary school pupils attended the annual meeting of each secondary school in Wales held during the school year 1986-87.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This information is not centrally available.

Advance Factories and Industrial Units

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his policy to allocate two 50,000 sq. ft. advance factories, four 25,000 sq. ft. advance factories, and four 15,000 sq. ft. advance factories at Deeside industrial park, Clwyd; when he proposes to announce his all-Wales allocation of advance factories and industrial units; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Plans for advance factories are drawn up by the Welsh Development Agency on the basis of a careful assessment of needs and wide consultation across Wales, and submitted to me for approval. I will announce my decision on the agency's latest proposals in due course. At present eight units totalling 20,500 sq. ft. are vacant and available for letting at the park; and four others totalling 50,000 sq. ft. are currently under construction and due for completion in February 1988.

Electricity Charges

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost to the National Health Service of the proposed increase in electricity charges in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The exact price increases for 1988-89 are yet to be fixed by the individual boards. The cost to health authorities will then be affected by their success in improving energy efficiency, for which there is considerable scope.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has made any estimate of the impact of increased electricity charges upon the (a) steel and (b) chemical industries; what representations he has received from employers' associations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement made by my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Energy, on 3 November. I understand that any increases in electricity prices to industry are not expected to differ significantly from the likely overall average increase of 8 to 9 per cent. but the exact levels of increases have yet to be determined.

I have received no representations from employers' associations.

Conductive Education

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many local education authorities in Wales have approached him concerning conductive education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: None.

Merit Awards

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much was paid in merit awards to dentists and hospital consultants in (a) Clwyd and (b) Wales for each year since 1980; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The figures are as follows:

Financial year	Clwyd health authority £	Wales £
1979-80	87,136	834,632
1980-81	167,488	1,351,911
1981-82	188,310	1,485,971
1982-83	159,591	1,597,936
1983-84	162,491	1,841,988
1984-85	151,435	1,974,672

1986-87[1]	176,187	2,617,765

HOME DEPARTMENT

Foreign Nationals

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each year since 1978, how many foreign nationals have unsuccessfully applied for residence in the United Kingdom from (a) Australia, (b) Bangladesh, (c) Canada, (d) East Africa, (e) Hong Kong, (f) India, (g) New Zealand, (h) Pakistan, (i) South Africa, (j) South America, (k) Sri Lanka, (l) The United States of America, (m) West Africa, (n) the West Indies and (o) Zimbabwe.

Mr. Renton: The only information available centrally on refusals of such applications is given in the following tables.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Football Fans

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is contemplating any measures to seek to prevent English football fans from travelling to the European championships in West Germany in June 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have been asked to reply.

The football authorities and interested Government Departments will be discussing appropriate action, including determined action on travel and ticket arrangements, to avoid the risk of disorderly behaviour by England football supporters in West Germany in June 1988. The Department will convene regular meetings of the interested parties.

Indictable Offences (Young Persons)

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentages of males and females respectively aged 14 to 16 years found guilty of indictable offences received custodial sentences in 1986.

Mr. John Patten: This information is given in table 7.11 of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, 1986" (Cm. 233), a copy of which is in the Library.

Video Recordings Act

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted as a result of prosecutions brought under the Video Recordings Act.

Mr. John Patten: The Video Recordings Act 1984 is being introduced in stages, the first of which came into effect on 1 September 1985. The data held centrally, which may be incomplete, show no record of any prosecutions under the Act in 1985 and one person found guilty of an offence under the Act in 1986. Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Electoral Roll

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why the information gathered for the purpose of compiling the electoral roll requires the gender of the voter; why this information is not included on the electoral roll; and if he will consider changing the law to show the status of voters as Mr., Mrs., Miss or Ms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The electoral registration form, form A, asks for the elector's title (Mr., Mrs. etc.) to be included so as to assist electoral registration officers in identifying peers, who are entitled to register only as local government electors. The Representation of the People Act 1983 requires only the names of electors to be shown in the register, with their qualifying addresses. There is no objection to individual electoral registration officers printing titles as well, but, as this does not assist the conduct of elections, there is no good reason to make it a legal requirement.

Under-age Drinking

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there were in 1986 for under-age drinking.

Mr. John Patten: The information available centrally which may be incomplete, shows 949 defendants proceeded against in 1986 for offences under section 169(2) of the Licensing Act 1964.

Immigration

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will reconsider his decision to respond directly to individual constituents regarding immigration cases rather than respond to the constituent's hon. Member.

Mr. Renton: As my right hon. Friend indicated to the House on Second Reading of the Immigration Bill (columns 789-790), we do not consider present arrangements for handling hon. Members' representations in immigration cases to be satisfactory and we shall shortly be putting forward proposals for change.

Firearms Working Party

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the firearms working party will report; and whether the report will be made available to the House.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The review of the firearms controls is almost complete and my right hon. Friend hopes to announce his conclusions next week.

Bolton Home Watch

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the work of the Bolton home watch crime prevention scheme.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that two home watch schemes have been established by the local crime prevention project in Bolton and that the project co-ordinator and the police are currently discussing ways of developing more such schemes in the area.

Litter

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy concerning on-the-spot fines for offenders against the litter laws.

Mr. John Patten: We have no objection to on-the-spot fines, provided that the fines do not have to be paid immediately, and provided that they do not create additional enforcement work for the criminal justice services.

Prison Officers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to increase the freedom of prison officers to arrange their own rented living accommodation.

Mr. John Patten: Prison officers have had freedom to arrange their own accommodation since 1979. A package of changes in pay and working practices now being introduced in the prison service, which is known as fresh start, provides for prison officers who live in quarters to buy them at a discounted price.

Remand

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unconvicted prisoners were held on remand on 1 November 1987; what estimate he has made of the corresponding figure on 1 November 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: On 31 October 1987 about 9,000 untried prisoners were held in prison department establishments in England and Wales. About 900 prisoners, many of whom were likely to have been untried, were held in police cells. Changes in the prison population vary considerably from month to month and it is not our practice to publish short-term projections which may quickly become out of date.

Broadcasting (Scotland)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to meet the chairman of the BBC to discuss the future of radio broadcasting in Scotland.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to do so. Our Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities" suggested that, while there was scope for the development of additional radio services, there was a good case for the continued provision of national regional and local public service broadcasting by the BBC, although it would be for the BBC itself to judge how best to use the resources available to it.

Television Licences

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from pensioners' organisations concerning television licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: During 1987, 12 written representations, including one petition, concerning television licences have been received from pensioners' organisations (in five cases referred by hon. Members). On 11 March my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) the then Minister of State, discussed a number of matters including television licences with representations of Pensioners' Voice.

Juveniles (Cautions)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles were cautioned in each of the years 1985, 1986 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Statistics of cautions are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" in chapter 5 of the issues for 1985 and 1986 (Cmnd. 10 and Cmnd. 233, respectively), and more detail is given in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 4" (tables S4.1 (C) and S4.1 (D) of the issues for 1985 and 1986). Copies of these are in the Library. Information for 1987 is not yet available.

Community Radio

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he hopes to be able to make an announcement on the future of community radio in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Our Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities", published earlier this year, welcomed the concept of community radio and offered the prospect of additional radio services at national, local and community level. We shall be in a position to make an announcement about our legislative plans when we have completed our consideration of the responses to the Green Paper.

Immigrants (Bail)

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used in deciding whether his Department objects to a bail application by an illegal immigrant who is being kept in detention.

Mr. Renton: There is no provision in the Immigration Act for illegal entrants to apply for bail but under schedule 2 to the Act an illegal entrant may be granted temporary release from detention. The criteria applied are whether the illegal entrant will comply with any conditions attached as to residence or reporting and whether there are any compassionate circumstances.

Civil Defence

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what developments have occurred with regard to the establishment of the home defence headquarters for zone 81, north Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what contingency plans have been made for operating devolved wartime regional government for home defence zone 81, north Wales, in the continued absence of a wartime headquarters for that region;

(3) what assessment has been made of the suitability of the location chosen for the installation of a message switch communications exchange for home defence zone 81 for use as a wartime centre for devolved government; and if he will make a statement;

(4) what has been the cost of maintaining the site designated for the home defence headquarters for zone 81, north Wales, in the financial years (a) 1985-86, and (b) 1986-87; what are the projected costs for 1987-88; and whether he will describe the nature of refurbishment work conducted at the site.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not our practice to give detailed information about individual emergency facilities of this type. No date has been fixed for a start to construction work, and consideration is being given to contingency plans for alternative accommodation in the meantime. In arriving at proposed locations for these headquarters, full account is taken of the need for appropriate communications links.

Firearms

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what regulations govern the storage of guns and live ammunition in the homes of those with permits to keep guns.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Rule 11 of the Firearms Rules 1969 prescribes that the grant or renewal of a firearm certificate is subject to the condition that the firearms and ammunition to which the certificate relates are at all times when not in actual use kept in a secure place with a view to preventing access to them by unauthorised persons. My right hon. Friend has already announced that he intends to extend this requirement to shotgun certificate holders.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to variations between constabularies in restrictions placed on the sale of live ammunition for section 1 firearms.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Chief officers impose a limit on the quantity of ammunition a firearm certificate holder may purchase or possess at any one time, according to the need established.

Disabling Devices

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if any assessment is currently being undertaken by his Department on the effectiveness of devices for stunning armed suspects; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what disabling devices are currently on issue to police forces in the United Kingdom;

(3) what information he has regarding the use of devices designed to stun armed suspects in service or under test by foreign police forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Apart from firearms, police forces also have available truncheons, plastic baton rounds, and CS irritants for use in sieges and public order situations. The Home Office scientific research and development branch, and the police service, monitor developments in non-lethal weapons with a view to evaluating any system which might appear to be a practicable, effective and acceptable alternative to conventional weapons. I understand that no such system has yet been identified.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Taser Electronic Immobilisation weapon is currently being tested by the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give details of the type of guns available to the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The type of firearms available to the Metropolitan police are the same as those recommended by the Association of Chief Police Officers joint standing committee on the police use of firearms to all police forces in England and Wales. These are:

(a) revolvers—capable of firing ·38 ammunition
(b) self-loading ·9 mm calibre pistols
(c) rifles and carbines 7·62 mm and 5·56 mm calibre
(d) 12 gauge pump-action shotguns
(e) Heckler and Koch sub-machine guns (for use on anti-terrorist operations)
(f) 7 mm gas dischargers to fire CS gas cartridges
(g) baton round dischargers to fire plastic batons.

Treaty of Rome

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to publish a new edition of the treaty of Rome; and if it will include the amendments caused by the Single European Act.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 8 July, at column 149, and 20 July, at column 13. I understand the European Community publications office expects to keep to its schedule for publication this year of a revised consolidated text including the amendments introduced by the Single European Act.

Nuclear Materials

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what communications he has had with the European Community Energy Commissioner and the Director General of Safeguards of Euratom over recent reports that nuclear materials originating in nuclear facilities in the European Community have been illicitly sold on the black market in the Sudan.

Mr. Mellor: There has been no communication on this subject with the EC Energy Commissioner. Some official contact has taken place between the Department of Energy and Euratom which endorses the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 19 November.

Disarmament

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part his Department played in arriving at the detailed arrangements agreed between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics regarding the inspection of the missile bases in the United Kingdom by the Soviet Union as part of the agreement on intermediate range nuclear forces between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Mellor: There have been regular and close consultations between the United States and its allies on all aspects of the INF treaty, including the details of the verification regime.

Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what reciprocal arrangements have been agreed between the United Kingdom and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to cover the arrangements agreed for the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics to inspect at short notice missile bases in the United Kingdom as part of the intermediate range nuclear forces agreement between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America;

(2) if he will publish details of the exchange of notes between the United Kingdom Government and the Soviet Union regarding the arrangements to be made for them to inspect missile bases in the United Kingdom as a consequence of the agreement between the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Mellor: The text of the exchange of notes between the United Kingdom and the Soviet Union will be laid before the House in the ususal way once the exchange has taken place.

Angola

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs following the European Community's condemnation of the violation of the territorial integrity of Angola by South Africa, what further actions to deter further military aggression in Angola are being taken by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) the United Kingdom's European allies.

Mrs. Chalker: The South African ambassador was called to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 18 November. We supported the declaration by the Twelve on 23 November and United Nations Security Council resolution 602 of 25 November. On all of these occasions South Africa's intervention in Angola was condemned and the immediate withdrawal of its forces demanded.

South Africa

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of the speech which Her Majesty's ambassador in South Africa made in Johannesburg on 24 November at the annual Businessmen of the Year Dinner.

Mrs. Chalker: This was an after-dinner speech with no written text and no bearing on policy. I am placing in the Library of the House a copy of Her Majesty's ambassador's most recent policy speech, to the South African/Britain Trade Association on 16 November.

Radiation in Food

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of that part of the Foreign Affairs Council held on 23 and 24 November which dealt with the subject of radiation levels in food.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope) on 25 November, at column 222.

Chile

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the cases on which the ambassador in Chile or his staff have made direct representations to the Chilean Minister of the Interior, indicating for each whether the intervention was on behalf of another Government.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's ambassador and his predecessor in Santiago have spoken to successive Ministers of the Interior as well as to other Ministers and members of the military junta on many occasions about our concern over human rights in Chile. A full list of these representations is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. One intervention, with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, has been made this year on behalf of another Government. It concerned the arrest and detention of Sr. Luis Tricot.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes), Official Report, 18 November, column 593, he will list the dates of the meetings held with and the letters delivered to the Chilean authorities on his own behalf and on behalf of the Government of the Republic of Ireland.

Mr. Eggar: On 16 September 1987, Her Majesty's embassy in Santiago delivered to the Chilean Ministry of Foreign Affairs an aide memoire expressing concern about Sr. Tricot's arrest and detention. This action was taken formally on behalf of the Government of the Republic of Ireland where Sr. Tricot had refugee status prior to his return to Chile.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the procedure adopted in the allocation of licences for the extraction of fish within the 150 mile fisheries zone surrounding the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: The Falkland Islands Government are responsible for the allocation of fishing licences for the Falkland Islands interim conservation and management zone. Licences are allocated in accordance with the conservation needs of the fishery and take account of the relative methods of fishing.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will list the names of those individuals, organisations or companies who have been awarded licences for the extraction of fish within the 150 mile fisheries zone surrounding the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Eggar: Details are commercially confidential. Applicants have been notified by the Falkland Islands Government of their squid licence allocations. Finfish licensing is not yet complete. A list of countries allocated licences will be placed in the Library of the House in due course.

Visa Applications

Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the charges made for visa applications in each of the countries for which visas are required for visits to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Eggar: The current fees for visit visas or entry certificates are:

Single Entry	20
Multiple entry (normally valid for two years)	40

irrespective of the nationality of the applicant. Fees are payable in the equivalent local currency at the time of application.

Hong Kong

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the Minister of State, the Lord Glenarthur, has refused to meet the full delegation from Hong Kong, led by Mr. Martin Lee QC, relating to the Green Paper on representative government.

Mr. Eggar: Lord Glenarthur agreed to receive the Legislative Council members of the delegation in view of the special position of the Legislative Council in Hong Kong. We have no doubt that they will be able to reflect fully and accurately the views of the entire delegation.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Degrees

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to introduce legislation to control the use of the description "university" and the issue of degrees in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend is already able to exercise control over the use of the term "university" in the name of a company or business by virtue of regulations now having effect as if made under section 29 of the Companies Act 1985 and section 3 of the Business Names Act 1985. Regarding the issue of degrees, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) on 13 November 1987.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate (Annual Report)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why he has revised the format of Her Majesty's inspectorate's annual report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Previous annual reports from Her Majesty's inspectorate have been based on evidence gained during the course of just one term. The new style report will offer a view of the nature, quality and effectiveness of education in schools and colleges in the light of all the inspection work carried out by HMI over a whole academic year. It will present an overview on the standards of education in general, on progress made since the previous year's report, on trends and regional differences and on issues that HMI judges need to be addressed by those responsible for the education service. It is hoped that these changes will lead to a better and more useful report.

Deaf-Blind Children

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if his Department has yet completed the analysis of the questionnaire on the numbers of deaf-blind children in each local education authority, following the issue of a consultative document in December 1986; and if he has arranged a date to meet representatives of SENSE to discuss the resulting figures.

Mr. Dunn: The analysis of responses to the questionnaire which accompanied the Department's consultative document is not yet complete. Most local education authorities were unable to meet the original deadline for replies. Officials of the Department will arrange to meet representatives of SENSE as soon as work on the analysis is complete and before the final version of a statement on the educational needs of deaf-blind children is issued.

Welfare Officers

Mr. Archer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what were the numbers of education welfare officers in post in England and Wales for each of the last five years for which statistics are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: This information is not collected centrally by my Department or that of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. Education welfare officers are employed by individual local education authorities.

ENERGY

Sir Frank Layfield (Lecture)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what assessment he has made of the implications for his Department's handlings of large-scale energy projects of the proposals contained in the lecture by Sir Frank Layfield to the Parliamentary and Scientific Committee on 10 November, attended by his officials, concerning the planning inquiry process, and in particular the case for early appointment of assessors, continuity of inquiry staff, and financing of umbrella organisations of objectors; if he will seek to obtain a transcript of the meeting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government's views on major public inquiries were given in the reply to the fifth report of the Environmental Committee, Session 1985-86, "Planning: Appeals, Call-In and Major Inquiries" (Cm 43). A transcript of Sir Frank Layfield's lecture is not yet available. I shall write to the hon. Member once I have studied it.

"The Energy Dimension"

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what response he intends to make to the report by the association for Conservation of Energy on Regenerating the Inner City: "The Energy Dimension", a copy of which he has received.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the letter which my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State wrote to him on Thursday 26 November. A copy of the letter is being placed in the Library of the House.

Scottish Coalfield

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the planned capital investment in the Scottish coalfield for each year from 1988 to 1993; and what proportion of this will be in opencast mining.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the outstanding debt of the electricity supply industry is attributable to the development and construction costs of nuclear power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The electricity supply industry has borrowed funds when it has not been able to meet its financing requirements from internal resources. It is not possible to identify the funds borrowed with particular elements of the total financing requirements.

NUM

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met representatives of the National Union of Mineworkers; and what matters he discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I met representatives from the Kent area of the National Union of Mineworkers on 17 November, together with my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) to discuss issues arising from the closure of Snowdown colliery.

Scottish Coal Industry

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the planned manpower figures for the Scottish coal industry for each year from 1988 to 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Coal-fired Power Stations

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the costs of refubishing an existing coal fired station; and what is his estimate of the cost of building a comparable new coal fired power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter which falls within the management responsibility of the Central Electricity Generating Board. I have asked the chairman to write to the Hon. Member.

Union of Democratic Mineworkers

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met representatives of the Union of Democratic Mineworkers; and what matters he discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I last met representatives of the Union of Democratic Mineworkers when I addressed its annual conference on 24 June.

Nuclear Power Stations (Building Costs)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the cost of building a new nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) on 23 November 1987 at column 8.

Private Mines

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he last met representatives of private licensed mines and private opencast sites; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have met a number of representatives of the licensed sector. We have discussed the outlook for the licensed sector and the scope for greater flexibility an transparency within the existing law. They have made representations to me about changes they would wish to see in the licensing system.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Post Office

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the external financing limits and outturn figures for the Post Office for each year since external financing limits were introduced.

Mr. Butcher: External financing limits have been set for the Post Office since 1976-77, when they were described as cash limits. The limits and outturn against them have been published in annual public expenditure White Papers and the Post Office's reports and accounts, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. However, the information requested is as follows:

	Limit £ million	Outturn £ million
1976-77	−24·4	−0·7
1977-78	1·8	−21·5
1978-79	1·2	−16·7
1979-80	−40·5	−34·0
1980-81	−20·0	−7·7
1981-82	0·0	−13·4
1982-83	−55·8	−59·7
1983-84	−50·9	−61·5
1984-85	−60·0	−99·5
1985-86	−70·0	−74·7
1986-87	−93·0	−93·1
1987-88	−57·0	—

The limit for 1988-89 of −£97 million was announced in the Autumn Statement on 3 November.

Radio Investigation Officers

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many radio investigation officers there are; how they inspect yacht licences on craft moored offshore; and how many prosecutions there have been in the last five years for infringement of the ship radio (VHF) licence regulations.

Mr. Butcher: The radio investigation service currently has 202 staff. When necessary, the radio investigation service inspects radio installations on craft moored offshore using vessels hired for the purpose, or its own inflatable dinghy. The number of people prosecuted over the last five years for offences related to the use of radio in the marine environment is as follows:

Year	Prosecuted
1984	0
1985	8
1986	5
[1]1987	10

[1] To 30 September.

All the prosecutions were successful. Information on which of the prosecutions were for infringements of the ship radio (VHF) licence regulations is not readily available.

Cigarettes (West Germany)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the quantities of cigarettes imported from the Federal Republic of Germany for home use; and what percentage this represents of total cigarettes delivered for home use in each of the periods April 1985 to September 1985, October 1985 to March 1986, April 1986 to September 1986, October 1986 to March 1987, and April 1987 to October 1987, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: Details of imports of cigarettes for home use only are not available. Total imports from April 1985 are as follows:

Import of cigarettes from the Federal Republic of West Germany 1985 to 1987

Period	Imports from Federal Republic of Germany (millions)	Percentage of total cigarette imports
April 1985 to September 1985	3,574·8	63·8

April 1986 to September 1986	3,466·6	72·0
October 1986 to March 1987	6,615·3	77·7
April 1987 to September 1987	2,390·1	60·4

Notes: Imports valued cif; 1986 and 1987 figures provisional.

Chile (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the Chilean Government officials whom the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark) met on his recent trip to Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I had meetings with the Deputy Foreign Minister; the Finance Minister; the Minister of Public Works; the Minister of Mines; the Chief of Staff of the Chilean Navy; the President of the Central Bank; the Executive Secretary of the Foreign Investment Commission. I also attended a lunch hosted by the Foreign Minister. After my arrival in Chile, I was invited to see the President, on whom I paid a courtesy call.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in which products he anticipates increased trade with Chile as a result of the recent visit to Chile by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Chilean market offers excellent opportunities for British exporters across a wide range of product areas. In the first 10 months of this year, our exports to Chile were up by over 70 per cent. over the same period last year. I am hopeful that one result of my visit will be that British companies will increase their sales to the Chilean mining sector.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will place in the Library a copy of all press statements from his Department about the recent visit to Chile by the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark).

Mr. Alan Clark: A copy of my Department's press notice, announcing the visit, is available in the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) whether the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark) expressed concern about human rights abuses at every meeting with Government officials on his recent visit to Chile; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark), raised the question of Chileans formerly resident in Britain and now imprisoned in Chile with any Government officials during his recent visit to Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The purpose of my visit was to promote British exports to Chile. I nevertheless took the opportunity, where appropriate to express Her Majesty's Government's concern about human rights in Chile. Her Majesty's Government have raised with the Chilean authorities the matter of two Chileans, formerly resident in the United Kingdom, who are in prison awaiting trial on arms charges.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the organisations with which the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Clark), held meetings on his recent trip to Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I had meetings with the President and senior officials of CODELCO, the Chilean copper mining corporation; the chairman and officials of the British/Chilean chamber of commerce; the president of FISA (the Santiago International Trade Fair); and the general manager of Minera Escondida Ltd. In addition, I met representatives of the Chilean opposition and an official of the Chilean Human Rights Commission.

EEC (Shipping)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any evidence of the 28 per cent. ceiling on subsidies for the construction of shipping being breached in other European Economic Community countries.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Commission is responsible for ensuring that member states observe the rules of the European Council sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding which came into force on 1 January 1987. Under Article 4(5) of the Directive, the Commission can be asked to investigate the aid offered by member states in intra-Community competition. More than 20 such investigations have so far taken place. Only in the case of the Brittany Ferries order has the Commission established a breach of the aid ceiling. An Article 93(2) procedure is now in progress against the French authorities.

Car Lifting Gear

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what actions are being taken to ensure that (a) bottle jacks and (b) car lifting gear in general meet British safety standards;

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the present controls over the safety standards of (a) bottle jacks and (b) car lifting gear in general;

(3) whether he intends to make further funding available to police the provisions of the Consumer Protection Act 1987 in the area of safety standards for car lifting gear.

Mr. Maude [holding answer 26 November 1987]: The Department commissioned the Institute for Consumer Ergonomics to undertake a safety appraisal of DIY car maintenance equipment including car lifting gear. The institute's recommendations were included in the Department's report on vehicle maintenance, which was published in November 1986. I am arranging for copies of the report to be placed in the Library.

The report has proved a valuable aid to the development of new standards and the revision of existing ones. The British Standards Institution expects to publish new standards for car ramps and axle stands early next year. The BSI has recently issued for public comment a revised draft of BS Au 154(a): 1970 for hydraulic jacks to take account of models intended for use by amateur mechanics. A review of BS Au 172: 1979 for accessory jacks (of both bottle and scissor types) for passenger cars is also being undertaken as a matter of priority. I also indicated my Department's intention to approve standards for the various types of car lifting gear for the purpose of the general safety requirement of the Consumer Protection Act, as soon as satisfactory standards become available. This will mean that suppliers must either comply with the approved standard or achieve an equivalent level of safety by other means.

Enforcement of this legislation is the responsibility of the local authority trading standards departments. The amount allocated to local authorities for expenditure on consumer protection and trading standards activities is reviewed annually during consideration of the rate support grant. The amount allocated for these activities has increased in recent years. The new legislation provides local authorities with greater flexibility and enhanced powers for the execution of their statutory duty to enforce consumer protection laws.

SCOTLAND

Rural Development

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his strategy for rural area development in Scotland; if he intends to establish a rural development agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I believe that rural area development in Scotland is best tackled by supporting and encouraging the initiative and potential which exists in rural communities.

Government assistance for rural development is channelled through a variety of mechanisms, including the Scottish Development Agency, the Highlands and Islands Development Board, local authorities and other public bodies. Full details of the wide range of assistance available is provided in the booklet "Rural Scotland" which my Department published earlier this year. We will continue to encourage these bodies to respond to the needs of rural areas in a co-ordinated manner to secure the economic and social development of rural Scotland.

I have no plans to establish a rural development agency. I believe that the interests of rural areas are better served through the existing mechanisms than by the creation of another public body.

Community Service

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide 100 per cent. funding for an expanded community service order scheme in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is at present reviewing the arrangements for providing community service by offenders.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what procedures will be applied to proposals for preliminary investigations of a potential site in Scotland for the disposal of (i) low-level, (ii) intermediate-level and (iii) high-level nuclear waste; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have nothing to add at present to the reply which I gave the hon. Member on 10 November, at column 142.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate what percentage of nuclear waste produced in Scotland is the result of the production of military materials; and what percentage of such waste is categorised as high level.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available in the form requested. It has, however, been estimated that, for the period to 2030, low and intermediate wastes from defence sources throughout the United Kingdom as a whole would amount to not more than 20 per cent. of the corresponding civil wastes.

Sheep and Goatmeat

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total production of sheep and goatmeat, in tonnes, in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total production of sheepmeat, in thousand tonnes, in Scotland for each year since 1979 is as follows:

	'000 tonnes
1979	52·5
1980	60·8
1981	57·4
1982	56·7
1983	59·7
1984	57·3
1985	57·6
1986	58·4

Little goatmeat is produced, and there is insufficient information on which to base estimates.

Agricultural Land

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list in the Official Report the average selling price per acre of agricultural land in Scotland in each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information required is shown in the following table. The data are for equipped farms with vacant possession, sub-divided between hill and upland type farms and other farms.

	Hill and upland type farms £/hectare	Other farms £/hectare
1978	588	2,016
1979	1,189	3,034
1980	1,221	2,940
1981	1,241	2,548
1982	1,183	2,784
1983	1,408	3,018

	Hill and upland type farms £/hectare	Other farms £/hectare
1984	1,042	3,020
1985	1,024	2,568
1986	[1]578	2,130
[2]1987	874	1,931

[2] To date.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what record he has maintained of land which has been taken out of agricultural use in Scotland since 1979; if he will list in the Official Report the total average of land currently in agricultural use in Scotland; and what was the comparable amount in 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The annual June agricultural census provides information on land going out of agricultural use. Between 1979 and 1986 the total recorded was 125,500 hectares. The areas of land covered by the census in 1986 and 1979 respectively were 5,968 thousand hectares and 6,134 thousand hectares. The two series are not completely comparable for a variety of reasons, including corrections and remeasurements.

School Government

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many representations he has received on his proposals regarding school government; and of these how many have been in favour.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 20 November 1987.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish, for each Scottish health board, the numbers of acute beds in hospitals which are occupied by geriatric and psychogeriatric patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not routinely collected. Relevant information will, however, shortly become available from a special survey. I shall write to the hon. Member.

Educational Buildings (Aberdeen)

Mr. Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will allow increased capital consents to Grampian regional council to deal with problems of repair and replacement of educational buildings in Aberdeen which have been found to have serious structural faults.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We are currently considering how consent to incur capital expenditure in 1988-89 and later years should be allocated, and I will most certainly take account of the problems which have recently materialised in Aberdeen. We expect to complete our deliberations early in 1988. My right hon. and learned Friend cannot give any undertakings about allocations to Grampian regional council at this stage.

Hydroelectricity

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investment is planned in the hydroelectric industry for each year from 1988 to 1993.

Mr. Lang: This is a commercial matter for decision by the Scottish electricity boards and I am asking the chairmen of the Scottish electricity boards to write to the hon. Gentleman.

Hypothermia

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of 5 November, Official Report, columns 183-4, he will give the most up-to-date figures for the numbers of hypothermia and cold-related deaths in Scotland in 1987; and if he has final figures for 1986.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provisional figure for the number of deaths from hypothermia in Scotland in 1987 up to the end of October is 127. The final figure for 1986 is 209.

Highlands and Islands Development Board (Review)

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if copies of the review of the Highlands and Islands Development Board are available.

Mr. Lang: Copies of the summary report are now available in the House Library and copies have been sent to all hon. Members with constituencies in the board's area. Copies of the full report will be lodged in the House Library shortly.

Private Sector Rented Dwellings

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many additional private sector rented dwellings he expects to achieve as a result of the proposals on his recent White Paper on housing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 November 1987]: A considerable number.

Housing

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how the wind-up criteria for the Scottish new town development corporations are affected by the Scottish Development Department's White Paper, "Housing: The Government's Proposals For Scotland"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 November 1987]: The Government's proposals for new town housing, set out in the Scottish housing White Paper, are designed to promote diversity of tenure within the Scottish new towns. It is our intention to review the current policy of transferring new town housing remaining at wind-up to local authorities. These proposals are, however, unrelated to the specification of criteria for determining when the corporations should be wound up.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the community charge which would have been payable in the current year by district, regional and islands council area were the number of adults registered to pay to be 10 per cent. less than anticipated.

Mr. Lang: No. The illustrative levels of estimated personal community charge published by my right hon. and learned Friend represent the levels which would be required to replace domestic rate income in 1987-88. My right hon. and learned Friend has no intention of publishing alternative figures which would depend on purely hypothetical assumptions.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give details of the rebates scheme under the new community charge poll tax for those people who are (a) sick, (b) unemployed, (c) elderly or (d) on low incomes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services hopes to publish draft community charge rebate regulations in the spring or early summer of 1988 following consultation with local authorities.

It is intended that the procedures for assessing needs and resources should be aligned as far as is possible with those included in the Housing Benefit (General) Regulations 1987.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Broadwater Farm Estate (Trials)

67. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Attorney-General what is the total cost of the recent trials arising from the incidents on the Broadwater Farm estate in Tottenham on 5 and 6 October 1985; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The total cost of the 62 cases brought to trial arising from these events amounts, in respect of fees and witnesses expenses paid to date from both prosecution and defence, to £882,220.

Books (Injunctions)

68. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what actions he intends to take in relation to the distribution of books in the United Kingdom against which he has successfully sought injunctions abroad.

The Attorney-General: The organised distribution or sale or advertising of "Spycatcher", or of any book in respect of which there is an injunction in this country, is at risk of being a contempt of court. The Treasury Solicitor has received satisfactory undertakings from nearly all recipients of a letter sent on my instructions as a law enforcement officer giving warning of this. I shall continue to direct the sending of such letters. I am considering those cases where the response was unsatisfactory.

Courts (Resources)

69. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Attorney-General what plans the Lord Chancellor has to increase the resources available to the courts in England and Wales.

The Attorney-General: Additional provision has been made available for the court service in England and Wales for the current financial year. The autumn statement reflects further provision for the Lord Chancellor's Department, including the court service over the next three years.

Professional Liability

70. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Attorney-General if he has any plans to seek to amend the Latent Damage Act 1986 with respect to professional liability.

The Attorney-General: No. But I refer my hon. Friend to the Government's decision announced on 28 October by my hon. Friend the Minister for Corporate and Consumer Affairs, to commission a series of studies into selected professions to establish the nature, scope, extent and implications of the liability problems that they face.

Prosecution of Offenders Act 1985

71. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received on the workings of the Prosecution of Offenders Act 1985.

The Attorney-General: I have received a number of representations, both from within and without this House. Some have been supportive of the Crown Prosecutions service, some have not. Of those in the latter category, a great many have contained adverse criticism of the service, which has been either misinformed or misguided. This criticism has failed to acknowledge the excellent work and numerous successes of the service's deeply committed staff; whilst blaming the service for matters which are outside its control, or for which other agencies in the criminal justice system are responsible.

Landlord and Tenant

72. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what action he proposes to take following the publication of the Law Commission paper on landlord and tenant.

The Attorney-General: The Law Commission report on Landlord and Tenant: Reform of the Law (Law Com. No. 162) to which the hon. Member refers is an overall, preliminary survey of a wide topic, and does not put forward detailed proposals for further action.

Land Registry Applications

Mr. Butler: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will take measures to increase the speed with which the Land Registry processes applications for registration.

The Attorney-General: The Treasury has recently approved a significant increase in expenditure and manpower to be made available to enable HM Land Registry to meet its growing commitments. Furthermore, discussions are being held with a view to ensuring that manpower resources can be adjusted more readily to reflect the level of activity prevailing from time to time in the conveyancing and mortgage markets.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Attorney-General how long it takes on average to process a land registration application.

The Attorney-General: The current position is that applications for searches and office copies of entries on the register are processed on average within two to three working days of receipt. Applications for dealings with registered titles are processed on average within 51 working days. Applications for new titles are processed on average within 140 working days.

Computers

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received regarding the extent to which the submission of application forms for export licences to the United States Government by United Kingdom vendors of American computer equipment complies with EEC regulation 2641/84; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have received no representations.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General what is his policy toward prosecuting companies in the United Kingdom making an application to the United States Government for an export licence for American computer systems which provide as part of their application information which is officially secret; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Any allegation of illegal conduct will be considered on its merits.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Mozambique

7. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will make a statement on future aid programmes to Mozambique.

Mr. Chris Patten: So far this year we have committed £5 million to be spent on capital projects, £15 million as support for Mozambique's balance of payments, a further £15 million for food and emergency aid and we have a continuing programme of technical co-operation. We expect to maintain a significant level of assistance to Mozambique both directly and through our contribution to projects sponsored by the Southern African development co-ordination conference.

India

78. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to change the level of aid to India.

Mr. Chris Patten: The level of our aid spending in India will continue to be determined by what we can afford and by the rate at which we and the Indian authorities agree on projects to be supported. I look forward to reviewing the progress of our substantial programme with the Indians when I go there in December.

Uganda

79. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for assisting Uganda's economic development.

Mr. Chris Patten: In June this year we pledged £25 million of balance of payments support for Uganda to be spent over two years. £15 million of this has already been allocated — £5 million as bilateral programme aid to finance vital imports for the agricultural, transport and industrial sectors, and £10 million as co-financing with the World Bank special facility for Africa. The remaining £10 million is subject to Uganda maintaining the economic recovery programme agreed earlier this year with the IMF. In addition, we are providing assistance to the transport, health, public administration, education and power generation sectors.

Egypt

80. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether his Department is planning to offer any technical and any other form of assistance to Egypt to help overcome difficulty in that country consequent upon the fall of the water level in the river Nile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have not been asked by the Government of Egypt to provide assistance to help overcome difficulties arising from the fall in the water level of the Nile. We shall certainly consider any requests that they put to us.

Expenditure (Order)

81. Mr. Wells: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many orders and for how much money have been placed in Britain as a result of Overseas Development Administration expenditure for the latest 12 months period available; and how many jobs have resulted from that expenditure.

Mr. Chris Patten: In 1986 approximately 13,000 contracts were placed in the United Kingdom as a result of the bilateral aid programme. Expenditure on British goods and services amounted to £750 million. Procurement of British goods and services on projects and programmes funded by the multilateral aid agencies amounted to approximately £600 million. It has been estimated that the aid programme directly supports about 75,000 jobs in the United Kingdom each year.

East and Central Africa

82. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution has been made in 1987 by the Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute to the long-term alleviation of famine conditions in east and central Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Natural Resources Institute is engaged in a variety of projects which all contribute to the long-term alleviation of famine in east and central Africa. Its research, advisory and field management work there ranges across food security and seed stocks, control of insect pests, improved processing of poor people's food crops such as sorghum, millet and cassava, livestock systems, resettlement projects and co-ordination of climate studies. Earlier this year I allocated some £6·8 million to ODNRI to strengthen the institute's programme of work on insect pest problems affecting rural populations in Africa.

Poor Countries (Development)

83. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the role played by non-Governmental organisations in assisting the development of poor countries.

Mr. Chris Patten: Non-governmental organisations play an important and distinctive role in overseas development and are particularly effective at a grass roots level in reaching some of the poorest communities in ways which are not always open to Government to Government aid. Support from the aid programme for non-governmental organisations has increased steadily over the last few years and I have decided, subject to parliamentary approval, to increase our support for the next year under the joint funding scheme by 50 per cent., as well as increasing our support for volunteer recruitment agencies by 18 per cent.

Ethiopia

84. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to help avert famine in Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: So far this year we have committed £10·74 million from the bilateral programme for famine relief in Ethiopia, including an offer of £2 million, which I announced on 17 November, to help the Office of the United Nations disaster relief co-ordinator mount an airlift to transport food to those in most urgent need. In addition we are contributing some £12·5 million as our share of the cost of food and other emergency relief provided by the European Community.

85. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has held with development agencies in Britain about the situation in Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: My officials are in regular contact with British voluntary organisations concerned with Ethiopia. A substantial proportion of our relief assistance to Ethiopia is channelled through such organisations, including pledges so far this year of 20,000 tonnes of emergency food aid and support for the joint OXFAM/ Save the Children fund relief trucking fleet.

Population Growth

86. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what place considerations of trends in population growth in recipient countries take in his decisions on the aid programme.

Mr. Chris Patten: Rapid population growth is a key factor affecting economic and social progress in poor countries. We support developing countries which have programmes designed to give parents both healthier families and choice in determining the number and spacing of their children.

Ethiopia and Sudan

87. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps Her Majesty's Government will take to seek to prevent famine in Ethiopia and Sudan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: So far this year we have committed £10·74 million from the bilateral programme for famine relief in Ethiopia. In addition we have contributed some £12·5 million as our share of the cost of food and other emergency relief provided by the European Community.

For the Sudan Britain has provided about £500,000 in relief aid this year including a co-ordination expert for the Sudan Relief and Rehabilitation Commission and help for people displaced by war in southern Sudan. We stand ready to provide more assistance if necessary.

UN Development Programme

88. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much the United Kingdom is contributing to the United Nations development programme in the current year.

Mr. Chris Patten: A total of £23 million.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on the proportion of the purchase price of the Upland Goose hotel in the Falkland Islands paid from his Department's grant to the Falkland Islands development corporation.

Mr. Chris Patten: No aid programme funds were involved in the purchase.

Cambodia

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if Her Majesty's Government will consider giving financial or technical assistance to the renovation of the water supply in Phnom Penh, Kampuchea; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the Overseas Development Administration will consider reversing its ban on development aid to the Kampuchean Government in the light of the recent peace initiatives between the Phnom Penh government and Prince Sihanouk's Democratic Kampuchean Coalition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: We see no grounds at this stage for changing our present policy on aid to Cambodia.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about making the abuse of solvent a criminal offence; what views he has sought on the matter; and what steps he plans to make.

Mr. John Patten: We occasionally receive proposals in favour of making solvent misuse a criminal offence, but have accepted the judgment of professionals working in the field that this would be counter-productive. We consider that the more effective approach lies through a combination of education and information for parents and professionals and voluntary reductions in supply for retailers, backed where necessary by the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985.

Prisoners (Herbal Medicines)

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the policy of the prison service on the availability of herbal medicines to inmates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Responsibility for the health care of inmates of a prison service establishment is vested in the medical officer, who uses his professional knowledge and clinical judgment in deciding the treatment appropriate in each case. Inmates have a right to refuse treatment prescribed by the medical officer but they are not permitted to substitute a treatment of their own prescription unless it is a form of treatment of which the medical officer approves.

Prisoners (Remand and Police Custody)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently being held (a) on remand and (b) in police cells.

Mr. John Patten: On 31 October 1987, the latest date for which reliable information is available, about 10,570 untried or convicted unsentenced prisoners wre held in prison department establishments in England and Wales and 910 prisoners were held in police cells, many of whom were on remand. By 20 November 1987 the number held in police cells had fallen to 650.

Firearms

Sir Anthony Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons in the last five years have been convicted of crimes involving a legally licensed smooth-bore short-barrelled gun, under 24 in in length.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available from the records of court proceedings held centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will take steps to ensure that statistics on the type of weapons which have been used in the commission of crimes are kept;

(2) on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years upon which a firearm has been used in the commission of a crime the offender has been licensed to own (a) a shotgun or (b) another firearm;

(3) what information he has concerning the numbers of offences committed using firearms in Switzerland in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement;

(4) on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years a firearm used in the commission of a crime has been found to be a firearm stolen from an individual licensed to hold such a weapon;

(5) on how many occasions in each of the last 10 years a self-loading rifle has been reported stolen.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information on notifiable offences recorded by the police in which firearms were reported to have been used or stolen is published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales" chapter 3 of the edition for 1986 (Cm. 233), copies of which are in the Library. The information collected relates to the principal weapon used in the offence, as reported by the victim; only the main class of weapon (rifle, pistol, air-weapon etc.) is recorded because more detailed information could not be collected reliably from victims whose reports are often imprecise. In a large proportion of these offences the weapon used is not recovered. The other information asked for is not available from the records held centrally.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has concerning the numbers and types of firearms which are issued to citizens of Switzerland as part of that country's civil defence policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Such information as is available to me suggests that Swiss males over the age of 20 may be issued with a firearm, usually an automatic one, to enable them to participate in military service.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had concerning the case for individuals serving in the Territorial Army continuing to practise using self-loading rifles at private shooting clubs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. We have considered the possibility of exempting certain categories of persons, or members of certain organisations, from the proposed restrictions on full-bore self-loading rifles, but have concluded that any such exemptions would seriously weaken the new controls and discriminate against legitimate shooters who happened to fall outside these categories.

John and George Daly

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who authorised the temporary release from prison of John and George Daly to attend the funeral of their mother; and what was the cost to public funds.

Mr. John Patten: John and George Daly, who are category A inmates, were not "temporarily released" from prison (that is allowed to leave unaccompanied) but attended their mother's funeral service — but not the burial—under escort. This was authorised in accordance with standing instructions by a senior official of the prison department. The cost to public funds was about £200.

Mrs. Sayban Nessa

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, following the refusal of permission to his Department to appeal, he will now give instructions for an entry clearance certificate to be issued immediately to Mrs. Sayban Nessa (ref. m378012).

Mr. Renton: I have instructed the entry clearance officer in Dhaka to issue entry clearance to Mrs. Nessa.

Shops Act 1950

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he intends giving to local authorities in relation to prosecuting alleged contraventions of the Shops Act 1950, in the light of the recent referral of a case to the European Court of Justice alleging a breach of article 30.

Mr. Renton: We shall decide what action, if any, is necessary when the outcome of the case is known. There is no reason to suppose that local authorities are not aware of their current responsibility and powers under section 71 of the Shops Act 1950 to enforce its provisions.

Prisoners (Compassionate Release)

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates of prisons have been released temporarily on compassionate grounds in each of the last five years; who authorised such releases; and what was the cost to public funds.

Mr. John Patten: Prisoners may be temporarily released on compassionate grounds on the authorisation of the prison governor, under rule 6 of the Prison Rules 1964 (as amended). The number of such releases and their cost are not recorded centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Merseyside Fire and Civil Defence Authority

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the meeting between his Minister of State, the noble Lord Caithness, and the all-party delegation representing the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority on Wednesday 18 November.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: At the request of the Merseyside fire and civil defence authority my noble Friend the Minister of State met a delegation from the authority on 18 November to receive representations in support of its application for a redetermination of their 1988-89 expenditure level. We shall take into account the matters raised at this meeting together with other relevant considerations when coming to a decision on the authority's application.

Gaming Machines

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on (a) the incidence of the use of gaming machines by minors and (b) the installation of gaming machines in premises providing easy access to minors.

Mr. John Patten: We have some information about the use of amusement machines by young people. We are interested in obtaining clear evidence and that is why my right hon. Friend announced research into this subject on 6 May. There is no statutory prohibition on young people entering many of the premises including amusement arcades which have these machines. When we have the results of the research we shall be in a better position to judge whether it is necessary or desirable to introduce fresh legislation.

Special Constables

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received from special constables in the past year about their inability to appeal against a chief constables' decision in disciplinary matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We can find no record of any such representations.

Mentally Disordered Offenders

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet received the report of the working group on mentally disordered offenders in the prison system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: A joint Home Office/DHSS working group of officials chaired by Dr. John L. Kilgour, CB, Director of Prison Medical Services was set up last year to consider and report to Ministers on the problems presented by mentally disordered offenders in the prison system in England and Wales. There were two main objectives: to see what could be done to minimise the numbers of such prisoners, and to develop arrangements for their treatment whilst in custody and after.

The working group's report describes various factors which bear on the issue and steps which are being taken, or should be put in hand, to bring about improvements. The Government accept the 16 recommendations made. In addition to measures for improving administrative procedures within the Home Office and the prison service, the recommendations include:

Making sure that the courts are fully aware of the non-custodial options open to them, particularly their powers of remand to hospital for report or treatment under sections 35 and 36 of the Mental Health Act 1983, and of the facilities available in the health system.

Continuing as a priority the planned study by the institute of psychiatry, university of London, to produce over the next three years a psychiatric profile of the prison population.

Further encouraging regional health authorities to develop a comprehensive network of provision to meet mental health-care needs in their regions.

Establishing arrangements for patients in prison, on the request of the responsible medical officer, to be assessed by NHS medical staff so that where necessary plans can be made for their continuing care and support on release back into the community.

The report is being made available, on request, to interested organisations and individuals. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he requires the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to inform him of the numbers and types of firearms held by his force;

(2) whether he will publish statistics concerning the numbers and types of firearms held by the Metropolitan police;

(3) what advice his Department has issued to chief constables on the collection and dissemination of statistics on the numbers and types of firearms held by their forces;

(4) what representations he has received concerning the collection and publication of statistics on the numbers and types of firearms held by police forces;

(5) whether he will review his Department's policy on collecting statistics on the number and type of firearms held by police forces.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is for each chief officer of police to decide what weapons are required to enable him to discharge his operational responsibilities. He is guided in this by advice issued by the Association of Chief Police Officers. The Home Office is represented on the committee which produces this advice.

The Home Office is responsible for ensuring, through HM inspectorate of constabulary, that police forces are efficient and HM inspectorate checks, during its annual inspections, that police forces have adequate equipment available to them. Police authorities are responsible for providing that equipment and for keeping themselves informed on matters connected with the policing of their area. As police authority for the Metropolitan police, my right hon. Friend has access to information relating to the types and numbers of weapons held by that force.

It is a matter for the judgment of chief officers of police and police authorities as to how much information should be publicly disclosed in relation to police firearms. I gave details of the broad categories of firearms held by the Metropolitan police in answer to a question from the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) on 27 November. We do not believe it to be in the public interest to disclose details of the number of firearms held in each of those categories.

The Department has not issued advice to chief constables on the collection and dissemination of statistics on the numbers and types of firearms held by their forces. The only representations received concerning the collection and publication of such statistics have been from the press.

The above policy is in line with the devolved character of policing in this country under the 1964 Police Act. We constantly watch the working of these relationships to ensure that they are efficient, but so far see no practical advantage in proposing changes to them in this respect.

Nuclear Attack

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply, Official Report, 13 November, column 336, whether his Department has any plans to practice in peacetime the national warning procedures for ballistic missile attack.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Kingdom warning and monitoring organisation of the Home Office regularly practices the procedures for issuing a national warning of ballistic missile attack.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply, Official Report, 13 November, column 336, to what proportion of the United Kingdom population the sirens intended to warn of impending nuclear attack are intended to be audible.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is estimated that some 90 per cent. of the population should be capable of being warned of an impending air attack by sirens and the whole population by radio broadcasts.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the reply, Official Report, 13 November, column 336, whether the advice on protective measures in the event of a ballistic missile attack is currently available to the public upon request; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1985 we published emergency planning guidance to local authorities, which provides detailed planning advice on wartime and other emergencies; this was followed in 1986 by "Civil Protection" (a booklet and video) giving a more basic introduction to the subject—both of these are available to the public and copies are in the Library. Arrangements for issuing more direct guidance to the public are kept under review: the nature and timing of such guidance would depend on the nature of the threat evident at the time.

Extradition (Ireland)

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions, in each of the past five years, the Government have been prevented from seeking extradition from the Republic of Ireland because the Republic has not acceded to the European convention on the suppression of terrorism.

Mr. John Patten: No United Kingdom warrants have been returned unexecuted from the Republic of Ireland in the last five years on the basis that the offences concerned were regarded as political.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in tax in percentage terms on a packet of 20 cigarettes of the most popular brand since May 1979; and what has been the change in the tobacco price index compared with the all items index in the same period.

Mr. Lilley: The total of duty and value added tax on a packet of 20 cigarettes has increased by 188 per cent. since May 1979.

The tobacco price index increased by 160 per cent. between May 1979 and October 1987 compared with an increase of 88 per cent. in the all items index over the same period.

Cigarettes

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax in total, including specific tax, ad valorem tax and value added tax, in pence per packet of 20 cigarettes, is levied on (a) a packet of United Kingdom manufactured king size cigarettes retailing at £1·55, and (b) a packet of imported virginia king size cigarettes retailing at £1·23.

Mr. Lilley: The information is as follows:

	Total tax £
(a) King size cigarettes at £1·55 per packet	1·14
(b) King size cigarettes at £1·23 per packet	1·03

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the retail price index of a 30p per 20 increase in duty on cigarettes.

Mr. Lilley: A measure that would increase the excise duty together with consequential VAT by 30p per 20 cigarettes would increase the retail price index by about 0·7 per cent.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department last surveyed the energy efficiency of the lighting of his Department's building; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Brooke: Surveys have been carried out in most of the Treasury buildings this year. There is scope for greater lighting efficiency and cost-effective recommendations are being pursued.

Photocopiers (House of Commons)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who are the major manufacturers or suppliers of photocopying machines and photocopier paper to the House of Commons; and how long they have held their contracts.

Mr. Brooke: The major supplier of photocopying machines to the House of Commons through HMSO is Rank Xerox (UK) Ltd. A few machines have also been supplied by Oce Copiers (UK) Ltd.; Kalle Infotec Ltd. and Minolta (UK) Ltd. They are supplied under hire agreements which enable any machine to be returned or replaced once the initial period of hire—normally two years—is completed.

The main supplier of copier paper is also Rank Xerox (UK) Ltd. under an HMSO contract let in October 1987. Alternative papers are available under other HMSO contracts.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers in manufacturing employment for each year since 1964; and if he will also express these data as a percentage of the total labour force.

Mr. Lee: The figures are given in the following table.

Civilian employed labour force in manufacturing industries[1] in Great Britain

1964	8,386	34

[1] Figures for dates before June 1971 are based on the 1968 Standard Industrial Classification definition of manufacturing; from June 1971 they are based on the 1980 SIC definition.

[2] Estimates of the self-employed before 1971 are based on information from censuses of population and exchanges of national insurance cards. Estimates from 1971 are based on censuses of population and the results of labour force surveys. The latest firm estimate is for 1986.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the percentage change in manufacturing employment in each of his Department's administrative regions since 1979; and what information he has on comparable figures in other manufacturing countries.

Mr. Lee: Between June 1979 and June 1987 (the latest date for which comparable figures are available) the percentage changes in the numbers of employees in employment in the manufacturing industries of the English standard regions are as follows:

	Percentage change
South East	−27
East Anglia	—
South West	−16
West Midlands	−29
East Midlands	−19
Yorkshire and Humberside	−36
North West	−37
North	−35

Some of the decrease in the numbers of employees in employment in manufacturing in recent years will be the result of the reclassification of jobs such as industrial cleaning, computer services and road haulage, previously done by manufacturers' own employees and now done by subcontractors. This developing feature of our economy has the effect of exaggerating the extent of the move from manufacturing to service sector employment.

International comparison of labour market statistics should be treated with caution as it is difficult to obtain data for different countries on a consistent basis. This difficulty increases if regional statistics are to be compared between countries. However, the Eurostat publications "Yearbooks of Regional Statistics" give some information on regional manufacturing employment in European Community countries; copies are available in the Library.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage change there has been in unemployment in each of his Department's administrative regions over the last (a) five, (b) four, (c) three and (d) two years.

Mr. Lee: The following information is available from the Library. The table shows, in percentage terms, the change in the numbers of unemployed claimants, adjusted for discontinuity and seasonality, in each standard economic planning region of the United Kingdom, over the periods requested by October 1987. The adjustments are not made for those of my Department's administrative regions which differ from standard economic planning regions.

YTS (Castleford)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the percentage of YTS leavers in the Castleford travel-to-work area going into full-time paid employment within one month of leaving the scheme for each year for which records are available; and what proportion obtained paid work in the section in which they were trained.

Mr. Cope: The Manpower Services Commission has since April 1985 conducted regular follow-up surveys of all YTS trainees three months after they have left their scheme. Of those who left schemes in the local authority district of Wakefield between April 1985 and March 1986, 52 per cent. found full-time paid employment and 47 per cent. of these were employed in their training occupation.

Of those who left schemes in the district between April 1986 and May 1987, 49 per cent. found full-time paid employment and 35 per cent. of these were employed in their training occupation.

Discrimination

Mrs. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what evidence he has on discrimination against the employment of persons over the age of 40 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: My Department has not undertaken any recent research on this subject. However, the age of applicants can, in certain circumstances have a bearing on their suitability for a job, but we believe that the employer is normally in the best position to make judgments of this nature.

Union Day

Mr. Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will introduce legislation to rename the spring bank holiday "Union Day"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government are currently reviewing the whole question of the early spring bank holiday; no decision has yet been taken.

Homeless Persons

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to monitor the health and safety standards of hotels used for housing homeless persons.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have been asked to reply.

Local authorities have the responsibility to ensure that hotels used for housing homeless persons are satisfactory. They have extensive powers to do so. I am, however, looking at current practice to see whether further advice to local authorities may be necessary.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Lambeth Palace

Mr. William Powell (Corby): To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, what is the total number of people employed at Lambeth palace for whose wages and salaries the Church Commissioners are responsible; and what was the total on 1 January in each year since 1970.

Mr. Alison: The total number of people employed at Lambeth palace and paid by the commissioners are as follows:

	Total
1980	40
1981	43
1982	42
1983	43
1984	46
1985	44
1986	46
1987	43

These include the Archbishop's personal staff, the staff of the Lambeth library and the staff engaged in the maintenance of this historic building.

I regret that to prepare figures prior to 1980 would cause a disproportionate expense.

THE ARTS

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) if he will list the national museums and galleries and their outstations which (i) charge for admission or (ii) seek a voluntary donation; and how much they charge: (a) adults, (b) children and (c) other concessionaries;

(2) whether he will publish (a) the attendance figures for each national museum, including their outstations, which operate: (i) admission charges or (ii) voluntary donations for every year since they were introduced and for the year preceding their introduction and (b) the cash figures for income generated by charges or donations for each of the above periods;

(3) if he will publish (a) total income and (b) total expenditure represented by admission charges or voluntary donations for each national museum in the most recent years.

Mr. Luce: It is for the trustees of each national museum and gallery to decide whether it would be appropriate to their particular institution to charge for admission or to seek voluntary donations from visitors and, if so, to determine the level of charges. The operation and monitoring of any such schemes are also matters for the trustees.

The information requested is not readily available, but I will write to the hon. Member.

PRIME MINISTER

Disarmament

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what is her estimate of the proportion of the United State's and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics' submarine-launched ballistic missile warheads which the United Kingdom's Trident warheads will represent in the event of the successful conclusion of the 50 per cent.. reductions currently being negotiated in the strategic arms reduction talks.

The Prime Minister: Despite agreement in principle by the United States and Soviet Union to cut strategic forces by 50 per cent. sublimits on different categories of warheads have not yet been agreed. It is therefore not possible to estimate the proportion of United States or Soviet submarine-launched ballistic missile warheads which would be represented by the United Kingdom Trident force.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what are the implications for the maintenance of the United Kingdom's nuclear defence capabilities of a comprehensive test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: A comprehensive test ban treaty is a long term goal. For the foreseeable future, the security of this country will depend on deterrence based in part on the possession of nuclear weapons and, in these circumstances, we shall continue to conduct the number of tests necessary to maintain the effectiveness of our nuclear capabilities.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply, Official Report, 3 November, column 625, what figure for reductions in the Soviet and United States strategic arsenals she has in mind as being sufficiently substantial to warrant reductions in Britain's nuclear arsenal.

The Prime Minister: We have never specified an exact figure for reductions in the superpowers arsenals. The United Kingdom deterrent in any case represents an extremely small percentage of each superpower's arsenal.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her reply, Official Report, 3 November, column 625, whether she will list the outstanding problems upon which progress has to be made before Her Majesty's Government would be willing to open negotiations on a comprehensive test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: Lack of adequate verification remains a key obstacle to a comprehensive test ban treaty. The cessation of nuclear testing cannot be divorced from the wider arms control process and the attitudes of other states.

Official Secrets Act

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Prime Minister, if, pursuant to her oral answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 555, she will specify those aspects of the proposals by the hon. Member for Aldridge-Brownhills for reform of the Official Secrets Act which do not meet her criteria for legislation to replace section 2 of that Act, namely, effectiveness, enforceability and reasonableness; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In the answer to which my hon. Friend refers, I said that the Government have work in hand to find provisions to replace section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911. If in the light of that work we decide to bring forward further proposals for reform, we shall announce our intentions. At this stage, while the work continues, it would not be sensible to comment on detailed issues.

WALES

Local Authority Capital Expenditure

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will make known his plans for local authority capital expenditure for 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: Following the autumn review of public expenditure I have decided to increase total gross provision for local authority spending in 1988-89 in Wales to £416 million. This is £15 million (3·7 per cent.) more than the comparable provision predicted for 1988-89 in last year's public expenditure round, an increase of £5·5 million (1·4 per cent.) over 1987-88 and an increase in real terms of 16 per cent. since the present capital control system was introduced in 1981-82.

My decisions for 1988-89 indicate my priorities for expenditure on services including increases in gross provision for housing (7 per cent.) education (10 per cent.) and the urban programme (15 per cent.)

The increased provision for housing has been set aside for use to encourage local authorities in the cost-effective programmes of enveloping and block repair and to continue the priority estates programme and also to enable local authorities and housing associations to carry forward housing projects for special initiatives in the valleys.

Allowance has also been made in the urban programme for special valleys projects. I shall be announcing my policies for dealing with the special problems in the valleys early in the new year.

In further increasing the provision for education I am recognising the need to improve the fabric of school buildings and also to invest in schools rationalisation projects which will release revenue resources for use elsewhere in the education service.

Local authorities are being notified today of their individual allocations on both housing and non-housing services including major road schemes (£39 million) and projects of regional or national importance or special projects (£10 million). The overall total for allocations is £338 million.

Details of the allocations for individual authorities have been placed in the Library. Allocations for schemes under the urban programme, totalling £29·5 million, will be announced shortly.

Medical Services

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what are the in-patient facilities for geriatric patients (a) in south Clwyd and (b) in the immediate vicinity of Llanrhaeadr ym Mochnant;

(2) what community diabetic services, domiciliary nursing services and domiciliary chiropody services there are in (a) the Llanrhaeadr ym Mochnant area and (b) Clwyd as a whole.

Mr. Grist: These are matters of operational policy for Clwyd health authority and I suggest that the hon. Gentleman writes to the district general manager.

Sheep Variable Premium

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has received any representations from Welsh farmers regarding the future of the sheep variable premium; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have received many representations from the industry in Wales regarding the future of the sheep variable premium scheme. This is being considered as part of the EC review of the sheepmeat regime on which negotiations are continuing.

Agricultural Land (Wales)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to bring forward detailed proposals for the set aside of agricultural land in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: At the meeting of the Council of Agriculture Ministers on 16-18 November, the Commission proposed that the European Community extensification scheme, which already offers an opportunity to introduce incentives to farmers to set aside land used for cereals production, should be strengthened and extended to cover all arable land. Discussion on this is proceeding.

Sheep and Goat Meat

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total production of sheep and goat meat, in tonnes, in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker: Total estimated production of sheepmeat in Wales in each full year since 1979 is as follows:

Year	Tonnes
1979	47,802
1980	49,734
1981	50,910
1982	53,281
1983	55,531
1984	60,873
1985	61,407
1986	62,860

Figures on the production of goat meat in Wales are not available.

Secondary Legislation

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those items of secondary legislation made by him during the present parliamentary Session.

Mr. Peter Walker: Those statutory instruments solely made by me during the present parliamentary Session are as follows:

Mancot Community Hospital, Clwyd

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to improve the staffing of the physiotherapy department at Mancot Community hospital, Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The determination of appropriate staffing levels is an operational matter for the individual health authority concerned.

Eye Tests and Dental Examinations

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) eye tests and (b) dental examinations took place in Wales in each of the years 1980 to 1986 by area health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The numbers of eye tests and dental examinations carried out by district health authorities in Wales in each of the years 1980 to 1986 are given in the following table.

In addition the number of eye tests carried out by the general ophthalmic service in Wales and the number of dental examinations carried out by the general dental service are presented in the following table. However, disaggregated information for these services to district health authority level could not be provided in respect of the eye tests without disproportionate cost and is not available centrally in respect of dental examinations.

Nurses (Radio Communication)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the cost of providing in each of the area health authorities of Wales (a): (i) two-way radios or (ii) radio pagers for all nurses making domiciliary home visits and (b) answering machines at all nursing bases, as outlined in Nursing in the Community, Welsh Office, November 1987, paragraph 8.19 (e); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: No estimate has yet been made beyond that set out in paragraph 12.3 of the report.

Japanese Companies

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on what dates negotiations commenced between his Department and the three Japanese companies recently announced by him to be coming to Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Grant negotiations between the three companies concerned and my Department commenced in September and October 1987.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Twinbrook Tenants Association

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the withdrawal of ACE funds from Twinbrook tenants and community association, with specific reference to (a) the association's right to a hearing on the charges made against them, (b) the association's right of reply, (c) the association's right of appeal to an independent authority and (d) the association's right to re-apply for ACE funds.

Mr. Viggers: ACE funding was withdrawn from the association at the direction of the Secretary of State in accordance with the Government's policy as stated in the reply given by the then Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, the right hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd), on 27 June 1985. For security reasons the details of any such case are not disclosed but the association's attention was drawn to the Government's policy. There is no mechanism within the ACE scheme for appeal to an independent authority. However, a change in the circumstances surrounding a case can lead to a review of the decision taken.

Economy

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, what is the annual direct Exchequer subvention to the Northern Ireland economy, indicating the absolute figure, the Northern Ireland contribution and the per capita figure for the population of the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr. Stanley: The latest forecast of the subvention in 1987-88 is £1,569 million and the provisional outturn figure for the subvention in 1986-87 is £1,595 million.

Government expenditure covered from Northern Ireland sources amounted to £2,655 million in 1986-87 and the forecast for 1987-88 is £2,789 million.

The figure for subvention expressed on a per capita basis for the population of the United Kingdom as a whole (not Great Britain) is £28 for both 1986-87 and 1987-88, based on United Kingdom resident population at 30 June 1986.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gow: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he proposes to introduce legislation so that the community charge will apply to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 2 November.

Three-judge Courts

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his estimate of the likely consequences of the introduction of a system of three-judge courts in Northern Ireland; what studies have been carried out of the feasibility of such a scheme; what views have been sought from or expressed by members of the Bar; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 13 November 1987]: The feasibility of introducing three-judge courts was considered by the right hon. Sir George Baker, OBE in his review of the operation of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 (Cmnd. 9222). His report lists the individuals and organisations who submitted written or oral evidence in the course of the review. No other formal study has been made on behalf of the Goverment in recent years, although the Standing Advisory Commission on Human Rights published a report on the composition of the Crown Court in 1986. As I have said on many occasions and recently in an interview on 21 October, following a meeting of the Anglo Irish Intergovernmental Conference, the Government are not presently persuaded of the merits of three-judge courts.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Sheep and Goatmeat

Mr. Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total production of sheep and goatmeat, in tonnes, in England, and in each of the English regions in each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Total estimated production of sheapmeat in England since 1979 has been as follows:

Dressed carcase weight

	Thousand tonnes
1979	136·4
1980	171·6
1981	154·1
1982	155·4
1983	170·9
1984	167·6
1985	180·5
1986	168·1

Note: Figures for sheepmeat production by region in England are not readily available and would not, in any event, reflect flock sizes or lamb output in those regions. No records are kept on goatmeat production.

Environmentally Sensitive Areas

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he hopes to introduce a second series of environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. Gummer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Minister gave today to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth).

Mr. Forth: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the designation of environmentally sensitive areas.

Mr. MacGregor: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales and I have today laid before Parliament eight orders designating the next set of environmentally sensitive areas. The new areas are Breckland, the Lleyn Peninsula, the North peak, Shropshire borders, seven Suffolk river valleys and the Test valley. The orders also extend the existing environmentally sensitive areas in the Cambrian mountains and the south downs.

In drawing up these orders we have been guided by a wealth of advice from environmental, farming and other bodies. I should like to express our appreciation of the assistance we received. The favourable response which farmers have given to the first set of environmentally sensitive areas encourages us to hope that these new orders will play an important part in reconciling the demands of agriculture and conservation in some of the country's most beautiful regions. We look forward to inviting applications from farmers from January next year.

We are also providing Parliament with maps showing the boundaries of the areas. The orders themselves set out the management prescriptions and rates of payment. As in the earlier areas, farmers who wish to participate will be invited to do so for an initial period of five years.

Export Rebates

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to his statement on 24 November, Official Report, column 228, he will make a statement setting out the mechanism and procedures which would have the effect of reducing the levels and costs of export rebates within a stabiliser system.

Mr. MacGregor: The stabiliser arrangements under discussion in the Council would involve reductions in institutional support prices. For products in surplus this should lead to reductions in Community market prices. Export refunds are paid to bridge the gap between Community and world prices, and if Community prices are reduced the rates of export refunds would also be reduced.

Butter

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the United Kingdom accepted responsibility for the cost of disposing of its butter intervention stocks; and what has been the amount sold and the cost involved since that date.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The United Kingdom has accepted no such responsibility. The normal arrangement is that the cost of purchasing intervention products is met by the member state, and the difference between this cost and the proceeds of disposal is reimbursed by the Community when disposal occurs. In March 1987 the Council agreed that for butter disposed of under certain measures since 1 December 1986, this reimbursement would be made in instalments over four years from 1989. A total of 97,190 tonnes of butter had been released under these arrangements up to 31 October 1987. Member states receive payments from Community funds to compensate for the cost of financing deferred repayment. The United Kingdom has so far received £5,122,000.

Cereals

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the maximum price reduction permitted under the Commission's stabiliser plans for cereals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Commission has proposed that a maximum guaranteed quantity for cereals should be introduced, and that if production in a year should exceed that quantity corrective measures should be taken. These could include a reduction in intervention prices, an increase in the co-responsibility levy, a reduction in the period during which intervention would be available or a combination of these measures. The Commission has not been prepared to indicate in advance precisely what action it would take in a given situation, but it has proposed that adjustments to prices and the co-responsibility levy should be limited to 5 per cent. in the first year of the new system and 7½ per cent. thereafter.

Fruit and Crop Growers

Mr. Speed: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has now completed his assessment of what aid he can give hard fruit growers, crop growers and others affected by the recent storms in southern and eastern England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 27 November 1987]: Since the occurence of the storm of 15/16 October I have been involved in assessing the extent and nature of the damage on the basis of information from ministerial visits, from the industry and from official sources. Following this assessment we have decided to introduce special storm damage compensation arrangements to help meet the cost of some of the destruction wrought by the storm of 15/16 October. These will apply to two areas where insurance is not normal commercial practice. First, for orchards I am introducing a flat rate payment of £2 per tree for the replacement of certified stock or or its imported equivalent of any trees in commercial orchards which were destroyed or severely damaged in the storm. Because of the possible shortage of nursery stock, growers will be allowed until 31 March 1990 to complete work. Second, I can now confirm, further to my statement of 27 October, that grant rates of 60 per cent. will be offered for the replacement of storm-damaged hedges, windbreaks and traditional stone walls. Grants will also be available for replacement of shelter belts. Where at least 50 per cent. of the trees in the shelter belts are broadleaved grant will be at 60 per cent. in other cases grant of 30 per cent. will be available. Where individual trees in a shelter are being replaced the grant will be determined by the nature of the trees. Farmers and growers will have until 31 March 1989 to complete work and submit claims.

For this second category I initially explored the possibility of special rates of grant under the agricultural improvement scheme. However, I have now chosen instead to make arrangements for both this sector and for orchards in the form of a separate storm damage recovery scheme. This will give a flexibility which will benefit recipients in a number of ways. For instance, eligibility for aid will not be affected by grant already received, nor by the size of the enterprise, nor by the application of investment ceilings. Moreover, certain restrictions of coverage — such as the requirement to plant only particular varieties of orchard trees—can be waived in a separate scheme. Finally, it enables farmers and growers to concentrate on the urgent question of straightforward replacement of damaged items without the complications of meeting general farm improvement criteria.

Prior notification of intended works will need to be given by 31 March 1988. Copies of associated documentation will be made available shortly in the Library of the House. Approval for these arrangements will be sought in a Supplementary Supply Estimate for class IV, vote 3 and will rest solely on the authority of the Estimate and the Appropriation Act.

Third, in the glasshouse sector I recognise that growers who have a plan currently in force under the AIS scheme may face problems meeting the closing date of 30 November 1988 because of setbacks caused by the storm and lack of availability of materials and labour. I am therefore proposing to extend the date of submission of grant claims for those with existing plans for six months to the end of May 1989.

I recognise also that as a result of the storm damage holders of agriculture improvement plans will be unable to continue with their investment programmes in the form in which they were originally approved. I have therefore issued instructions to ensure that the rules can be administered flexibly in these cases in recognition of the force majeure circumstances.

I have already made it clear that insurance in the glasshouse sector is the normal rule, and there is no way in which the Government can seek to make equal those who have not insured with those who have done so. I would, however, draw growers' attention to the favourable rates of aid available for heated glasshouse replacement under the agriculture improvement scheme. Growers will be aware that these grants would have been expected to fall back after 30 November 1988, when the derogation permitting the current favourable arrangements expires, to the standard 25 per cent. and 15 per cent. rates within a ceiling of £50,000. I have decided instead to fix rates for replacing heated glasshouses at 45 per cent. and 35 per cent. within a ceiling of £74,000. These arrangements, which will apply initially for a year, are at the highest levels currently permitted under EC Regulation 797/85. Growers who as a result of the storm need to undertake extra works, including site clearance as well as rebuilding, for which they could not have planned stand to derive considerable benefits from these adjustments.

I am very much aware of the difficulties that many have faced as a result of the storm. These measures, which are designed particularly to cover areas where insurance is not practicable will be of real benefit to those worst affected. I would like to express my admiration, and that of my colleagues, for the resilience and industry they are displaying in surmounting these difficult circumstances.

Pollution

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will outline his reasons for not supporting the Nordic proposal, tabled at the Oslo Commission meeting in June, which called for an end to the dumping at sea of industrial waste and sewage sludge by 31 December 1991.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to prohibit the dumping of sewage sludge and industrial waste into the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: The United Kingdom was one of four Oslo Commission countries which were not satisfied that the Nordic proposal took adequate account of the available scientific evidence which shows that the sea dumping of sewage sludge and certain industrial wastes causes no environmental harm and can be preferable to other disposal methods.

North sea Ministers agreed at the international conference in London on 24-25 November that sea disposal of harmful industrial wastes should be banned from the end of 1989 but that dumping may continue where the materials concerned are inert or can be shown not to harm the marine environment. They also agreed that sea disposal of sewage sludge may continue provided the total amount of contaminants it contains does not exceed present levels.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline his reasons for not supporting the Nordic proposal, tabled at the Oslo Commission meeting in June, which called for an end to the incineration at sea of industrial waste by 31 December 1991.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: The United Kingdom has a major concern in the protection of the environment and it therefore was one of seven Oslo Commission countries which were not satisfied that a termination date of 1991 would allow sufficient time for the development of environmentally acceptable land-based alternatives to marine incineration.

North sea Ministers, including the Nordic countries, agreed at the international conference on 24-25 November that this practice should be terminated by the end of 1994.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what specific measures he is proposing to be introduced following the inter-governmental conference on the protection of the North sea in order to reduce pollution.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: My responsibilities extend to controls over the dumping and incineration of wastes at sea and, jointly with Environment Ministers, to authorisation of radioactive waste disposal from major nuclear sites. The ministerial declaration agreed by North sea Ministers on 24-25 November, requires all North sea states to:

(i) phase out the dumping of industrial wastes in the North sea by 31 December 1989 except where materials involved are inert or can be shown to cause no harm in the marine environment;

(ii) strictly adhere to Oslo Commission guidelines in order to prevent dumping of contaminated dredged material;

(iii) reduce contamination of sewage sludges with harmful materials and ensure that the quantities of such material reaching the sea in sludge do not exceed 1987 levels;

(iv) minimise or substantially reduce the use of marine incineration by 1 January 1991, and phase out such operations by 31 December 1994;

(v) apply best available technology to minimise any pollution caused by radioactive discharges from nuclear installations;

(vi) provide that the design and construction of repositories for radioactive waste disposal should aim to preclude pollution of the North sea and interference with legitimate uses of the sea.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what arrangements he has for the monitoring and assessment of the dumping of sewage sludge on benthic organisms; how close to the dumping sites; and how frequently the monitoring takes place.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: Scientists from this Department carry out sampling of benthos at sewage sludge disposal sites on an annual or two-yearly basis depending on the scientific advice as to the most effective regime for each site. Samples are taken both at the site and at distances of up to several kilometres.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what monitoring arrangements are undertaken in relation to the issuing of licences for the dumping of industrial waste material and sewage sludge into the North sea; how many licences have been issued and to whom in each of the past six years; and how many licencees have been (a) proceeded against and (b) convicted for the contravention of dumping regulations in each of the past five years.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: Monitoring checks, often unannounced, are carried out of licensed disposal operations from the point of production to deposit in the sea, and conditions in and around the disposal sites are also regularly monitored.

The number of licences issued for the deposit of industrial waste material and sewage sludge into the North sea were:

	Industrial waste	Sewage sludge
1982	42	19
1983	36	17
1984	30	20
1985	28	18
1986	22	10
[1]1987	18	9

[1] To date.

Details of licence holders were not made publicly available before 1986. I will write to the hon. Gentleman with details of the holders of licences issued in 1986 and 1987, which are available in my Department for inspection.

No licencees have been proceeded against over the past five years, though cautions have been issued in respect of minor infringements from time to time.

Trawlers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all prosecutions initiated by his Department since 1 January 1985 in respect of trawlers operated by Cmaine Ltd., together with the results of the hearings.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 26 November 1987]: The information requested is as follows:

Year of Prosecution	Vessel	Nature of Offence	Result

Bass

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he expects to take a decision on the proposed minimum landing size for bass;

(2) what consultations he will have with commercial fishermen about any possible loss of inshore fishing grounds following a decision on minimum landing size for bass;

(3) what mesh size he proposes to introduce for sea bass.

Mr. Gummer [holding answers 26 November 1987]: I expect to announce before long specific proposals for the conservation and management of the bass fishery which will embrace the questions of minimum landing size for bass and minimum mesh sizes for gill and similar nets. We shall give fishermen and other interested parties the opportunity to present their views on the proposals before final decisions are taken.

Food Aid

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will devise ways to distribute the European Economic Community butter and beef surpluses to pensioners and the unemployed from post offices, leaving voluntary agencies to distribute these surpluses to the disabled and housebound, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 26 November 1987]: The European Commision has proposed to the Council a permanent scheme for the distribution of food from intervention stocks to the most needy. The Council has not yet taken a decision and so I am not yet able to go into further detail.

Public Rights of Way

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, as part of his farm and countryside initiative, he will introduce legislation to empower persons or bodies other than the relevant highway authority, land owner or occupier to carry out work on public rights of way; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 27 November 1987]: Legislation on highways is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. However, under the farm and countryside initiative I have already sponsored several projects involving long-term unemployed people maintaining and improving public rights of way on private land.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he has taken, or will be taking, to monitor the effectiveness of the code of practice "Ploughing and Rights of Way" published by his Department in July 1986 and to ensure that its provisions are complied with by farmers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 27 November 1987]: The Countryside Commission and the Ramblers' Association are monitoring the effects of the ploughing code. ADAS staff in this field take account of its case provisions when advising farmers.

ENVIRONMENT

Pollution

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress made at the recent second international conference on the North sea towards reducing pollution of the North sea.

Mr. Nicholas Ridley: The second international conference on the protection of the North sea, which I chaired on 24 and 25 November, achieved unanimous agreement on a wide range of positive and realistic measures to protect the North sea from pollution. I am grateful for the co-operative and constructive attitude shown by all the delegations to the Conference.

The most important measures include:

More stringent controls on the inputs of dangerous substances into rivers, one of the major sources of such inputs;

Reductions of inputs of nutrients into affected areas;

Assessment of the effects of atmospheric pollution of the North sea and reduction of atmospheric emissions of pollutants where possible;

An end to the dumping in the North sea of harmful industrial wastes, by the end of 1989;

A ceiling, at 1987 levels, on dangerous contaminants in sewage sludge disposed of in the North sea;

Reducing the use of incineration of wastes at sea by 65 per cent. by 1 January 1991, and seeking the agreement of the Oslo convention to phasing out this practice by 31 December 1994;

Recommending to the International Maritime Organisation that the North sea be declared a Special Area under Annex V (Garbage) of the MARPOL 73/78 convention (this would effectively prohibit the dumping of garbage from ships anywhere in the North sea;

Applying the best available technology to minimise pollution from radioactive discharges;

Setting up a task force to ensure better co-ordination of North sea research and monitoring (the United Kingdom is to host the inaugural meeting in early 1988);

Enhanced co-operation on airborne surveillance of off shore operations and of shipping;

Recognition of the special needs of the Wadden sea.

It was also agreed to hold a third conference, in The Netherlands, in early 1990, to review progress.

I am arranging for copies of the ministerial declaration to be placed in the Library of the House.

Mobile Homes

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in view of the increasing value of mobile homes, he will review the percentage commission permitted to owners of sites where a mobile home is sold.

Mrs. Roe: The present maximum rate of commission of 10 per cent., set by the Mobile Homes (Commission) Order 1983, compares with the previous limit of 15 per cent. under the Mobile Homes Act 1975. We consulted widely before fixing the present maximum and we have no plans to amend it.

Rating Reform

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the introduction of the community charge and unified business rate will affect owner-occupiers of commercially rated properties such as small hotels and guest houses.

Mr. Howard: Those for whom a hotel is their main residence will be liable for a community charge and eligible for rebates in the usual way. Hotels and guest houses which are not predominantly used as main residences will be subject to non-domestic rates like other business premises. Where a part of a hotel is used as a main residence, non-domestic rates will be payable only in respect of the remaining part.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report figures on the scale of inter-regional transfers through resource equalisation mechanisms for all years 1980-81 to 1987-88, on the same basis as figure 12 on page 31 of Cmnd. 9714.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 17 November 1987]: The information requested is as follows:

£ million

	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88

Greater London	(747)	(825)	(885)	(949)	(1,037)	(789)	(831)

Note. Figures for 1984-85 differ from those shown in Figure 12 of Cmnd. 9714 as a result of later data and a different treatment of grant holdback.

Comparable figures cannot be given for 1980-81 because a different grant system was then in operation.

The figures show one way of assessing the contribution of both the domestic and non-domestic sector to resource equalisation. They are not a guide to the grant effects of replacing domestic rates with the community charge.

Public Buildings (Lighting)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Property Services Agency last surveyed the energy efficiency of the lighting of those public buildings for which the agency is responsible; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency has been carrying through a programme of energy-saving measures in Government buildings since the early 1970s. These have included improvements to lighting installations by installing more efficient lighting fittings and the provision of photo-electric, occupancy and time controls where appropriate. Departments have also been encouraged to conserve lighting energy by good housekeeping.

More recently, the Property Services Agency and the Ministry of Defence has embarked on a programme of energy surveys of all the main Defence sites. These are identifying opportunities for improving energy efficiency including lighting installations. On the Government's Civil Estate a recently formed panel of departmental energy managers is considering to what extent energy surveys would be worthwhile for the Civil Estate.

Chlorofluorocarbons and Halons

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 28 October, Official Report, column 277, what action Her Majesty's Government are taking to implement the Montreal protocol to halve the consumption of chlorofluorocarbons by 1999, and to hold the consumption of halons at 1986 levels.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to the answer I gave on 29 October to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) at column 436.

Listed Buildings

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will now review the arrangements under which compensation payments, due when consent is refused by his Department in respect of listed buildings, are required to be paid by the relevant local authority.

Mr. Waldegrave: The only provision for compensation when listed building consent is refused is in section 171 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971 under which compensation may be payable when consent is refused for works which do not require planning permission or which are permitted under a development order. The consultation paper on planning compensation, which my Department issued in April 1986, included a proposal to repeal section 171. We will announce our conclusions following the consultation in due course.

Shared Ownership Schemes

Mr. John Hunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many shared ownership schemes are at present operating within the London borough of Bromley.

Mrs. Roe: I regret that this information is not available. The borough has itself reported no shared ownership sales.

Waste Paper

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has of the total waste value of all the paper supplied to the Palace of Westminster, including Order Papers, Her Majesty's Stationery Office papers and stationery.

Mr. Chope: The Property Services Agency's only involvement is to arrange the removal of waste paper from the Palace of Westminster. The work is carried out under a contract arranged by HMSO at no cost to the agency.

Rotherham Enterprise Zone

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of jobs created in the Rotherham enterprise zone; what proportion of these are full-time; and what proportion are in business not previously based within a five-mile radius.

Mr. Trippier: There were 531 employees in Rotherham enterprise zone at designation. By December 1985 1,100 people were employed; of these, 92 per cent. were full-time employees. More up-to-date information and information concerning previous locations from which firms currently in enterprise zones have operated will be included in the report by consultants, shortly to be published.

Truscon RD27 Houses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now expects to make a decision on the designation of Truscon RD27 houses under the housing defects legislation.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Department is currently pursuing a relevant further point with one of the owners of these properties. We shall reach a decision as soon as we can.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will publish "An Evaluation of The Enterprise Zone Experiment" by PA Cambridge Economic Consultants, received by his Department in July.

Mr. Trippier: This report is to be published soon.

Dog Licences

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the removal of the dog licence.

Mr. Moynihan: Since the publication of the Local Government Bill on 26 June, I and the Department have received some 1,350 letters from hon. Members and others. In addition, the Department has received some 8,500 printed postcards or letters prepared by organisations concerned with dogs. Although the majority of representations support a national campaign to retain the licence, a significant minority are in favour of our proposal to abolish it.

Council Rents (London)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the average rents currently charged to council tenants in each London borough.

Mrs. Roe: Average weekly unrebated rents, net of charges for amenities and rates, for individual London boroughs are published by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy in "Housing Rents Statistics at April 1987" a copy of which is in the Library.

Following are estimates for boroughs which did not respond to that survey, based on other information supplied to my Department.

Estimated average weekly unrebated rents at April 1987

City of London	21·76
Hackney	14·17
Islington	16·22
Lambeth	16·19
Southwark	16·30
Tower Hamlets	18·00
Westminster	25·69

Development Corporations (Budgets)

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the total annual budgets for (a) the London Docklands Development Corporation and (b) the Merseyside Development Corporation in each financial year since their inception; and, of this, what proportion was spent on public relations, marketing and advertising.

Mr. Trippier: The MDC's expenditure for each year since 1981 together with expenditure on publicity and promotion is as follows:

Year	Total expenditure (£ million)	Publicity and promotion (£ million)	Percentage
1981-82	5·032	0·031	1
1982-83	20·769	0·354	2

Year	Total expenditure (£ million)	Publicity and promotion (£ million)	Percentage
1983-84	31·868	0·603	2
1984-85	29·241	0·719	2
1985-86	27·446	0·604	2
1986-87	24·842	0·565	2

Relevant information on the LDDC's expenditure is contained in its annual reports, copies of which are laid before the House.

TRANSPORT

Rolling Stock Procurement Policy

10. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed with the chairman of British Rail its rolling stock procurement policy.

Mr. Channon: The policy of the Railways Board is competitive procurement. This has been agreed with Ministers. Its implementation is a matter for the board.

21. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the policy of his Department in respect of the employment implications of procurement decisions made by British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: Decisions on procurement are for the Railways Board, and any employment implications would be matters for them and the contractors concerned.

34. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed the rolling stock procurement policy of British Rail with its chairman.

47. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has had any discussions with the chairman of British Rail concerning the implications of the board's procurement policy.

50. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has issued any guidance on locomotive procurement policies.

Mr. David Mitchell: The policy of the British Railways Board is competitive procurement. This has been agreed with Ministers. Its implementation is a matter for the board.

British Rail (Catering)

13. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the privatisation of catering on British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: At stations the Railways Board is putting catering sites operated by Travellers Fare out to competitive tender for which Travellers Fare can compete. On trains private sector firms are supplying food for the new modular catering on InterCity. More private trolley services are being introduced on provincial and Network SouthEast services.

National Dock Labour Scheme

14. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effects of the national dock labour scheme on the growth of business in ports of the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since 1967, when the present dock labour scheme was introduced, scheme ports' share of Britain's non-fuel traffic has fallen from 92 per cent. to 70 per cent. It is impossible to gauge the extent to which the scheme contributed to this relative decline.

P and O Ferries

15. Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of P and O Ferries; what matters were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: On 28 October. A variety of matters were discussed.

London Regional Transport

16. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of London Regional Transport; and what was discussed.

Mr. Channon: On 19 November when I discussed with him the disaster at King's Cross Underground station.

Motorway and Trunk Road Construction

17. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current level of investment in motorway and trunk road construction; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Provision to £893 million, about 28 per cent. more in real terms than in 1979-80.

MOT Tests

18. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the procedures for licensing vehicle testing stations for MOT tests.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes, next year.

Road Schemes, London

19. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total value of all costed road schemes currently planned for the Greater London area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: About £1·3 billion.

Driving Test

20. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he now expects to receive the report on the privatisation of the driving test.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 19 November.

BR (Electrification)

22. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next proposes to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss electrification schemes.

Mr. Channon: I will be happy to discuss electrification schemes with the chairman of British Rail whenever he wishes.

Heavy Goods Vehicle Driver Testing

23. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to introduce heavy goods vehicle driver testing facilities on the Isle of Skye; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Long-distance Coaches

24. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate of the number of passengers travelling on long-distance coaches; and how this differs from the 1979 figures.

Mr. David Mitchell: The latest figures published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain" apply to 1984. In that year there were 17 million passenger journeys on express services, compared with 15 million in 1979, an increase of over 13 per cent.

Road Schemes (London)

25. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much capital expenditure his Department has provided for road schemes in London in the last five years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the five years to 31 March 1987, the Department has spent over £210 million on trunk road schemes in London and supported expenditure of over £350 million on schemes promoted by the GLC and the London boroughs.

British Rail Engineering

26. Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the value of non-railway supply orders received by British Rail Engineering Ltd. for each year since 1980; and what has been the value of export rail orders for the same company for each year since 1980.

Mr. David Mitchell: BREL has provided the following figures in £ millions:

	Non-railway equipment orders	Export orders
1980	0·9	0·8
1981	0·4	3·3
1982	0·8	38·2
1983	0·5	20·7
1984	0·1	3·8
1985	0·9	9·5
1986	0·1	6·4

All figures are for calendar years and have been rounded to the nearest £100,000.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Scretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reinvest the money from the sale of British Rail Engineering Ltd. in British Rail.

Mr. David Mitchell: Proceeds of the sale will go directly to the British Railways Board, and will therefore reduce its external financing requirement.

London Transport (Driver-only Buses)

27. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what criteria London Regional Transport decides which bus routes are to go over to driver-only operation.

Mr. David Mitchell: Decisions about the conversion of Bus routes to one-person operation are matters for the management of London Regional Transport and its operating subsidiary, London Buses Ltd. I understand that such decisions are taken within a framework which take into account both the direct financial effects and wider costs and benefits including lesser risk to crew, greater reliability and longer running and boarding times.

M25

28. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the volume of traffic using London's M25 orbital motorway in relation to forecasts; and what plans he has to facilitate traffic flows in the future.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The success of the M25 has meant that it is attracting higher volumes of traffic than forecast. We are determined to ensure that the M25 continues to fulfil its function of keeping through traffic out of London. Work to widen the sections between junctions 11 and 13 will start soon. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State recently announced our intention of widening the section between junctions 15 and 16 and consultants have been appointed. We expect to commission a full review of the M25 to identify potential problem areas shortly.

Drink-Driving Campaigns

29. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the results of anti-drink driving campaigns over the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department has carried out regular anti-drink-drive campaigns since 1976 and has monitored them.

Our surveys over this period, regularly reported in "Annual Road Accidents Great Britain: The Casualty Report", show a greater public awareness of the problem, and a hardening of attitudes against drinking drivers.

The survey of the Department's 1987 summer campaign found that 80 per cent. of men spontaneously recalled the TV advertisements.

Responses to survey questions suggest that the likelihood of someone driving after drinking has been significantly reduced in the last 10 years. 53,000 more roadside breath tests were carried out in 1986 in England and Wales than in 1985—up 20 per cent.—resulting in the detection of 5,000 more drivers over the legal limit —an increase of 5 per cent. In 1986 37 per cent. more drivers and riders involved in injury accidents were breath tested than in 1985. Despite this increase, 5 per cent. fewer failed the test.

Drinking and driving remains our most serious road safety problem. We will continue to make every effort to tackle it.

Road Humps

30. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussion Ministers have had with county surveyors about the use of road humps as a means of reducing accidents and preventing the breaking of road speed restrictions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Lots.

County surveyors were amongst interested organisations consulted prior to the introduction of the new Road

Humps Regulations 1986. A new leaflet has recently been issued giving updated guidance to local authorities. Identification of suitable sites and installation of road humps are matters for local highway authorities.

Long-distance Coaches

31. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest estimate on the number of route miles travelled by long-distance coaches; and how this differs from the 1979 figures.

Mr. David Mitchell: Information on route miles is not available. However, vehicle miles by long distance express coaches increased from 65 million in 1979 to 88 million in 1984, the latest available estimate.

Motorways (Speed Limit Signs)

32. Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to place speed limit signs reading 70 on motorways at appropriate places, and to replace with a 70 sign any existing signs which comprise a black diagonal stripe on a white circle.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are planning an experiment with 70 mph signs on a stretch of motorway. We need to discover whether such signs have a significant effect on vehicle speeds. For the present, the signing system of national speed limits on motorways remains unchanged.

Civil Aviation

33. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to issue a White Paper on civil aviation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to issue another White Paper on civil aviation. The Government's objectives are set out in the 1984 airline competition policy White Paper, Cmnd. 9366.

London (Fare Increases)

35. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the projected fare increases for London in 1988.

Mr. David Mitchell: LRT has announced fare increases for January 1988 averaging 9½ per cent.

Gatwick Airport

36. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many landing slots are currently available at Gatwick and how many are currently used by (a) British Airways, (b) British Caledonian and (c) other airlines.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We understand from the Gatwick scheduling committee that, of a theoretical total number of slots available for aircraft movements, 182,423 were used in the period September 1986-August 1987. These were distributed as shown below.

	Number[2]
British Airways[1]	17,965
British Caledonian[1]	32,345
Other airlines	113,833
Miscellaneous business aviation movements, positioning flights etc.	18,280
Total	182,423

[1] including British Airtours and Cal Air respectively.
[2] Slots allocated for aircraft movements September 1986-August 1987.

Mini Buses

37. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the safety standards applied to mini buses.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: From 1 April 1988 new mini buses will have to comply with requirements contained in schedule 6 of the Road Vehicles (Construction and Use) Regulations 1986. Most new mini buses are already being constructed to these requirements. Older mini buses must comply with specific regulations according to their actual use.

New Roads

38. Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of new (a) motorway and (b) all-purpose trunk road he expects to open in 1987-88.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In 1987-88 we expect to open 80 miles of all-purpose trunk road. No new sections of motorway will be completed this year.

There are over 300 major schemes in the forward programme. These will add 118 miles of new motorway and 950 miles of all-purpose trunk road when complete.

Channel Tunnel

39. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport in what way he plans to liaise with British Rail to ensure that the benefits of the Channel tunnel for both passengers and freight are maximised in the regions of the United Kingdom apart from the south-east of England.

Mr. David Mitchell: Section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act requires British Rail to prepare a plan by 31 December 1989 setting out their proposals for the dispersal of rail traffic through the tunnel. I understand that the board intends to consult widely during the preparation of this plan. I shall be taking an interest in progress in the course of my regular contacts with British Rail.

British Railways Board

40. Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has recently held with the chairman of the British Railways Board; on what matters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The chairman and I meet regularly and discuss a wide range of matters.

M1

41. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether any major road repairs are planned on the M1 between where it ends in London and the Bedfordshire/Buckingham border in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The following major repairs are planned:

Location	Scheme	Expected duration
J4-5	Overlay both carriageways and construct climbing lane. Contraflow.	March-November
J12-13	Central reserve hardening, adjustment of safety fencing. Lane closures (both carriageways).	January-March
J12-13	Overlay northbound carriageway. Contraflow.	June-August

All reasonable measures will be taken to reduce delays to the road user, including the use of lane rental contracts.

Tyre Tread Depth

42. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to revise the present legal requirements on minimum tyre tread depth.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No.

Merchant Fleet

43. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the present size of the British merchant fleet.

Mr. David Mitchell: At 30 September the numbers and deadweight tonnage of British registered merchant vessels 100 gross tonnes and over were as follows:

	Number	Million deadweight tonnes
All British registries	3,170	35·5
of which:-
United Kingdom	2,056	7·9
Crown Dependencies[1]	151	4·0
Overseas Dependent Territories[2]	963	23·6

[1] The Crown Dependencies are the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man.

[2] The Dependent Territories with shipping registers are Anguilla, Bermuda, Cayman Islands, Falkland Islands, Gibraltar, Hong Kong, Montserrat, St. Helena, Turks and Caicos Islands and the British Virgin Islands.

Pollution

44. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many inspectors are employed by his Department on enforcement of the 1973 international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships in British ports and waters for which his Department has responsibility; and how many prosecutions have been brought annually since 1980 under its provisions.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department employs 138 marine surveyors who as part of their duties survey vessels and their equipment to ensure compliance with the 1973 international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships which entered into force in 1983.

Prosecutions are normally brought under the Prevention of Pollution Act. Since 1980 these were as follows:

	Numbers
1980	42
1981	33
1982	39
1983	18
1984	13
1985	10
1986	2

BA-BCal Merger

45. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any recent representations concerning the establishment of a further airline following the Government's acceptance of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's recommendations on the proposed British Airways/British Caledonian merger.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has not received any recent representations about the establishment of a new airline.

Nationalised Industries (Procurement Policies)

46. Ms. Clare Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to encourage nationalised industries to give preference to British companies in their procurement policies.

Mr. David Mitchell: The individual nationalised industries have management responsibility for their purchasing decisions. But their attention has been drawn to the importance the Government attaches to securing value for money in making procurement decisions.

Air Traffic Controllers

48. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many air traffic controllers there were at Gatwick and Heathrow in 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Staffing levels are a matter for the Civil Aviation Authority.

Road Accidents

49. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further plans he has to seek to reduce the numbers of road accidents.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In July this year we published the outcome of a wide-ranging review of road safety—"The Next Steps". A copy was placed in the Library of the House on 8 May. The review confirms that there is no simple formula for reducing the number of road accidents and stresses the need for changes in social attitudes if we are to make our roads significantly safer.

We are presently consulting a wide range of interested organisations about how best to implement the review's recommendations about priorities for action in order to achieve the objective we have set of reducing casualties from about 300,000 a year now to 200,000 a year by the end of the next decade.

To achieve this target we must concentrate on measures which are demonstrably cost-effective, particularly in the fields of road engineering and vehicle safety.

Human error is a main factor in at least 70 per cent. of road accidents. To gain a fuller understanding of driver behaviour we have increased expenditure on research in this field by £600,000 a year. We are also continuing our efforts to improve the quality of road safety education.

The worse example of behavioural failings is the drinking driver and we shall continue to do all we can to tackle this special menace.

Highway Code

51. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to educate all road users on the need to follow the terms of the Highway Code relating to road discipline.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All first applicants for a provisional driving licence automatically receive a copy of the Highway Code. Candidates for a full driving licence have to demonstrate their knowledge of the Highway Code to pass the driving test. In addition, approximately 500,000 Highway Codes are sold each year.

The Department is spending £3¼ million in the current year and we work jointly with local government and the police, ROSPA and other voluntary bodies to improve standards of driving and to promote road safety.

We welcome and co-operate fully with the growing media news and current affairs coverage of the causes of crashes and collisions which lead to over 5,000 deaths and 300,000 injuries each year.

M25 (Motorway Service Area)

52. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make an announcement about the construction of a motorway service area on the M25 at Iver, in Buckinghamshire.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I am still not in a position to make an announcement. I hope to make an announcement soon.

Fares

53. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on fares in public transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: Fares on public transport are a matter for the operators concerned or, in the case of bus services supported by local authorities, for those authorities. The Government's policy is to ensure a competitive environment for these fares decisions.

Motorway Repair Programme

54. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress is being made on the motorway repair programme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Record progress is being made. The Department is on course to renew 84 miles of motorway and 218 miles of other trunk roads this year. We intend to renew over the next three years some 240 miles of motorway and 600 miles of other trunk roads. We plan to eliminate the backlog of capital works by 1992.

London Regional Transport

55. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consultations he initiated prior to his decisions setting new objectives for London Regional Transport, its subsidiary companies and contractors.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend consulted London Regional Transport, as he is required to do under the London Regional Transport Act 1984.

London (Buses)

56. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average age of vehicles currently used in London on (a) London Regional Transport bus routes and (b) contractors' routes.

Mr. David Mitchell: This information is not available. Decisions on the quality and type of vehicles employed on tendered routes are a matter for London Regional Transport and the operator concerned. Decisions on the quality and type of vehicles employed on London Buses Limited routes are a matter for that operator.

Airline Route Competition

57. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his Department's policy towards airline route competition.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The objectives of the Government's airline competition policy are set out in the 1984 White Paper (Cmnd. 9366).

Motorway and Trunk Road Maintenance

58. Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current level of investment in motorway and trunk road maintenance; and what was the comparable figure in 1979.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Provision has been made for £248 million to be spent on capital maintenance in the present financial year. The corresponding figure for 1978-79 was £46 million. This represents an increase in real terms of about two and a half.

Lorries (Spot Checks)

59. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he intends to increase spot checks on lorries entering the United Kingdom prior to cabotage being introduced as a result of European Economic Community competition policy.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Levels of enforcement will be maintained. We do not expect the introduction of cabotage to lead to a large increase in the number of foreign lorries coming to this country.

BR (Catering)

60. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made on the privatisation of catering on British Rail; and what publicity exercises British Rail has engaged in to promote catering services.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to my answer earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett). The board undertakes a wide range of promotional activities for catering services, at stations, on trains and in the media.

Humber Bridge

61. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is prepared to write off part of the accumulated capital debt of the Humber bridge; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I had a meeting recently with representatives of the Humber Bridge Board. They recognised the need to increase revenue by raising tolls, which are now less in real terms than when the bridge opened in 1981. I undertook to consider the board's proposals urgently. Subject to that consideration, the Government would be prepared to write off so much of the debt as could not be recovered by tolls at a realistic level.

East Coast Sleeper Service

62. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about British Rail's proposal to withdraw the east coast sleeper service.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have received seven representations protesting about BR's decision; one from a councillor in Berwick upon Tweed, four from hon. Members, one from a member of the Upper House, and one from the Scottish Association for Public Transport.

West Yorkshire Passenger Transport Authority

63. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the West Yorkshire passenger transport authority concerning the budget for 1988-89.

Mr. David Mitchell: The authority has applied to the Secretary of State for redetermination of its 1988-89 expenditure level from £57 million to £69·8 million. I met representatives of the PTA on 26 November.

BA/BCal (Merger)

Mr. Ashby: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will take to prevent British Airways breaking undertakings given to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in respect of its proposed purchase of British Caledonian.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: If the merger goes ahead, the Government expect British Airways' proposals to be implemented in full, and the chairman of the Civil Aviation Authority has undertaken to report to me a year later about this. We are satisfied that appropriate powers are available to my right hon. and noble Friends the Secretaries of State for Trade and Industry, and Transport, and the chairman of the CAA in the event that BA did not implement its proposals in full.

Lorries

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the numbers of foreign lorries entering the United Kingdom which are overloaded.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) earlier today.

Dartford Tunnel

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his Department's estimate of the safe life of the Dartford tunnel; whether the Essex and Kent county councils have formally transferred responsibility to his Department; and what is the programme for the building of the new four-lane bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The two tunnels under the Thames at Dartford were completed in 1963 and 1980. There are no reason why they should not survive as engineering structures indefinitely, provided that they continue to receive appropriate maintenance.

The Dartford-Thurlock Crossing Bill, currently before the House, would, if approved by Parliament, transfer the tunnels to the Secretary of State on a date to be appointed by him.

The Bill would also authorise the construction of the new four-lane bridge. It would be built by Dartford River Crossing Ltd., which is contracted to design, build and finance the bridge and operate the whole crossing, taking tolls for a maximum of 20 years or until the company has recovered its costs, whichever comes first.

If the Bill is not substantially amended so as to require further design work, the company proposes to begin construction about one month after Royal Assent. Construction is expected to take 2½ years.

Ship-to-shore Radio

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the cost of the annual subsidy paid to British Telecom to finance ship-to-shore radio stations; what has been the cost per annum for the last five years; and if he will break down the cost by reference to (a) MF, (b) VHF, (c) HF, (d) NAVTEX and (e) weather broadcasts.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Department pays no annual subsidy to British Telecom. Payments for various categories of broadcast messages over the past five years are summarised in the following table, but the information is not available in precisely the form requested:

	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
NAVTEX	Nil	53	4	Nil	[1]114
Weather and Gales	253	268	240	403	468
Distress Watch and other broadcasts	1,338	1,574	1,554	1,777	2,170

[1] Includes payments in respect of preceding years.

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of the doors of underground trains opening while the train is in motion have been reported in each of the past five years: (a) on the central line and (b) on all the Underground network; what steps London Regional Transport has taken to prevent this occurring; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: During the period 1983 to 1986 no incidents of this kind were reported. So far during 1987 the railway inspectorate has been notified of seven such incidents, two of them on the central line. Since none of the incidents involved injury to persons they were not strictly reportable under the legislation. The 1987 reports prompted discussion earlier in the year between the inspectorate and London Underground Ltd. LUL has been asked to examine the problem, to report on its findings and in doing so to consider what reasonable and practicable modifications to the rolling stock might be introduced such as to prevent errors by train crews, the only identified cause of the reported incidents, from causing train doors to open during running.

Vehicle Identification Numbers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to whether Japanese law requires that the type-face used to mark vehicle identification numbers remains unchanged for all the cars imported into Japan of a particular model; and if he has any plans to introduce similar requirements in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Such information is not readily available. In the United Kingdom a vehicle identification number has been required on all cars first registered since 1980. The size and type of character are prescribed in Community Directives 76/114/EEC and 78/507/EEC.

British Rail Engineering Ltd.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether the sale of British Rail Engineering Ltd. will include the engineering workshops on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The engineering workshops on the Isle of Wight are part of BR's maintenance depot network and are not part of BREL.

Rail Network (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make it his policy to privatise British Rail's network on the Isle of Wight.

Mr. David Mitchell: Our policy is for BR to increase the role of the private sector in the provision of services to the railway. BR has put no plans to me for privatising its line on the Isle of Wight.

Rapid Transit System (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the views unanimously agreed by the Greater Manchester passenger transport authority on the funding of the light rapid transit system for Manchester; what action he is taking; and when he expects to advise the House of his decision.

Mr. David Mitchell: Yes. I am considering the authority's views together with advice that I have received from my financial advisers about possible private sector financial participation in the proposed system. We intend to advise the House of our decision as soon as possible.

Commercial Vehicles (Central London)

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if, as an experiment during the Christmas shopping period, he will take action to keep commercial vehicles out of roads in central London for which he has responsibility between the hours of 11 am and 5 pm; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will take action to keep commerical vehicles out of roads in central London for which he has responsibility between the hours of 11 am and 5 pm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no trunk roads, for which my right hon. Friend is responsible in the central London area.

Responsibility for traffic management initiatives on local roads in the central London area rests with the London boroughs as the relevant highway authorities. The time required for statutory processes associated with the powers available for highway authorities to restrict the classes of traffic using roads, rules out local highway authorities introducing any new lorry bans on their roads before Christmas.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce a red line system to supplement the yellow line system of parking restrictions, the former to apply to key routes through central London for which he is responsible with a heavy fine payable by drivers who fail to observe these restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Good compliance with parking regulation depends on a proper understanding of the system and on effective enforcement. The present system of road signs and yellow lines on roads and kerbs already applies to all routes through Central London.

I do not consider that a further system of road signs and markings would of itself lead to better understanding or enforcement.

Enforcement is becoming more effective.

Vale of Rheidol Railway Line

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, in the light of the proposed privatisation of the Vale of Rheidol line, he will give details of the amount spent in (a) capital and (b) revenue account on the line in the last year.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information is not readily available. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman with the details in due course.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much local highway authority expenditure he intends to accept for transport supplementary grant in 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have decided to accept £382 million of local authority highway expenditure for transport supplementary grant in 1988-89. Grant will be paid on this expenditure at a flat rate of 50 per cent. The total of £191 million TSG is more than 6 per cent. higher than for 1987-88.

A total of 67 new major—that is, costing over £1 million—schemes will be supported through TSG for the first time. Among these are the Dartford northern bypass; Lower road widening, Southwark; Park road relief road, Liverpool; a further stage of the Avon ring road; and other important improvements in both urban and rural areas.

More than 260 other major schemes will continue to receive TSG support. Many of these schemes are already under construction or are due to start in the current financial year. With TSG support to their road programmes, local authorities have reported completion of 49 schemes costing £145 million in 1986-87 and a start of works on 57 schemes costing £197 million. During 1987-88, they plan to complete a further 66 schemes costing £249 million and start 72 costing £372 million.

In deciding the distribution of transport supplementary grant for 1988-89, I have considered carefully the transport policies and programmes submitted by each local highway authority, and have looked at the extent to which authorities' programmes relate to roads of more than local importance. Many local authority roads—such as major urban roads and roads on the primary route network—carry significant amounts of longer-distance through traffic, and thus complement the trunk road network. Improvements to such roads are important locally because they save lives, reduce congestion and relieve communities from the effects of through traffic. They are also of national benefit by aiding the efficient flow of goods, people and services. TSG reflects the national taxpayers' interest in helping local authorities to improve these roads.

Many smaller schemes on these heavily trafficked roads produce very significant accident savings and other benefits. I have therefore taken into account almost £59 million of expenditure on minor (under £1 million) schemes for grant in 1988-89, an increase of 7·3 per cent. on 1987-88.

The amount of expenditure accepted for TSG and the amount of grant for each local highway authority is set out in the table below. Councils are being informed individually today of their own figures.

Tyres (Tread Depth)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has done on the relative safety and accident incidence of tyre tread depth of (a) 1 mm across the whole width of the tyre, (b) 1 mm across 75 per cent. of the tyre, (c) 1·6 mm across the whole width of the tyre and (d) 2 mm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 27 November 1987]: The Transport and Road Research Laboratory has done research in this area for many years. TRRL Supplementary Report 672, published in 1981, describes work on braking force coefficients of worn tyres.

The results of work in 1985 on the effect of tread depth on wet cornering force coefficients of car tyres, was circulated to all organisations consulted as part of the review of the tyre tread depth regulations in 1986.

A copy of the working paper is being placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Weapons (NATO)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to declassify and publish such information in the Annual Statement on the Defence Estimates as to enable accurate estimates to be made of the number and power of nuclear weapons deployed with NATO each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: No.

Homeless Families

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many houses and flats his Department owns in the Woolwich area; how many of these were unoccupied at the most recent convenient date; and how many have been made available to the London Borough of Greenwich for the temporary housing of homeless families.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence owns a total of 781 houses and flats in the Woolwich area. As at 26 November 1987, 21 houses were leased to the London Borough of Greenwich and 136 were vacant for the following reasons:

	Number
Undergoing Works Services	21
Allotted to servicemen	53
Awaiting Works Services	13
Awaiting furnishing	18
Otherwise vacant	31
Total	136

Air Letters

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the postal charges on the family only air letters available for service personnel in the Falkland Islands and on Ascension Island.

Mr. Freeman: No charges are payable by service men or their families for Forces air mail letters sent to or from the Falkland Islands or Ascension Island.

Jet Provost Aircraft

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Shorts of Belfast are contributing to the cost of maintaining the Royal Air Force's Jet Provost aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Jet Provost aircraft are still in Royal Air Force service.

Mr. Freeman: The RAF at present has a fleet of 152 Jet Provosts.

Shorts Tucano

Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Shorts of Belfast are paying any penalties to his Department for delays on delivery of the Shorts Tucano; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are no fixed penalties for late deliveries, but because Shorts are not paid until the aircraft is delivered they have every incentive to reduce delays to a minimum.

Radioactive Material

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many incidents involving nuclear warheads, in which the accidental discharge of radioactive material was narrowly averted, have occurred in the last 10 years.

Mr. Freeman: There have been no such incidents involving United Kingdom nuclear weapons or United States nuclear weapons in the United Kingdom in the last 10 years.

Body Scanning (Rosyth)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Rosyth dockyard employees have invoked their statutory right for whole-body scanning.

Mr. Sainsbury: Rosyth dockyard employees have no statutory right for whole body scanning. Prior to the introduction of commercial management, however, an agreement was reached with dockyard trade unions and staff associations that no person wishing to undergo whole body scanning would be refused that facility unreasonably. Following a pilot study in 1980-81 and up to 6 April 1987, a total of 81 Rosyth dockyard employees have undergone whole-body scanning, which was carried out at the western general hospital in Edinburgh. Since 6 April all matters concerning the health and safety at work of their employees have been the primary responsibility of the commercial managers.

Radiation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he proposes to take to identify workers at risk from radiation, in the light of the recent report from the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Sainsbury: I am satisfied that all persons in my Department who are occupationally exposed to ionising radiations are known and that their working conditions are such that their exposure should not exceed the statutory limits. These are unchanged by the new NRPB guidelines in its interim guidance document following the ICRP 1987 Como statement. The records of exposure will allow any workers whose individual average exposures exceed the new guidelines to be identified.

Nuclear Warheads

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the reply, 13 November, Official Report, column 334, what is the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation policy towards increases in the present deployment figure of 4,600 nuclear warheads in its European stockpile.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add to the reply which my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces gave to the hon. Member on 13 November 1987 at column 334.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal what consultations he is undertaking on the bringing forward of proposals for the establishment of a Select Committee on Procedure.

Mr. Wakeham: Consultations will take place, as necessary, with hon. Members and through the usual channels.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal when he expects to announce his conclusions on the ways in which the recent reports of the Procedure Committee might be brought before the House.

Mr. Wakeham: When the necessary consultations have been concluded.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal what proposals he has to expedite the establishment of departmental Select Committees in the current and future Parliaments.

Mr. Wakeham: The hon. Member will be aware of the provision of time for a debate on Wednesday 2 December in the name of the Chairman of the Committee of Selection relating to the membership of departmental Select Committees. We have progressed as fast as we can and I am sure that future Parliaments will do likewise.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal in what circumstances he considers it appropriate for departmental Select Committees reports to be debated on a substantive motion.

Mr. Wakeham: When it is necessary in accordance with the general wish of the House.

Asbestos

Mr. Wray: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if any assessment has been made of the risk from asbestos to hon. Members and staff who are working in St. Stephen's House during the reconstruction of the buildings on Bridge street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: I am advised by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment, the hon. Member for Southampton, Itchen (Mr. Chope), that all known asbestos was removed from the Bridge street phase I site before work started on the main contract in June. Subsequently two further areas of asbestos have been discovered. They were sealed off immediately. One has been dealt with and the other is receiving attention now. All the work has been carried out in accordance with regulations based on the report of the Health and Safety Executive asbestos working group. Air counts in the areas showed readings below the minimum safety level.

I am satisfied on the evidence that there has been no risk to the occupants of St. Stephen's House.

Waste Paper

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Lord Privy Seal how much stationery paper (a) by weight and (b) by value is consumed in the Palace of Westminster each year; what arrangements there are for recycling waste paper; and what is the value of this waste.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not possible to make any sensible estimate of either the weight or the value of stationery paper consumed in the Palace of Westminster. I understand that the removal of unclassified waste paper from the Palace of Westminster is carried out, under a contract arranged by HMSO, at no cost to public funds. No arrangements have thus been made by the House authorities for waste paper to be recycled.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Family Credit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why it is assumed under the family credit scheme that, on between £3,000 and £6,000 of capital, each £250 of capital will provide an income of £1 a week; and whether this rule will apply if it can be proved that such an income is not forthcoming.

Mr. Scott: The range of tariff income assumed in the family credit scheme — and in the other new income related benefits — on capital between £3,000 and £6,000 is not intended to represent a commercial rate of return. Indeed, at the lower end of the range, an assumed income of £1 a week on savings of £3,250 represents an actual rate of only 1·6 per cent. This provision seeks to strike a balance between encouraging thrift and the proper use of public funds, and we consider that those with savings between £3,000 and £6,000 can reasonably be expected to make a progressive contribution. The rule will apply regardless of the manner in which capital is invested.

AIDS

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the size of the health educational budget in 1986 relating to (a) AIDS and (b) heart disease.

Mrs. Currie: Prior to the establishment of the Health Education Authority in April 1987, funding for health education was allocated by the Government to the Health Education Council.

Details of the Health Education Council's spending on coronary heart disease and AIDS for the financial years 1985-86 and 1986-87 is as follows:

Coronary heart disease
1985-86	1,030,108
1986-87	791,500
AIDS
1985-86	68,000
1986-87	62,000

In addition, the Department has spent £539,000 in 1985-86 and £6,861,000 in 1986-87 on public education relating to AIDS and £420,000 in 1986-87 on the joint departmental/ Health Education Council "Look After Your Heart" campaign. Regional and district health authorities, local authorities and voluntary organisations have also spent substantial sums on both AIDS and heart disease education but there is no comprehensive central record of the sums involved.

Mr. Frank Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if the National Health Service has considered taking legal action against those American companies who provided Factor 8 products infected with the AIDS virus.

Mr. Newton: The products in question were supplied to various health authorities. So far as is known legal action has not been taken by any of them.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people under 50 years of age died in 1986 from (a) AIDS and (b) heart disease.

Mr. Newton: As of 20 November 1987, of the cases of AIDS reported to the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre from England and Wales, 182 were known to have died during 1986 and were aged under 50 years at time of death.

The number of deaths registered in England and Wales in 1986 where the underlying cause of death was stated as heart disease (International Classification of Diseases 9th revision 393-429) for persons aged under 50 years is 5,010.

Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate how many recipients of (a) housing benefit, and (b) family income supplement receive more from these benefits than they are charged in income tax, national insurance contribution and local authority rates.

Mr. Scott: Approximately 1,900,000 standard housing benefit recipients, 80,000 people receiving both housing benefit and family income supplement and 30,000 recipients of family income supplement in Great Britain received more from these benefits in 1985 than they paid in income tax, national insurance contributions and local authority rates. Since these estimates assume that all tax payments and benefit receipts reported in the family expenditure survey are correct, the figures provide no more than broad orders of magnitude.

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the transitional protection of supplementary benefit payments on the introduction of income support will include payments under regulation 22 of the urgent cases regulations.

Mr. Scott: Yes, provided the claimant satisfies the conditions of entitlement for income support and total benefit income under income support is less than that under the supplementary benefit scheme.

Leukaemia (Burghfield)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence is available to his Department of higher rates of leukaemia around his Department's establishment at Burghfield, Berkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Evidence on leukaemia rates in the area including the Ministry of Defence atomic weapons establishment at Burghfield is to be found in the following publications:

(a) 'Childhood leukaemia in West Berkshire' (Barton et al, Lancet November 1985);

(b) 'Leukaemia and lymphatic cancer in young people near nuclear installations' (Urquhart et al, Lancet February 1986):

(c) 'Childhood leukaemia in the West Berkshire and Basingstoke & North Hampshire District Health

Authorities in relation to nuclear establishments in the vicinity' (Roman et al, British Medical Journal, March 1987);

(d) 'Cancer incidence and mortality in the vicinity of nuclear installations, England and Wales 1959-80' (OPCS, 1987).

This evidence, together with other epidemiological and dosimetric information, is currently being considered by the independent Committee on Medical Aspects of Radiation in the Environment.

Medicine Products

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many imported medicine products have been granted product licences (parallel imports) which differ in formulation from the products available in the United Kingdom under a full product licence; and if he will name those which are in the therapeutic fields of cardiovascular medicine, diabetes and epilepsy.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not readily available. However where the United Kingdom licensing authority is aware of differences in formulation between the imported medicinal product and that which is the subject of a full United Kingdom product licence, a product licence (parallel import) would be granted only if those differences were not considered to have therapeutic effect.

NHS (Administrative Staff)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of administrative and clerical staff employed in National Health Service hospitals in England and Wales for each of the years 1974 to 1986 inclusive.

Mr. Newton: The numbers of whole-time equivalent administrative and clerical staff (including general managers) employed in the National Health Service in England on 30 September in each year was as follows:

	Numbers
1974	82,800
1975	91,900
1976	98,500
1977	99,000
1978	100,300
1979	103,000
1980	105,400
1981	108,800
1982	108,800
1983	110,000
1984	110,300
1985	111,000
1986	111,400

These figures are rounded to the nearest 100. Separate figures for administrative and clerical staff employed in hospitals are not available.

Information on staff employed by the National Health Service in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Haemophiliacs

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the Haemophilia Society to make the first payments from the newly established trust fund.

Mr. Newton: The Department is working closely with the Haemophilia Society over the establishment of the trust fund to ensure the first payments are made as soon as possible.

Disturbed Children (Diet)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning long-term experiments on disturbed children at Aycliffe community school, County Durham, by the British Society of Nutritional Medicine relating to diet and behaviour; what is the status of the Society; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Aycliffe school is a controlled community home. Responsibility for its management is shared between Durham county council and the Aycliffe school trust. I am advised that a study is proposed to assess whether there are observable differences in behaviour and learning associated with the provision of a balanced diet based on foods which have less sugar, salt and saturated fats but a higher fibre content than meals traditionally provided, as opposed to a diet not based on such foods. No individual food or food additive is to be investigated. An academic steering committee has been established to oversee the study and the study design will be subject to the approval of the research and ethical committees of Newcastle university and the South West Durham health authority. The study has not yet started.

If it proceeds, the study would be carried out in association with the British Society for Nutritional Medicine. I understand that the society is an association of doctors whose aim is to develop understanding of clinical nutrition. The society is providing funds for the cost of the research time and any additional food costs.

I have written to the chairman of the Durham county council social services committee asking him to give me the opportunity to see, in advance of the study being implemented, a copy of the academic steering committee's full description of the study, when it is available, together with the views of the research and ethical committees which are being consulted.

Balderton Hospital

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many patients are currently in the Eastdale unit at Balderton hospital; and how many people are awaiting transfer to the unit.

Mrs. Currie: Two patients are in residence at the unit, and seven have been identified as potentially suitable for short periods of phased leave and observation there.

Agency Staff

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report (a) the number of agency staff employed by health authorities, (b) the number of agency nursing staff employed by health authorities and (c) the number of nursing and midwifery staff employed by health authorities, all in whole-time equivalents, for each quarter from June 1986 until June 1987; and what was the cost to health authorities of employing agency staff for the same period, in £ sterling.

Mr. Newton: Information about the number of agency staff, other than nursing and midwifery staff, employed by health authorities is not collected centrally.

The following table shows the number of nursing and midwifery staff (excluding agency staff) for each quarter from March 1986 and March 1987, inclusive, and the number of agency nursing and midwifery staff over the same period. June 1987 data are not yet available.

NHS directly employed nursing and midwifery staff—England

Source: DHSS Quarterly Counts of NHS non-medical manpower.
[1] All figures are independently rounded to the nearest 10 whole-time equivalents.

The Department collects information on the cost of agency staff to health authorities on a financial year basis only, via the annual accounts. The unaudited summarised accounts of health authorities in England for 1986-87 records total expenditure on the employment of non-National Health Service staff as £150 million.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the latest bed-occupancy, throughput and waiting list figures for health authorities.

Mrs. Currie: The table shows the latest information about bed occupancy, which is the average number of occupied beds as a percentage of the average number of available beds, and throughput, which is the number of in-patient cases treated per available bed. The latest waiting list information is contained in the bound volume of the hospital waiting lists for health authorities in England at 31 March 1987, a copy of which is in the Library.

NHS Staff (Assaults)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Burnley of 9 November, Official Report, column 88, he will ask for a report from each regional health authority on the numbers of attacks by members of the public on National Health Service employees in their hospitals for each of the last five years, giving in each case the nature of the employment of persons attacked.

Mrs. Currie: Information is not available in the form requested.

We are naturally concerned that everything possible is done to ensure that all staff working in the health and personal social services are protected against violence. Much good work is already being done by health authorities. Measures include employment of contract security staff, installation of closed circuit television, panic buttons, shriek alarms, two-way radios, improved lighting and decor and the introduction of professional nurse triage to reduce waiting times in accident and emergency departments.

However, it is often difficult for managers to monitor the situation and take effective preventive measures because, for a variety of reasons, not all incidents of violence are reported. The DHSS advisory committee on violence to staff, which under the chairmanship of my noble Friend, has been charged with pooling and disseminating knowledge and experience to ensure that measures taken to protect staff are as effective as possible, is considering reporting standards and systems which may be developed by managers in the light of local circumstances. The committee hopes to report to my right hon. Friend by early spring.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much was paid out from the Burnley supplementary benefit office in single payments in each of the last five years; and what is the proposed budget for the year commencing April 1988 for social fund expenditure.

Mr. Scott: I am arranging for the information available on annual single payment expenditure by individual local offices to be placed in the Library. Information on the allocation of social fund grants and loans budgets for 1988-89 was contained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-81.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 252, if he will list in the Official Report the number of non-caller claims for supplementary benefit received in the last four-week period for which records are available and the percentage of non-caller claims awaiting a decision at the end of that four-week period; and if he will supply this information in respect of (a) his Department's offices in the Greater London area, (b) London north region and (c) London south region;

(2) pursuant to his answer of 27 October, Official Report, column 252, if he will give average waiting times for a decision from the date of the claim on supplementary benefit claims for his Department's offices in Barking, Barnet, Canning Town, Cricklewood, Ealing, Edgware, Edmonton, Euston, Finsbury Park, Hackney, Harlesden, Hendon, Highgate, Hoxton, Leytonstone, Neasden, Notting Hill, Paddington, Poplar, Shoreditch, Southall, Stepney, Stoke Newington, Tottenham, Walthamstow, Woodgrange Park, Wood Green, Balham, Brixton, Camberwell, Croydon, Crystal Palace, Dartford, Greenwich Park, Hither Green, Hounslow, Kennington Park, Kensington, Lewisham, Mitcham, Oval and Peckham, and for the London north region and the London south region;

(3) if he will list in the Official Report the number of items of post received each week and the number of items of unlinked post over two days old; if he will supply this information in respect of his Department's offices in (a) Stoke Newington, (b) Hackney and (c) Finsbury Park; and how many other of his Department's offices in London north and London south have a greater backlog of items of unlinked post.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 23 November 1987]: The tables set out the information requested where it is available, for the four-week period up to 20 October 1987. The data are provisional and subject to amendment.

Birth Statistics

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give, for each year from 1975 onwards, the numbers of livebirths, stillbirths, early neonatal deaths, late neonatal deaths and postneonatal deaths of legitimate and jointly registered illegitimate babies in England and Wales with fathers whose occupations were classified as (a) social class I, (b) social class II, (c) social class III non-manual, (d) social class III manual, (e) social class IV, (f) social class V, (g) armed services and (h) students, unoccupied and any occupations not included in (a) to (g).

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the full information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the tables show readily available statistics on infant and perinatal mortality.

[1] The legitimate livebirths for each social class are estimated numbers only, based on a 10 per cent. sample.
[2] Includes armed forces, students, unoccupied and not stated.
From 1975 to 1978, social class is derived from 1970 Classification of Occupations, and between 1979 and 1985 from the 1980 Classification.

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the reasons for the differences between the allocations to the family practitioner committees in east and west Sussex; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Resources available to individual family practitioner committees were the subject of local negotiation with health authorities when, in 1985, family practitioner committees became independent of health authorities. It is widely recognised that this led to some inequities. For this reason, the Department, in a phased programme, has sought to redistribute resources in a more objective way based on criteria relating to major aspects affecting workload. Under this process east Sussex family practitioner committee has gained this year a higher proportion of the total available resources both absolutely and relative to west Sussex family practitioner committee. No final decisions have yet been made about allocations for 1988-89.

Correspondence (Welsh Language)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what guidance has been given to officials within his Department regarding correspondence addressed to them by individuals and bodies in Wales in the Welsh language;

(2) what is his policy towards answering in the Welsh language letters written by individuals and bodies in Wales in the Welsh language to offices of his Department situated outside Wales.

Mr. Portillo: Local office staff in Wales will reply in Welsh to letters received in that language. Some social security benefits are administered centrally outside Wales. Correspondence from Wales in the Welsh language to any of these central locations would normally receive an answer in Welsh.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what facilities the various divisions within his Department have for dealing with correspondence addressed to them by individuals and bodies in Wales in the Welsh language.

Mr. Portillo: There are Welsh-speaking staff in most social security offices in Wales and in predominantly Welsh-speaking areas the proportion is higher.

If a letter cannot be processed locally, the Welsh Office provides a translation service for all offices of the Department. In addition, the Department retains an agency to provide translations to and from English for all the major languages, including Welsh.

Sheltered Accommodation (Alarm Systems)

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy regarding the payment of grants to cover the cost of installing alarm systems in local authority sheltered accommodation and schemes designed for elderly people.

Mrs. Currie: The provision of alarm systems is a matter for local authorities and landlords. We have no plans to make grants from central funds for this purpose.

Local housing authorities have a wide range of powers under which they can provide alarm systems not only in their own housing stock but also in the community as a whole, whether or not the housing is specially designed for elderly people. Local social service authorities also have powers to supply and meet the costs of warning devices including alarms in sheltered housing and other accommodation in the public, voluntary and private sectors. It is for housing and social services authorities to decide what resources should be devoted to alarm systems from the total resources available to them.

Clinical Waste

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidance his Department provides to district health authorities and county councils as to the division of responsibilities between them in the handling and disposal of clinical waste.

Mrs. Currie: Guidance on the safe disposal of clinical waste was issued to district and regional health authorities in 1982 under cover of Health Notice HN(82)22. This does not specify any particular division of responsibility; that is a matter best resolved between the operational authorities concerned.

Mental Hospitals (Ex-inmates)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent the payment of social security benefit to ex-inmates of National Health Service mental hospitals, now transferred to private residential homes, is affected by local health authority payments to provide for the care of those ex-inmates.

Mr. Portillo: Under section 23(1) of the National Health Service Act 1977 a health authority may make arrangements with the proprietors of a private residential home for a NHS hospital patient to be accommodated and cared for in the home instead. In these circumstances the patient's entitlement to benefit is not affected by the transfer: benefit is payable at the same rate as if the patient were still in hospital.

Agency Nurses

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each district health authority in England and Wales its outlay on agency nurses for the latest financial year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: Following are provisional — as yet unaudited—figures from the annual accounts of health authorities in England.

Questions about health authorities in Wales are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

District Health Authorities

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by each district health authority within the Mersey region of the percentage of the total budget which is spent upon administration.

Mrs. Currie: Following is the information derived from the 1986-87 annual accounts of the relevant health authorities:—

Revenue expenditure on headquarters administration as a proportion of total revenue expenditure

District health authority	Per cent.
Chester	3·46
Crewe	3·64
Halton	5·23
Macclesfield	3·20
Warrington	3·18
Liverpool	2·92
St. Helens and Knowsley	3·44
Southport and Formby	4·68
South Sefton	3·27
Wirral	2·66

Note:—Expenditure on headquarters administration includes the pay and pay related costs of staff of all disciplines employed at district headquarters level and their office costs and overheads. It excludes the cost of clerical and secretarial support staff employed in departments at hospital and unit level: such costs are regarded as operational.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the extent to which the population of each district health authority in the Mersey region has altered over the last five year period for which figures are available and over the last 10 year period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is given in the table.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many women in (a) the Yorkshire region and (b) the area covered by the Pontefract district health authority, have died from cervical cancer in the last five years for which figures are available, expressed per thousand women.

Mrs. Currie: The information is given in the table.

NHS Funding

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the extra funding outlined in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's statement for the National Health Service is to be made available to regional health authorities; and what the amount will be for the Yorkshire region.

Mrs. Currie: Health authority allocations for 1988-89 will be announced shortly. This year allocations to the Yorkshire regional health authority have totalled £807 million.

Pontefract District Health Authority

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the chairman of the Pontefract district health authority regarding that authority's financial difficulties and the need for funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The district general manager wrote to the Department on 15 October on behalf of Pontefract health authority seeking a meeting. However it is regional health authorities which are responsible for the distribution of resources to their districts and the line of accountability is from districts to regions. The Pontefract health authority has therefore been advised to discuss the matter with Yorkshire regional health authority.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the 1986-87 half-yearly overspend/underspend position of the Yorkshire regional health authority, broken down into districts;

(2) if he will detail, for each year since 1973, the average level of debt owned to the National Health Service by the private medicine sector (a) in the Yorkshire region and (b) in the Pontefract district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority who may be able to assist with the information he seeks.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has made of the cost to the National Health Service of the proposed increase in electricity charges in (a) the Yorkshire region and (b) the Pontefract district health authority area; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has announced plans which will result in increases in electricity prices over a two-year period beginning in April 1988. An accurate assessment of the effect of those increases on individual health authorities cannot be made from information held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to write to the chairman of the authorities he mentions.

Nursing (Training)

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will make it his policy to encourage young people entering nursing to take a degree course alongside their ward training by placing them on the same financial basis as those on traditional courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The United Kingdom Central Council's proposals for the reform of nurse education and training are currently being considered by the Department. Officials are also discussing the possible expansion of nursing degree courses with their opposite numbers in the Department of Education and Science, as existing degree courses are oversubscribed.

Anti-flu Vaccine (Hull)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to increase the level provision and availability of the anti-flu vaccine in the Hull area.

Mrs. Currie: No. As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Member for Oldham, Central and Royton (Mr. Lamond) on 24 November at column 124, supplies of flu vaccine this winter will be increased to 2·2 million doses by next week. This is substantially above the level (1·6 million doses) for last winter. We have no medical or scientific evidence that a flu epidemic is likely this winter. Vaccination of the general public is not recommended.

Low Income Workers

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update the information on low income workers contained in his answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead of 15 January 1986, Official Report, columns 593-96.

Mr. Scott: Estimates, which exclude families and single people paying higher rates of income tax, are shown in the table. Although the main assumptions used are similar to those used in the tables on the "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income-Related Benefits" published at the time of the uprating statement on 27 October, these marginal rates assume that employees' national insurance contributions are paid at a rate of 9 per cent. Insofar as some employees' contributions are at the lower rates of 5 per cent. and 7 per cent., the estimates are too high. They therefore provide only broad orders of magnitude.

Total marginal rate of deduction (per cent.) per £1 of gross earnings	Hypothetical "current scheme" 1988-89	Reformed system 1988-89

Social Fund

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how much the community care grant element of the social fund allocated to each of his Department's offices at Camberwell, Peckham, Kennington and Southwark falls short of the amounts paid out in grants in 1985-86, 1986-87 and the projected amount for 1987-88 at those offices;

(2) by how much the total budget for the social fund in terms of loans and grants exceeds or falls short of the amounts paid out in single payments and urgent needs payments in 1985-86, 1986-87 and the projected amount for 1987-88 at his Department's offices at Camberwell, Peckham, Kennington and Southwark.

Mr. Scott: I shall arrange for the information requested on expenditure in 1985-86 and 1986-87 to be placed in the Library. Projections for expenditure on single payments and urgent needs payments in 1987-88 are not broken down by local office. Provisional outturn figures for 1987-88 on an office-by-office basis are likely to be available in July 1988. Information on the social fund allocations to local offices was contained in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at column 774-81.

Supplementary Benefit Offices

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what amounts were paid out by each of the supplementary benefit offices at Camberwell, Peckham, Kennington and Southwark in the form of (i) single payments and (ii) urgent needs payments: (a) from April 1985 to March 1986 inclusive, (b) from April 1986 to March 1987 inclusive and (c) from April 1987 to October 1987 inclusive.

Mr. Portillo: Information about urgent needs payments is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Information about single payments is given in the table.

Note:
Information for the periods requested is not available. The information given is for the periods 10 April 1985 to 8 April 1986, 9 April 1986 to 7 April 1987 and 8 April 1987 to 20 October 1987.

[1] The figures for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are provisional and subject to amendment.

Social Security Offices (Wales)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will publish in the Official Report the proposed budget under the social fund he has allocated to his social security offices (i) in Mid Glamorgan and (ii) in other Welsh counties.

Mr. Scott: I announced the social fund budget allocations to individual local offices for 1988-89 in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wells (Mr. Heathcoat-Amory) on 4 November at columns 774-781.

General Practitioners

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what steps are being taken by Her Majesty's Government to monitor the increased workloads of general practitioners and their consequential effects; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps are being taken to alleviate the adverse effects of increased workloads on general practitioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Each year the Government determine the intended average net remuneration for general medical practitioners on advice from the independent Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body which takes into account, amongst other things, evidence on workload, the increase in the number of general medical practitioners and the reducing average list size.

Last year the health Departments and the profession submitted a report of a joint survey into general medical practitioners' workload which the Doctors' and Dentists' Review Body welcomed and took into account.

National Health Service Employees

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps are being taken by Her Majesty's Government to investigate stress amongst National Health Service employees striving to maintain the quality of health care in the face of increased demands on the service they provide; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The degree and nature of stress in employment differs according to circumstances and we believe it is right that we should look primarily to health authorities as employers to discharge their responsibilities under the Health and Safety at Work, Etc. Act 1974, to promote, maintain and improve the physical and mental well-being of all employees. We have no plans to institute a further study into that area.

Dental and Optical Test Charges

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what estimate he has of the number of people who will be exempt from dental and optical test charges.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the various categories of people who (a) are exempt from prescription charges at present and (b) will be exempt from eye-testing and dental inspection charges under the proposed legislation, stating the potential numbers of each category and showing what percentage of the population these exemptions represent.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is not available in respect of all categories of exemption from prescription charges. The table gives the available information expressed as percentages of the take-up of the relevant services.

[1] Claimants and adult dependants.
[2] Also includes people not entitled to benefit but who qualify on low income grounds.
[3] Separate figures for those who qualify because they have a specified medical condition are not available.
[4] Estimated.
[5] Includes both exempt categories.
[6] Exemption declared but category not shown.
[7] Information not available.
[8] Does not include contraceptive devices supplied free of charge.

The following groups will be exempt from dental inspection charges and have entitlement to free NHS sight tests:

	Number	Per cent. of population
Children under 16	9,606,600	20·3
People under 19 in full-time education	702,000	1·5
Family Income and Supplementary Benefit Claimants and their Partners	5,351,000	11·3
The following will also be exempt from dental inspection charges:
Expectant mothers and women who have had a baby in the previous 12 months	[1]1,000,000	2·1
People aged 16 and 17 not in full-time education	1,494,000	3·2

[1] Estimate.

Notes:
(1) Figures are for England, 1986.
(2) Some of the above categories will overlap, eg some mothers could be entitled to free dental inspections on grounds both of status and low income.

Help will also be available in the form of full or partial remission of the dental inspection charge for people on low income. It is not possible to give an estimate of those likely to benefit in this way though the numbers are expected to be small.

In addition it is proposed to make regulations giving the registered blind and partially sighted and those entitled to complex lens supplements under the optical voucher scheme entitlement to free NHS sight tests. Some 200,000, (0·4 per cent. of the population) would benefit from this.

Birmingham Children's Hospital (Baby's Death)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about the death of a baby refused admission to Birmingham Children's hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I am aware of a statement made on 25 November by a consultant cardiologist at the Birmingham Children's hospital, Dr. E. Silave which included the following:

"The only case of which I am aware concerns a baby who was born during the last week with a serious heart abnormality in a hospital in the West Midlands Regional Health Authority. The baby could not be admitted to Birmingham Children's hospital because there was no space available on the intensive care unit. That baby has died. It was apparently very seriously ill and it is conjecture as to whether admission to the hospital would have influenced the outcome. Out of respect for the bereaved parents no further details can be made available."

Adult Dependant's Additions

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many recipients there were of adult dependant's additions with invalidity benefit (a) in April 1986 and (b) at the latest date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: At 5 April 1986, the latest date for which information is available there were 366,300 invalidity pensioners whose benefit included an increase for an adult dependant.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the numbers of invalid care allowances given to (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) the total (a) at the end of 1986, (b) at 30 September and (c) in total so far.

Mr. Scott: The available information is given in the table.

Position at	[1]Men	[3]Women	Total
31 December 1986	[2]37,422	23,009	60,431
20 September 1987	43,236	88,621	131,857
20 November 1987	45,606	95,024	140,630

[1] From July 1976.
[2] Includes awards made to single women up to December 1985. Separate figures are not available.
[3] From 1 January 1986.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many married women receiving invalid care allowance have been given allowances backdated to 22 December 1984; what cash total this represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Of the 89,000 invalid care allowance awards made to married and cohabiting women since June 1986, some 35,000 have attracted backdating to 22 December 1984. It is estimated that the total cost of backdating is £130 million.

Mortality

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many men and women died during each month of 1986 in England and Wales.

Mrs. Currie: Provisional information for 1986 is shown in the table.

Number of deaths by month of occurrence and sex, all causes and all ages England and Wales. Provisional. 1986[1]

Month of occurrence	Males	Females
January	28,999	30,985

December	24,860	25,231

[1] Excludes any death occurring in 1986, but registered after 31 March 1987.

Cancer (Women)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of deaths of women caused by cancer in each regional and area district health authority in England and Wales in each year from 1981 to 1986.

Mrs. Currie: Information for 1981 to 1985 is published in "Mortality Statistics: Area series DH 5 nos. 8-12", copies of which are in the Library. A table giving the figures for 1986 has been placed in the Library.

Hospital Car Services

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those health authorities that currently run a hospital car service; and if he will list the amount per mile paid to drivers by each health authority for running that service.

Mrs. Currie: The NHS ambulance services listed provided hospital car service transport for some of the non-emergency patients they carried during 1986. Health authorities are free to reimburse drivers in the hospital car service at rates comparable to those agreed by the General Whitley Council for NHS staff or at a rate determined in the light of local circumstances. Information about the amount paid per mile by individual health authorities is not held centrally.

Heart Surgery

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is his estimate of the number of children currently waiting for heart surgery at each of the regional centres for heart operations in the United Kingdom; what is the average waiting time; what is the longest waiting time; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many intensive care beds there are at each regional centre for children's heart surgery in the United Kingdom; how many are currently usable and how many stand idle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Information on the number of children waiting for heart surgery is not collected centrally. The number of urgent cases is likely to vary from day to day. In most cases intensive care beds for babies and children are used for a range of conditions. It is not, therefore, possible to say how many are available specifically for heart surgery.

Water Charges

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail what proportion of water charges (i) existing claimants and (ii) new claimants after April will be expected to meet; and if he will detail the rebates scheme available to those on low income to assist with their water charges.

Mr. Portillo: At present, help is available for water charges under the supplementary benefit scheme either as part of the supplementary benefit payment or, under an administrative arrangement, with housing benefit. As part of the social security reforms individual amounts for water charges will no longer be included in benefit. Both existing and new claimants after April 1988 will be required to pay the full amount of their water charge bill themselves. Rebates will not be available for this cost, but in setting the levels of income support for April 1988 account was taken of the overall amount spent in supplementary benefit on water charges.

Insurance Companies

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to seek powers to enable him to make regulations controlling the wording and interpretation of questions put to potential policy holders by health insurance companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.
I have no such plans.

Maidstone General Hospital

Mrs. Widdicombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will take urgent measures to ensure the reopening of Maidstone general hospital to cases other than emergencies and malignancies;

(2) if he will make a statement about the decision of the Maidstone district health authority to close the Maidstone general hospital to all admissions except emergencies and malignancies.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 9 November 1987]: Health authorities are expected to manage within their cash limits. Maidstone health authority is a resource allocation working party gaining health district, but increased demand since 1983 following the opening of the new Maidstone hospital has outstripped all expectations.

The district has taken steps to contain expenditure this year which, among other measures, include the temporary closure of four wards and a freeze on staff vacancies.

The South-East Thames regional health authority and Maidstone health authority are discussing the situation to ascertain what further steps may be needed to ensure a satisfactory resolution of the difficulties.

Income-Related Assistance

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the total number of people in Great Britain and Northern Ireland, including claimants and their dependants on the basis of the most recent data, who are currently reliant on income-related assistance, including supplementary benefits, housing benefits and family income supplement; and what would be the number if all those eligible claimed their own and their dependants' entitlements.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 9 November 1987]: Precise answers to each individual part of this question cannot be provided because multiple benefit receipt implies an unknown degree of double counting. Comparable answers cannot be provided because the available information is at different dates. The latest available details for individual benefits relating to Great Britain is as follows.

In April 1986 approximately 200,000 people, some of whom may have been unemployed, and who had a half million dependants, were receiving family income supplement. In May 1986, about 4·9 million claimants with 3·3 million dependants were receiving supplementary benefit. Some of these may have also been receiving family income supplement. In the autumn of 1986, around 3·7 million claimants received standard housing benefit. An estimate of the numbers of their dependants could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

For the years 1983 and 1984, an average estimate is available of the number of people eligible for family income supplement who did not claim. They totalled about 150,000 and they had some 450,000 dependants. Similar estimates suggest that, in 1983, about 1·3 million eligible people with 600,000 dependants did not claim supplementary benefit and that, in 1984, about 1·6 million eligible people with 1·8 million dependants may not have claimed their standard housing benefit entitlements.

Abortion

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by country of origin of the numbers and percentages of women who travelled to the United Kingdom for abortions in each of the years since the Abortion Act came into force.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The available information is shown in the tables.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people above the level of income support and paying average rent and rates will be entitled to housing benefit in April 1988, broken down into pensioners, two-parent families and one-parent families.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 13 November 1987]: It is estimated that the number of people with incomes above the level of income support who will be receiving housing benefit in April 1988 will be as follows:

	Thousands
Pensioners	1,950
Two parent families	150
One parent families	100
Others	400
Total	2,600

Note:
These figures include households paying all levels of rent and rates since it would not be possible to isolate those paying exactly the average level.

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the latest figures for the numbers of people claiming housing benefit; and if he will give an estimate of the numbers that will be entitled to claim after April 1988, broken down into pensioners, two-parent families and one-parent families.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 13 November 1987]: The information requested is as follows:

1. The latest estimate is that in the autumn of 1986, some 7·2 million households were in receipt of housing benefit.

2. It is estimated that the numbers of people receiving housing benefit after April 1988 will be:

	Thousands
Pensioners	3,550
Two-parent families	650
One-parent families	600
Others	1,300
Total	6,100

Note:
The two total figures are derived from different sources, and it would therefore be misleading to make a direct comparison between them.

Skoal Bandits

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if it is still his policy to conclude a voluntary agreement with US Tobacco regarding the printing of a health warning on packets of Skoal Bandits; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 23 November 1987]: Measures further to control Skoal Bandits, including a health warning on the label and advertising material, have been under review since last year. An announcement will be made as soon as possible.

Electricity Prices

36. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of state for Social Services what he estimates will be the cost to the National Health Service of the proposed increase in electricity charges; and if he will make a statement.

38. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates will be the cost to the National Health Service of the proposed increase in electricity charges; and if he will make a statement.

64. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates will be the cost to the National Health Service of the proposed increase in electricity charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 24 November 1987]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy has announced plans which will result in increases in electricity prices over a two-year period beginning in April 1988. On the basis of past patterns of supply we estimate that the cost to all health authorities in the financial year 1988-89 will be in the order of £8 million.

Health authorities are major users of electricity. together with the National Health Service Procurement Directorate, and in negotiation with electricity boards and the Electricity Council, they will continue to ensure their considerable investment represents good value for money.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Zircon

Mr. Wilshire: To ask the Attorney-General whether he has yet taken a decision whether or not to prosecute anyone in relation to project Zircon; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Having considered with the Director of Public Prosecutions all the relevant factors, including in particular the public interest, I have decided not to institute criminal proceedings in respect of any disclosure that has been reported to him of information in relation to Project Zircon. I have consulted my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate: he does not intend to institute any separate proceedings in Scotland.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

South Africa

Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the provision of additional assistance for black South Africans in South Africa.

Mr. Chris Patten: In accordance with the agreements reached at the recent Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting, the Government propose to finance from the aid programme 20 new training places in Britain for black South Africans at a cost of an additional £200,000 a year. We shall also increase by £80,000 a year the £270,000 currently available under the heads of mission gifts scheme and the small projects scheme. This will bring our commitment for training and assistance for black South Africans to more than £21 million over five years. Additional assistance is under consideration through non-governmental channels.

Commonwealth Development Corporation

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to extend the scope of operations of the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have agreed to a request from the corporation to include Mozambique in its area of operations. No further extension is at present under consideration.

St. Helena

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether a decision has been reached on the award of the contract to build a replacement ship for St. Helena.

Mr. Chris Patten: Subject to contract negotiation, this order will be placed with Hall Russell Ltd. of Aberdeen.

TRANSPORT

Speed Limiters

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to introduce measures requiring the installation of maximum speed limiters for (a) coaches already in use, (b) new coaches and (c) heavy lorries.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: New regulations to fit speed limiters to coaches will be made shortly. They will require new coaches to be fitted with a speed limiter from 1 April 1989, coaches first used on or after 1 April 1984 to be fitted from 1 April 1990, and older coaches from 1 April 1991.

There are no plans at present to require the fitting of speed limiters to heavy lorries, for which maximum speed limits of 60 mph (motorways) 50 mph (dual carriageways) and 40 mph (single carriageways) already apply. We are examining ways of ensuring greater compliance with these limits.

Some lorry operators fit limiters on a voluntary basis.

Primary Route Network (North-West)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any proposals to review the longer-term road needs of the north-west region with particular regard to the primary route network.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We constantly monitor conditions on the existing trunk road and motorway network. In addition I agreed at the recent regional annual consultative committee meeting held in Kendal that the Department would co-operate with the working party which local authorities are to set up to examine road investment needs in the north-west.

Preston Bypass

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any proposals to improve the capacity of the Preston bypass section of the M6.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Consultants have been appointed to design schemes to widen and improve the M6 between junctions 30 and 32 (Broughton).

Motorway Network, Lancashire

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he proposes to accept Lancashire county council's proposal for a comprehensive signalling system to be installed on the motorway network in Lancashire, including the use of close circuit television.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We propose to appoint consulting engineers to examine the need for improvements to communications on motorways in Lancashire. The consultants already appointed to design the improvements between junctions 30 and 32 of M6 will advise on the provision of a gantry signalling system and the use of permanent CCTV on this section.

A19 (Crash Barriers)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in respect of erecting crash barriers on the central reservation on the A19 from Dishforth to the Tyne tunnel.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Good progress has been made in providing safety fencing to the A19 central reservations between Dishforth and the Tyne tunnel. 15.1 km have been completed.

Thirty five km are under construction and works to the remaining 40 km are scheduled to commence in the financial year 1988-89.

A19-A1 Network

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the road network from the A19 to the A1 within the areas of Cleveland, County Durham and Tyne and Wear.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no proposals at present for major improvements to the road network from the A19 to A1 within Cleveland, Durham and Tyne and Wear.

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Most types of paper we use contain varying proportions of recycled paper. Comprehensive information on waste paper is not readily available. The waste paper from our London buildings is sent for recycling.

Railways (Investment)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to how much money has been allocated by British Rail for the purchase of the 100 new class 60 locomotives; and how much of this money will be generated entirely by British Rail's own operations.

Mr. David Mitchell: The British Railway Board has allocated about £130 million for the purchase of 100 new class 60 locomotives. The precise cost will depend on the board's evaluation of the tenders it has received from manufacturers. The cost of the investment will be borne entirely by the board's freight sector which receives no Government grant.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the level of state subsidy for national railways in France, West Germany and Japan.

Mr. David Mitchell: So far as France and West Germany are concerned, I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 23 October 1987 at column 913. Japanese National Railways was split into regional companies with restructured finances on 1 April this year. This makes it impracticable to make any direct comparisons.

Trolley Buses

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has made any study of the relative environmental effects in terms of noise and fuel exhaust pollution of electrically powered trolley buses compared with conventional diesel-engined buses travelling on hilly routes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: There has been no specific study carried out by the Department on this point. We have supported the former West Yorkshire county council in representing the United Kingdom in the European study COST 303 of the economic potential for electrically powered trolley buses, in particular those with auxiliary diesel engines which I understand West Yorkshire favours.

Environmental effects as well as economic comparatives were taken into account in that study the results of which have been published. I am arranging for a copy to be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Unleaded Petrol

Mr. Waller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether cars presented for vehicle emissions type approval may use unleaded petrol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes. Now that unleaded petrol is becoming increasingly available, manufacturers may choose to use it in vehicles emissions type approval tests.

WALES

Initial Teacher Training

82. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to reorganise initial teacher training in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

83. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether his Department has any plans to reorganise initial teacher training in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There are no plans for reorganising provision in the public sector in Wales following my right hon. Friend's announcement on 30 September of entries up to 1989 to all six colleges with initial teacher training courses. Decisions about initial teacher training in the university sector are for the University Grants Committee.

Housing

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many families are currently on the housing waiting list for each local authority in Wales; and what were the comparable figures in 1979.

Mr. Grist: Information on the number of people on housing waiting lists is not available centrally.

Estimates of the percentage of households which contain applicants were published in table 2.20 in the 1986 Welsh intercensal survey report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Comparable figures for 1979 are not available.

Job Creation

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what system of monitoring he employs to measure the number of jobs created by firms in receipt of regional selective assistance against the number of jobs projected by them at the time of application.

Mr. Peter Walker: Grants are paid in instalments related to the achievement of the projects' forecast objectives. Each claim for payment is required to include a report on all aspects of project progress, including job creation, certified by an independent accountant. In addition, projects are inspected by officals of my Department at appropriate intervals to verify the details.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what statistics have been collected on the proportion of jobs projected at the time of regional aid approval which actually resulted from (a) projects generally and (b) inward investment projects from overseas.

Mr. Peter Walker: Statistics collected on projects receiving regional aid include employment achievement against forecasts. For completed projects since 1979, the proportion of jobs achieved against forecast is (a) 87 per cent. for projects generally and (b) 85 per cent. for inward investment projects from overseas.

Business Closures (Redundancy)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many redundancies the Manpower Services Commission's records show to have taken place as a result of business closures in Wales since June 1979.

Mr. Wyn Roberts [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The information is not available in the form requested. I am, however, delighted to say that it is certain that redundancies are at a much lower level this year than they have been in recent years including the years 1977-78 and 1978-79.

Part-time Employees

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what changes have taken place in numbers employed part-time in Wales in each year since 1979.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Data from which an annual series can be derived are calculated only in respect of women who make up the bulk of part-timers; the estimates are as follows:

Year: June	Females (Thousands)
1979	165
1980	163
1981	159
1982	157
1983	164
1984	164
1985	171
1986	174
1987	182

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Bookmakers

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has yet received any recommendation from the Director General of Fair Trading regarding the possible reference of the bookmaking industry to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: No. I understand that the Director General of Fair Trading is still considering whether he should make a complex monopoly reference of the supply of off-course bookmaking services to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Cigarette Imports

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the extent and trend of low-priced imports of cigarettes; from which countries they come; by what amount, in pence per 20, such cigarettes are cheaper than United Kingdom-produced cigarettes; and what representations he has received about the implications of these imports for the competitiveness and viability of the United Kingdom cigarette industry.

Mr. Alan Clark: According to estimates provided by the United Kingdom tobacco industry, imports of cheap brands of cigarettes increased from 0·1 billion pieces in 1983 to 9·6 billion in 1986, but appear to be falling back this year to rather less than 10 per cent. of United Kingdom cigarette consumption. About 80 per cent. of these imports come from the Federal Republic of Germany and West Berlin. The industry estimates that these imports can undercut the United Kingdom retail price of United Kingdom manufactured brands by up to 25p per packet of 20 cigarettes.

I personally have not received any representations on this issue, but I understand that colleagues in this and other Departments have, and that meetings with industry representatives have been arranged.

Shipbuilding Industry (Redundancies)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding industry in Tyne and Wear during the period from 1 January to 31 December 1986.

Mr. Atkins: It is estimated that there was a reduction in employment of some 16,000 in the shipbuilding industry in Tyne and Wear during the period January 1979 to December 1986.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding industry throughout the United Kingdom during the period from 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1986.

Mr. Atkins: It is estimated that there was a reduction in employment of some 48,000 in the shipbuilding industry in the United Kingdom during the period 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1986.

Film Industry

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action is being taken to implement the undertaking which the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry gave the House on 20 November, Official Report, columns 1389-92, to consult the cinema and film industries about follow-up action to the 1983 Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the supply of films and the subsequent experimental films release scheme.

Mr. Maude: I am today beginning such consultation. As my hon. Friend said in the House on 20 November, we have given further consideration to the adverse public interest findings of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the supply of films, in conjunction with the results of the experimental film release in the Manchester and Glasgow areas conducted by the Office of Fair Trading. Following that experiment, I am considering making an order under the Fair Trading Act 1973 to implement the two main recommendations of the MMC concerning barring and popular films.

I am therefore today writing to interested parties in the cinema and film industries to indicate the terms in which an order under the Fair Trading Act might be framed and to seek their views on this course of action. I am proposing firstly that existing and future long-term arrangements between a distributor and a cinema operator to bar other cinemas locally from showing the same films concurrently might be made unlawful. Secondly, I am proposing that a four-week limit might be placed on the length of time for which "first run" cinemas may exhibit a popular film without making it available to competitors.

Copies of the Director General of Fair Trading's report on the experimental films release scheme together with copies of our consultation letter have been placed in the Library of the House and are available in the Vote Office.

I am asking that comments on these proposals should be submitted in writing by 31 January 1988.

Consumer Arbitration Agreements Bill

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received about the Consumer Arbitration Agreements Bill introduced by the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have asked the Department's Advisory Committee on Arbitration Law, chaired by Lord Justice Mustill, to examine the issues raised by the Bill as a matter of urgency. The Committee will consider representations by interested parties. Those interested in submitting evidence should contact the secretary of the committee as soon as possible.

EC (Liquid Containers)

Sir Hugh Rossi: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish the programme which Her Majesty's Government were due to submit during the course of the current week in response to the European Commission's liquid containers directive (directive on containers of liquids for human consumption — 85/339/EEC).

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 30 November 1987]: General publication of the programme would not be appropriate until it has been approved by the Commission as required by directive 85/339/EEC.

Meanwhile, copies of the programme in the form submitted to the European Commission will be sent to all interested organisations in the United Kingdom which are known to my Department. Copies will be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. They will also be available, from the Department (212 8728) on request, to anyone who wants them.

Shipbuilding Industry (Merseyside)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding industry in Merseyside during the period from 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1986.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 30 November 1987]: It is estimated that there was a reduction in employment of some 3,700 in the shipbuilding industry in Merseyside during the period 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1986.

British Telecom

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to (a) the number of shareholders to be given bonus shares in British Telecom, under the loyalty bonus scheme, on 30 November 1988, and (b) the number of shares to be given out under the scheme.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The qualifying date for eligibility for bonus shares in British Telecom is 30 November 1987. Current estimates are that almost 1 million shareholders will qualify for some 55 million bonus shares in total. These will be transferred as soon as practicable after the qualifying date.

Regional Policy

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to reform regional policy in such a way as to discourage future company relocations from areas of high unemployment to areas of relatively low unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Relocation by a particular company is a matter for its commercial judgment.

Batchelor plc

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from Sheffield city council regarding the decision by Unilever to relocate Batchelor plc headquarters from Sheffield to Croydon; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 30 November 1987]: I have received no representations from Sheffield city council about the decision by Unilever to relocate the Batchelors Food headquarters from Sheffield. This is in any case a matter for the company's own commercial judgment.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Daya Bay Power Plant

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 26 October, what remedial action will be taken to ensure the safety of the Daya Bay power plant; who has been identified as responsible for the omission of the reinforcement bars from the first concrete layer; what representations he has received from the Government of China on the implications of these faults for the safety of local residents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Additional bars and concrete reinforcement have been placed in the second layer of the reactor raft in order to ensure that the safety requirements of the original design are met.

The omission of bars was due to an incorrect interpretation of technical drawings by the contractor and the inadequate enforcement of quality control checks. Improvements have since been made to the quality control arrangements to avoid similar problems in the future.

We have not received any representations from the Government of China on the implications of these faults for the safety of local residents.

Hong Kong (Vietnamese Refugees)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Vietnamese refugees are currently in Hong Kong; what plans he has for their resettlement (a) up to 1997 and (b) after 1997; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: On 27 November there were 9,359 Vietnamese refugees in Hong Kong. In May we decided to accept into the United Kingdom a further 468 Vietnamese refugees from Hong Kong over the next two years. We are pursuing our diplomatic campaign to urge other resettlement countries to take more refugees from Hong Kong. We aim to have fully resolved this problem well before 1997.

Hong Kong Futures Exchange

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his answer of 23 November, whether all the 32 firms that are being sued by the Hong Kong Futures Corporation have been suspended from trading on the Hong Kong Futures Exchange; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Yes.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs pursuant to the answer of 23 November, how many firms have been suspended from trading from each of the Hong Kong stock exchange and the Hong Kong futures exchange; and for how long.

Mr. Eggar: Twelve firms have been suspended from the Hong Kong stock exchange and 35 from the Hong Kong futures exchange. The suspensions remain in effect until further notice.

Namibia

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list, for each year since 1979, the initiatives and consultations he has had with other Economic Community and United Nations members on the implementation of independence for Namibia.

Mr. Mellor: Detailed information is not readily available, and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, I can assure the hon. Member that during the period in question we have had regular discussions with our EC partners and other UN member states with the aim of securing implementation of the UN plan for Namibian independence.

Nicaragua

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met his Nicaraguan colleague, Father Miguel D'Escoto-Brockman.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. and learned Friend last met Father Miguel D'Escoto-Brockman at the meeting of the EC, Central American and Contadora Foreign Ministers in Luxembourg in November 1985.

Disarmament

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if a copy of the intermediate range nuclear forces treaty will be made available to hon. and right hon. Members; and if he will make a statement about the implications for the United Kingdom of the version finally agreed.

Mr. Mellor: A copy of the United States/Soviet treaty, once signed, will be made available to the House. Copies of the United Kingdom agreements with the United States and Soviet Union on the arrangements for inspections in the United Kingdom will also be made available once these agreements are signed.

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether, in the light of the fact that, under the proposed intermediate nuclear forces treaty, he will permit foreign observers to inspect military facilities on United Kingdom soil, Her Majesty's Government will (a) be a signatory to any part of the treaty and (b) enjoy reciprocal rights to take part in the teams inspecting facilities in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and United States of America; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The intermediate nuclear forces treaty is a bilateral one between the United States and Soviet Union. We will not be a signatory to any part of the treaty. But we will conclude a separate agreement with the United States concerning the inspection arrangements in this country and a further separate agreement in the form of an exchange of notes with the Soviet Union to safeguard our sovereignty and security. Compliance with the treaty will be entirely a matter for the United States and the Soviet Union; the inspection teams will comprise United States and Soviet personnel.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Mellor: The usual forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present, 12 meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for December.

The Council of Labour and Social Affairs Ministers, which meets on 1 December, will discuss action to combat long-term unemployment; a progress report on the action programmes for the preparation of young people for adult and working life and for the integration of people with disabilities; and article 118A of the treaty of Rome concerning health and safety at work. The Council will consider a common position under the co-operation procedure on the draft directives on benzene and on the proscription of four specified carcinogens. A progress report on the draft directive on exposure limits and a communication on a women's research institute may also be considered.

The Environment Council will meet on 3 December and will discuss emissions from large combustion plants; three draft directives on vehicle emissions; dumping of waste at sea in the light of the recent North sea conference; two separate proposals for the control of the discharge into water of HCB and HCBD (two uncommon but very hazardous list I substances) and chromium. A proposal to establish a notification procedure for the export of dangerous chemicals; a proposal to establish a programme illustrating the link between environmental projects and employment creation; controls on cadmium usage and a proposal to extend the marine pollution information system to inland waterways.

The European Council, which will be held in Copenhagen on 4/5 December, is expected to concentrate on the financial situation of the Community, in particular the reform of the common agricultural policy.

The Economic and Financial Council is expected to meet on 7 December to discuss the Commission's annual report on the economic situation in the Community.

The Transport Council will meet on 7 December. Ministers are expected to continue discussions on the air transport liberalisation package covering fares, capacity, market access and the application of competition rules. Transport infrastructure, summertime, liberalisation of road transport and road haulage issues will be discussed as time permits.

The Industry Council meets on 8 December and will discuss Commission proposals on the future of the EC steel regime.

The Budget Council is expected to meet on 9/10 December to continue discussions on the establishment of a draft budget for 1988.

The Agriculture Council meets on 10/11 December to follow up the recent discussions on agricultural stabilisers. The Council may also discuss beef tariff quotas, quick frozen foods and maximum pesticide residues in cereals, fruit and vegetables.

The Foreign Affairs Council meets on 14/15 December. The agenda will include the proposed Commission amendments concerning the extension of the regulation governing the Community's food aid programme, the 1988 guidelines for the Community's programme of aid to Asia and Latin America, and the content of a Community submission on services in the Uruguay round. Arrangements for a special Community programme to assist poor, heavily indebted African countries that are taking action to adjust the structure of their economies are expected to be finalised. The Council will again consider a regulation laying down the maximum permitted levels of radioactivity in foodstuffs after a nuclear accident, together with a proposal to extend the arrangements governing food imports following the Chernobyl accident. A Co-operation Council under the terms of the EC/Yugoslavia co-operation agreement will also be held during the meeting.

The Fisheries Council is expected to meet on 14-15 December and is likely to discuss total allowable catches and quotas, and relations with third countries. The Council may also discuss amendments to marketing regulations.

The Consumer Council will meet on 18 December to discuss toy safety, unit pricing, integration of consumer protection into other Community policies and consumer participation in setting of standards.

The Research Council will meet on 21 December. The provisional agenda anticipates discussion on the proposals for the next multi-annual programme of the Community's joint research centre (1988-1991). The Council is expected to adopt two programmes, on the RACE (R and D in Advanced Communications Technologies in Europe) (1987-1991) programme and the research and development programme in the field of science and technology for development (1987-1990). It is also expected that the Council will approve common positions on the ESPRIT II programme proposal and the proposed extension to the BRITE programme (industrial technologies).

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any communication from the United States Government, indicating whether the production of United States binary chemical weapons is due to commence;

(2) if he has received any communication from the French Government, indicating whether French binary chemical weapons will be stored outside France;

(3) if he has had any communication from the French Government, indicating whether the production of French binary chemical weapons has begun.

Mr. Eggar: Pursuant to my answer of 24 November, at column 101, following is the corrected version.

We have received no communication from the French Government about the production or storage of French binary chemical weapons.

We understand that the production of United States binary chemical weapons can begin on 17 December.

Loans Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many loans have been made under the loans guarantee scheme; what number of firms in receipt of such loans have failed; and what is the estimated cost of each job created by recipient companies under the schemes.

Mr. Cope: From May 1981 to 31 October 1987, 18,633 guarantees have been issued under the scheme; 6,164 guaranteed loans have ended in default by borrowers. The net Exchequer cost per person leaving the unemployment count as a result of the scheme is estimated at approximately £400. This estimate uses information derived from a review carried out by Robson Rhodes in 1983-84. A further review of the effects of the scheme is currently being undertaken by National Economic Research Associates Ltd. and is expected to be completed in June 1988. The cost figures may be revised in the light of the review.

"Trade Unions and Their Members"

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the responses to the Green Paper "Trade Unions and Their Members" were in favour of the proposal that the provisions of the Trade Union Act 1984 should be extended to the election of all general secretaries, presidents, and members of union principal executive committees.

Mr. Nicholls: 24 of the 67 comments received on the Green Paper proposal were in favour of extending the statutory election requirements to cover all members of trade union principal executive committees, general secretaries and presidents.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the responses to the Green Paper "Trade Unions and Their Members" were in favour of the proposal that there should be a statutory provision made for members of a union to be entitled to inspect the current accounting records of that union and to be accompanied by a professional adviser.

Mr. Nicholls: Of 48 comments on the proposal to give trade union members and their professional advisers a statutory right of access to their union's accounts, 32 were in favour.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many of the responses to the Green Paper "Trade Unions and Their Members" were in favour of the proposal that there should be a right for all union members not to be expelled or otherwise disciplined for refusing or failing to take industrial action.

Mr. Nicholls: 16 of the 67 comments received on the Green Paper proposal were in favour of giving trade union members protection against disciplinary action for refusing or failing to strike or take other industrial action.

Redundancy

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will seek to amend employment protection legislation so as to remove the requirement on an employer to hold full consultation procedures with employees where 10 or more employees request redundancy rather than temporary lay-off; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government have no plans to amend the legislation on redundancy consultation. The present provisions which are contained in section 99 of the Employment Protection Act 1975 implement EC directive 75/129 on collective redundancies.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the review of the industrial language training service will be completed; when he will begin consulting other interested bodies, including local authorities, over the future of the industrial language training service; and when he expects to announce a decision on the future funding of the industrial language training service.

Mr. Cope: In the light of the issues raised in the review of the industrial language training service and subsequent consultations, I am considering its management and funding after the current financial year. I have agreed to the request of the local authority associations that I meet them shortly to hear their views before reaching a decision. We consider all representations from interested bodies about the work of the Department or of the Manpower Services Commission.

Mr. Cope: Instructions have been issued for the offices concerned to alert staff to the consequences of the decision; to explain the action being taken centrally to establish the extent to which the decision affected other redundancies within the British Shipbuilders Group; to arrange for the issue of questionnaires to claimants who may have been affected by the decision; to give advice on how to deal with completed questionnaires and establish whether payment under the provisions of the Social Security Act 1975 was due; and to advise on the conditions to be applied and procedure to be followed in considering special payments to certain claimants affected by the decision who do not qualify for benefit under the Social Security Act 1975.

The latest information for local authorities relates to 1985, for which we know of about 250 informations laid under the Health and Safety at Work Act, and 200 under other associated legislation. For 1985, the number of convictions was about 420 in total. No information is collected on the average fine.

Job Training Scheme (Dundee)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many places have been available on the job training scheme in the Dundee area for each week since it started; how many of these were occupied; and what was the weekly drop-out rate.

Mr. Lang: I have been asked to reply. Information is not available in the form requested. The number of new job training scheme places contracted in Dundee to March 1988 (including the pilot period from November 1986 to March 1987) total 1,700 of which 649 places have been occupied and 525 people have left before completing the scheme.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up a public inquiry into the way in which the Risley remand centre is being run, with particular reference to the suicides which have occurred there in the recent past.

Mr. John Patten: No, but Risley is to be inspected next year by Her Majesty's Inspector of Prisons, and we shall be studying his report with particular care. Each incident of suicide is carefully analysed to see whether there are any lessons to be learned for prevention.

Fire Services

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the level of resources devoted to the fire services.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received applications from six of the seven fire and civil defence authorities to have their expenditure levels for 1988-89, which my right hon. Friend announced last July, re-determined at a higher amount. In addition to meeting delegations from two fire and civil defence authorities, my noble Friend the Minister of State has seen a delegation of hon. Members representing west Yorkshire constituencies to discuss the provision for that authority. In addition, we receive from time to time representations from individuals and organisations about a variety of matters relating to fire service resources.

Registration

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have been instigated under regulation 29 of The Representation of the People Regulations 1986 in respect of failure to complete registration form A.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Regulation 29 of The Representation of the People Regulations 1986 came into effect on 11 July 1986. The information held centrally, which may be incomplete, shows no prosecutions under regulation 29 in 1986.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were (a) the categories of and (b) the numbers of individual doses of drugs administered to inmates at Her Majesty's prison Holloway in the latest available year.

Mr. John Patten: The following information relates to the financial year 1986-87.

Number of doses of medicine administered to inmates of Her Majesty's prison, Holloway

	Number
(1) Medicines available without prescription in the community	120,844
(2) Psychotropic drugs (ie. antidepressants, sedatives and tranquillisers)	77,841
(3) Hypnotic drugs	21,911
(4) Drugs acting on the central nervous system other than those shown in (2) and (3)	28,237
(5) Other drugs and medicines	132,079

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of inmates in Her Majesty's prison Holloway are imprisoned for drug-related offences.

Mr. John Patten: Information on offences is not complete. However, on 30 June 1987 about 30 per cent. of the sentenced population of Holloway prison was known to be serving sentences for drugs offences.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total cost of drugs dispensed to inmates of Her Majesty's prison Holloway.

Mr. John Patten: Information in the form requested is not available. In the financial year 1986-87 the cost of procuring medicines and other pharmaceutical items, including small items of equipment for surgical and other medical uses, was £58,749.

Sex Shops

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to define the proportion of total value of sales by a shop, other than a licensed sex shop, for it to be regarded as sufficiently significant for the sex shop licensing provisions to be applied.

Mr. Renton: We do not believe that such legislation would be helpful.

Mr. Peter Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from local authorities on the increase in the number of shops, other than licensed sex shops, selling sex toys; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: None.

Rampton Hospital

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many patients released from Rampton hospital since 1979 have committed crimes of violence and have been returned to safe custody; and what is the total number released for each year since 1979.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The only information readily available is that during the period 1971-80 there were 77 restricted patients conditionally discharged from Rampton hospital. Of these, four were convicted within five years of their discharge of a further serious offence and given a prison sentence. None were given a further hospital order (with or without restrictions). Information on the number of restricted patients released from Rampton hospital is as follows:

Sidney John Manley

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations were made to his Department by Bradford probation service regarding Sidney John Manley.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In October 1986 the west Yorkshire probation service sought the views of the Home Office on the possibility of recalling Mr. Manley to hospital following breach of the conditions of his probation order. It was decided that recall to hospital was not justified.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, in the light of the conviction of Sidney John Manley for manslaughter, he will institute a review of release procedures from Rampton hospital and other secure hospitals to take into account representations by patients to stay inside such prisons rather than accept release; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A review was conducted earlier this year of the handling of Mr. Manley's case. As a result, we were satisfied that on the basis of information available at the time (which included Mr. Manley's views on his discharge to a hostel) it was right to agree to his conditional discharge from Rampton in November 1981. We were also satisfied that at no time subsequently was Mr. Manley regarded as a sufficient risk to the public to justify recalling him, under the Mental Health Act, to hospital. We are, nevertheless, looking at the case again to see if there are any lessons to be learned.

Crossbows

Sir Gerard Vaughan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to introduce legislation to bring crossbows under similar control as firearms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Crossbows Act 1987, which came into effect this year on 15 July, introduced controls on the sale of crossbows to, and the purchase and unsupervised possession of crossbows by, persons under the age of 17. We shall continue to keep under close review the need for any additional measures.

PRIME MINISTER

South Africa

The Prime Minister: No. The EC Commission does not consider that the measure contravenes any financial rules. It will permit disposals of surplus butter, which would otherwise not have been possible, without adding to the immediate pressures on the Community budget.

EEC (Shipbuilding Intervention Fund)

Q51. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to propose a review of the criteria governing eligibility for assistance through the EEC shipbuilding intervention fund; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. Only in very exceptional circumstances, in particular where vital defence interests were at stake, could intervention fund support be available to any of the yards recently disposed of by British Shipbuilders.

Q58. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to investigate the alleged passing of information from the security services to the News of the World regarding the suspension of a security pass for the research assistant of the hon. Member for Islington, North.

The Prime Minister: None.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list all official visits made by Ministers to the area of the London Docklands development corporation since May 1979.

The Prime Minister: Ministers have made a large number of visits to London's docklands. Not all are organised by the London Docklands development corporation, and no central list is therefore available. Visits during 1987 have included the following:

Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Department of Trade and Industry (Mr. Trippier).

27 February 1987

18 November 1987
Under-Secretary of State, Department of the Environment (Mr. Trippier).

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if there has been any change of policy since May 1979 regarding the export of equipment and know-how to make weapons grade plutonium to other countries; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 27 October 1987 at column 217.

Saladin Security and Keenie Meenie Services

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister whether the United Kingdom Government has entered into any contract with (a) Saladin Security and (b) Keenie Meenie Services since 1979; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Details of contracts placed by other Government Departments are not recorded centrally. Records for my office are readily available only from April 1984. No contracts have been placed with, or payment made to, Saladin Security Ltd., or Keenie Meenie Services Ltd. by or on behalf of my office during that period.

As far as KMS is concerned, I also refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers given to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 10 March 1987 and 17 March 1987, and to the hon. Member for West Bromwich, West (Miss Boothroyd) on 24 March 1987 at column 102.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Prime Minister on what occasions since 1979 representatives of Her Majesty's Government discussed the use of Keenie Meenie Services or Saladin Security with Colonel Oliver North; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to answer questions about the details of discussions which may have taken place with foreign Governments.

Engagements

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 December.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 December.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 December.

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 1 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the Prime Minister of Denmark.

ENERGY

Electricity Industry

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the level of investment and depreciation by the Central Electricity Generating Board in each of the years since 1975; and how much of the investment programme is funded by the depreciation programme.

Mr. Parkinson: The purpose of the depreciation provision is to write down the value of existing assets over their estimated useful lives. The CEGB has not created a fund for future investment. Depreciation does contribute to the CEGB's cash flow but as the table demonstrates, the level of depreciation does not determine the rate of investment or vice versa.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much of the depreciation fund of the electricity supply industry will be used towards the cost of the investment programme to offset the replacement of existing assets.

Mr. Parkinson: Depreciation has been provided by the industry to write off existing assets over their estimated useful lives. The electricity supply industry does not have a depreciation fund which is available for future investment.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when his Department last surveyed the energy efficiency of the lighting of his Department's buildings; and what were the conclusions.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department regularly monitors the efficiency of the lighting in our main building where we are the principal tenant; savings attributable to this cannot be identified separately from the overall savings in electricity consumption, which are 7 per cent. in 1986-87.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimate his Department has made of (a) the gross and net expenditure on the fast breeder reactor programme in 1986-87, and (b) expenditure on fusion research in 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Expenditure by the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on fast reactor and fusion research in 1986-87 was £120 million (£109 million net of electricity receipts from the Dounreay protoype fast reactor) and £42 million respectively. The Department of Energy's share of this expenditure under the 1986-87 programme letters was £105 million on fast reactor and £22 million on fusion.

Electricity Supply Industry

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy, in the forthcoming plans to privatise the electricity supply industry, to ensure that the owner-operators of new private power companies include a component of (a) electricity generated by renewable means such as wind, wave or tidal power and (b) incentives for electricity saving technologies in their operating licence.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend is considering a range of options for the future of the privatised electricity industry and for the regulatory arrangements which will be needed. No decisions have yet been taken.

Collieries (Wage Earners)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the number of wage earners on colliery books for each year since 1979 and give the most recent figure available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I understand from British Coal Corporation that the number of wage earners on colliery books for each financial year since 1979 and up to 21 November 1987 are as follows:

	Number
31 March 1979	232,398
29 March 1980	233,163
28 March 1981	224,841
27 March 1982	212,843
26 March 1983	202,669
31 March 1984	181,083
30 March 1985	171,379
29 March 1986	138,490
28 March 1987	109,944
21 November 1987	104,079

SCOTLAND

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those sites where the dumping of hazardous waste is authorised; and what wastes are involved at each site.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Twenty-three landfill waste disposal sites authorised to accept significant quantities of hazardous wastes are listed in the table. The main wastes involved are indicated. Other sites may be authorised by the 56 Scottish waste disposal authorities, the district and islands councils, to accept hazardous wastes but under conditions which limit their significance.

Tobacco Industry

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent employment has declined in the tobacco manufacturing industry in Scotland since 1979.

Mr. Lang: Employment in the tobacco industry in Scotland fell from 3,200 in 1978 to 2,800 in 1981. Estimates from the 1984 census of employment cannot be disclosed for reasons of confidentiality.

Education Expenditure

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of spending in (i) Strathclyde and (ii) Scotland as a whole on (a) primary education, (b) secondary education, (c) further education and (d) nursery education was met by Government grant and what proportion was met by local authorities, in 1979 and 1987, or the latest available date.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible to provide a breakdown as requested. Government grant in respect of local authority relevant expenditure, aggregate exchequer grant, is composed of specific grants and the rate support grant. There are no specific grants available to finance any one of the broad categories of expenditure specified. RSG, by far the largest element of AEG, is paid in support of local authorities' revenue generally and is not hypothecated to individual services. It is not therefore possible to express RSG as a proportion of expenditure on particular services.

European Council Meetings

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on how many occasions since his present appointment he has attended the European Council of (a) Agriculture and (b) Fisheries Ministers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Negotiations at meetings of the European Councils are conducted between member states. The United Kingdom is represented at Agriculture Council meetings by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. At Fisheries Council meetings the United Kingdom is represented by the Minister of State for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Scottish Office Minister with responsibility for fisheries.

Travel Grants

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the average amount of travel grant paid by local authorities to (a) all full-time Scottish students in receipt of grants and (b) those full-time Scottish students in receipt of grants who submit a claim.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information about travel grants paid to students by local authorities is not held centrally.

Assured Tenancies

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment he has made of the combined effect on rent levels of the assured tenancy proposals in the Scottish housing White Paper and the changes in housing benefit proposed from April.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Under assured tenancies, rents for most new private lettings will be freely negotiated between landlord and tenant, and will thus usually be at market levels. Housing benefit will continue to be available, but one of the objectives of the revised housing benefit scheme is to strengthen the provisions that ensure that benefit is not used to finance rents that are set at unreasonable levels.

Council House Sales

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many council houses have been sold to tenants at discounted prices which were less than the outstanding loan charges on those houses; what is the total cost of this shortfall to local authorities, and what arrangements have been made to compensate them; and if he will make a statement on the financial consequences of the further provisions proposed in paragraph 3.11 of his recent White Paper on housing.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Information on the relationship between selling price and outstanding debt is not held centrally. At present, provision is made under the right-to-buy legislation for discount to be restricted in certain instances where the discounted selling price would fall below the amount of debt outstanding. Any disadvantage to authorities by amending these provisions, as the White Paper proposes, would be outweighed by the general benefits accruing to authorities from council house sales.

Housing Finance

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the bids which have been made to his Department by local authorities for housing capital allocations for 1988-89, showing the figures for bids and final allocations of borrowing consent for 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Bids for housing capital allocations for 1988-89, which were due to be submitted by 9 November, have not yet been received by the Scottish Development Department from all housing authorities. Bids for 1987-88 and the related final gross capital allocations, issued in March 1987, are given in the table.

Homeless Persons (Housing)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications for housing under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act have been made as a result of mortgage defaults or arrears in each of the last four years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The numbers of applicant households who quoted a court order for mortgage default as a reason for the loss or threatened loss of their last or present accommodation are as follows:

	Number
1984-85	508
1985-86	831
1986-87	[1]808

[1] Provisional figure.

This category of applicant household was not separately identified prior to March 1984.

Legal Aid

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce amendments to the legal aid regulations to restore the principle that legal aid claims should automatically be retrospectively granted for the conduct of an appeal to a higher court where such an appeal is successful.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This is one of several aspects of the legal aid regime on which I have received representations. I hope to reach a view on all the proposals made to me before the end of the year.

Rating Reform

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total cost to his Department of preparing and printing (a) the pamphlet "The New Community Charge — How Will it Work For You" and (b) the newspaper advertisements concerning the community charge.

Mr. Rifkind: The cost to my Department of preparing and printing the newspaper advertisements and pamphlet for the current community charge information campaign is:

Advertisements	105,600
Leaflet (initial 20,000 copies)	2,627
Agents production fees	13,660

These figures do not include VAT.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in which newspapers and magazines he intends to publish his advertisements concerning the community charge, on how many occasions he intends to publish them; and what is the estimated cost of this advertising.

Mr. Rifkind: A public information advertising campaign is currently appearing in the following national, Scottish daily, Sunday and local weekly newspapers. A list of these is appended. Advertisements will appear in nine national, Scottish daily and Sunday newspapers on a total of 19 occasions, and in 119 local weekly newspapers on a total of 125 occasions. The total cost will be £105,600 plus VAT.

Housing Statistics

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing for the latest date at which figures are available the numbers and percentages of Scottish households which are (a) owner-occupied, (b) rented from local authorities, (c) rented from the Scottish Special Housing Association, (d) rented from other housing associations, (e) rented from private sector landlords and (f) part of a co-operative scheme.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Quarterly information on tenure of stock of dwellings is published in table 2.24 of Part 2 of "Housing and Construction Statistics", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mortgage Arrears

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of home owners in Scotland who were (a) in arrears with mortgage payments or (b) faced with building society repossession of their home in each year since 1979.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not available.

Regional Development

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the annual expenditure for each year since 1972 on industrial support and development in Scotland; and how much of it was on (a) regional development grant and (b) regional selective assistance.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 26 November 1987]: Gross expenditure on activities which are now classified to the industry programme of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is set out below for each year since 1974-75; the information requested is not available for earlier years. EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Inner London Education Authority

13. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received concerning the break-up of the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: About 5,000.

Association of Metropolitan Authorities

18. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next plans to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss the financing of education ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have regular meetings with the local authority associations to discuss matters relating to education provision. I last met them on 21 October to discuss the Government's plans for local authority spending on education in 1988-89 and my proposals for education reform. No further meeting has been arranged.

Polytechnic Designations

19. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about further designations as polytechnics ; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received 14 representations since the publication in April of our White Paper on higher education, advocating the designation of six different institutions as polytechnics.

Further and Higher Education Institutions

20. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make additional capital resources available to further and higher education institutions for accommodation and equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Further to the Autumn Statement's substantial increases in the resources for education, I can now announce that capital allocations to local authorities in England for accommodation and equipment for further and higher education will be £50 million in 1988-89—an increase of £7 million or 16 per cent. over the corresponding figure for 1987-88.

Rural Schools

21. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will initiate a study on the effects of his Department's opt-out proposals on the use of schools in rural areas as community centres.

Mr. Dunn: No. Where a school which allows its premises to be used by the wider community seeks to opt out from local authority control there is no reason why community access should not be preserved.

Scottish Universities

22. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the University Grants Committee to discuss the funding of Scottish universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: No. The Government fully support the University Grants Committee's more objective approach for allocating recurrent grant which applies the same criteria to all universities. The impact on individual universities has varied depending on their previous funding level and on their research record. Three of the eight Scottish universities received increases in basic grant for 1987-88 above the Great Britain average.

National Curriculum

23. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received about the proposed national curriculum.

48. Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning proposals for a national curriculum.

56. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received over the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer hon. Members and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo).

49. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has made any further analysis of the resource implications of the proposals contained in the consultative document "National Curriculum 5-16"; and if he will make a statement.

74. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has made any further analysis of the resource implications of his national curriculum proposals; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced on 3 November at column 645 that about £65 million over three years is to be provided to fund work in support of the Government's proposals for a national curriculum, including the work of the National Curriculum Council and the School Examinations and Assessment Council. The Government will also support the development of the national curriculum through education support grants and through training grants for teachers. The overall pupil-teacher ratio for 1987, at 17·3:1, is at its lowest ever level. The Government's expenditure plans allow for a further improvement in the pupil-teacher ratio to 17:1 by 1990. It will be for local education authorities and schools, within the planned level of resources, to ensure that staffing, as well as spending on support services, books and equipment, are directed to achieve the national policy; our aim is to achieve better value for money from the resources already being provided. Any particular requirements which emerge as local education authorities and governing bodies put the proposals into practice will fall to be considered in future public expenditure discussions.

Secondary Education (Epping Forest)

24. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science why, in view of Her Majesty's Government's intended changes in the education system, designed to give more choice and influence to parents, he accepted in advance of those changes proposals of the Essex education authority for the reorganisation of secondary education in Epping forest, which involved the ending of single sex education in the maintained sector there; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: These proposals were made under the Education Act 1980 and my right hon. Friend carried out his statutory duty to consider them under that legislation. He concluded that on balance the advantages they offered outweighed their disadvantages, including the loss of single sex provision.

Higher Education

25. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in respect of the proposed changes in higher education.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has received many responses to the Government's consultations on its higher education policies, including the changes proposed in the current Education Reform Bill.

"Strategy for the Science Base"

26. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the "Strategy for the Science Base" discussion document.

58. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the "Strategy for the Science Base" discussion document.

Mr. Jackson: We have received 231 responses in reply to my right hon. Friend's invitation for comments on the document.

Home Economics

27. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provisions will be made for the teaching of home economics when the new curriculum comes into force.

67. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provision is being made for the teaching of home economics after the national core curriculum comes into effect.

Mrs. Rumbold: Home economics is not one of the foundation subjects proposed in the national curriculum provisions of the Education Reform Bill currently before the House. However, we expect that some elements of home economics will be taught through the foundation subjects, particularly science, technology and art. Schools will be free additionally to devote to home economics some of the time which will not be required for the foundation subjects.

Inner London

28. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the consultation paper dealing with the organisation of education in inner London; and if he will make a statement.

43. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the consultation paper dealing with the organisation of education in inner London from people in (a) Lewisham and (b) each of the other inner London education authority authorities; and if he will make a statement.

51. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about his consultative document dealing with the reorganisation of education in inner London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer hon. Members to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn). Information about the borough of residence of respondents could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Ethnic Minorities (Swann Report)

29. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to provide additional resources to implement the recommendations of the Swann report on ethnic minorities in education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: In the financial year 1988-89, a further £1·4 million of expenditure will be supported under the education support grant programme for pilot projects related to educational needs in a multi-ethnic society. Training in the planning and delivery of the curriculum in a multi-ethnic society will continue to be a national priority area for school teachers under the local education authority training grants scheme. The scheme also includes a new national priority area for further education teachers. A total of £2 million of expenditure will be supported in 1988-89. Other programmes will continue to take account of the needs of ethnic minorities as identified in the Swann report.

Education Reform Bill

31. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many replies he has now received to his consultative papers on the Education Reform Bill; and how many of these have expressed support for his proposals on (a) the allocation of time to foundation subjects, (b) testing and attainment targets and (c) grant-maintained schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: By 27 November, we had received 18,500 responses to the various consultation documents. Many respondents have commented in some detail on one proposal, and replies could not readily be classified as requested by the hon. Member.

36. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the position under the forthcoming Education Reform Bill regarding children with special needs at schools applying for grant maintained status.

Mr. Dunn: The introduction of grant-maintained schools will not prejudice the integration of children with special educational needs into mainstream schools. Any schools making provision for pupils with special needs will be required to continue to do so on becoming grant-maintained, in keeping with the Government's policy that they should not change their character in the course of attaining that status. My right hon. Friend will approve the admission arrangements for grant-maintained schools, and there will be arrangements for dealing with complaints if parents feel that these policies are not being complied with. The grant to be received by a grant-maintained school will be equivalent to the funding that it would have received, had it remained with its LEA. Thus, additional costs incurred in providing for any children with special needs will be taken fully into account.

75. Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to delay any further decisions on applications from local education authorities for major changes in the local organisation of secondary education and the approval of new tertiary colleges until after his projected Education Reform Bill has received the Royal Assent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: No. Where statutory proposals for school reorganisation come before my right hon. Friend for decision, he is obliged under existing legislation to consider them on their individual merits. The Department's circular 3/87 makes it clear that my right hon. Friend wishes LEAs to continue to put forward proposals for school reorganisation.

Association of County Councils

30. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations have been made by the Association of County Councils on his consultation papers.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Association of County Councils has provided responses to all the main consultation documents. Copies of these responses have been placed in the Library. In addition, the association has written to my right hon. Friend about aspects of the consultation process.

32. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next plans to meet the Association of County Councils to discuss financial provision for education; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has regular meetings with the local authority associations to discuss matters relating to education provision. He last met them on 21 October to discuss the Government's plans for local authority spending on education in 1988-89 and our proposals for education reform. No further meeting has been arranged.

University Technicians (Pay)

33. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the pay of university technicians; and if he will make a statement.

71. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the pay of university technicians; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I met representatives of the Association of Technical and Managerial Staffs on 13 October. The Government are not involved in the pay negotiations of university technicians. It is for the universities to negotiate a settlement from within their resources in the light of their overall priorities and having regard to the need to recruit, retain and motivate appropriate staff.

Education Reform

34. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Green Paper for the reform of maintained further education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the Green Paper for the reform of maintained further education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We have had some 350 responses to the consultation paper on the reform of maintained further education, including responses from most local education authorities and many colleges and organisations, as well as from individuals. There have also been meetings with the national bodies most concerned. We have taken careful note of the suggestions that were offered. Some are reflected in the provisions in the Bill now introduced, and others will influence the further development of the proposals.

Schools (Local Authority Control)

35. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many (a) individuals and (b) organisations have responded in favour of the proposals to allow schools to opt out of local authority control.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received over 900 written responses from organisations and individuals to his proposals for grant-maintained schools. Many of these contained detailed and constructive comments upon particular aspects of the initiative, but could not readily be categorised as either supporting or opposing the proposals as a whole.

Universities (Recruitment of Women)

37. Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to promote recruitment and promotion prospects for women within British universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Universities are autonomous institutions, and the recruitment and promotion of staff are matters for them, within the law.

Academic Freedom

38. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has received to the proposals on academic freedom in universities and other colleges.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has had to his proposals on academic freedom in universities and other colleges.

Mr. Jackson: We have had representations to the effect that our proposals to remove tenure might weaken academic freedom. I refer the hon. Members to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dorset, North (Mr. Baker) on 20 November, which explains how the provisions in the Education Reform Bill will in fact strengthen the protection of academic freedom.

Teesside (City Technology College)

39. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made towards the establishment of a city technology college on Teesside.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt).

O-Level Passes

40. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the average number of O-level passes in the upper grades achieved by pupils in the fifth years of grammar schools, independent schools and comprehensive schools, respectively, in the most recent current period for which figures are available.

Mr. Dunn: Information on the examination achievements in the fifth year is not available, but that for school leavers is shown in the following table:

School Leavers, England 1985-86
Number of higher[1] grade GCE O level or CSE passes per leaver

Type of school[2]	Number
Grammar	6·9
Independent	6·8
Comprehensive (including sixth form colleges)	2·3

Notes:
[1] Higher grades are O level grades A-C and CSE grade 1.
[2] The type of school attended immediately before leaving.
Source: School Leavers Survey.
Note: Data subject to sampling error.

Students (Financial Support)

41. Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proposals he is considering for student financial support.

Mr. Jackson: The Government are conducting a general review of arrangements for the financial support of undergraduates in Great Britain. The review's terms of reference require it to have regard to sources of support which would allow the removal of students from the social security system, including the case for a system involving loans as well as grants, and the contribution of sponsorship.

Aberdeen University (Funding)

42. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the criteria used by the University Grants Committee in its funding plans for Aberdeen university.

Mr. Jackson: In 1986-87, the University Grants Committee introduced a new method for allocating recurrent grant. This applies the same criteria to all universities, wherever they are located, and is based on standard units of resource for teaching and explicit selectivity in the funding of research. This more objective approach has led to Aberdeen university's receiving below average increases in basic grant. The university is in discussion with the UGC about the careful planning needed for the transition to the new funding levels.

Tertiary Education

44. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to encourage the growing trend toward tertiary education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: It is for local education authorities in the first instance to consider how to organise school provision in their areas. The Department's circular 3/87 makes clear that my right hon. Friend neither requires nor rules out any one pattern of organisation.

Expenditure

45. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was spent on education in 1979; and what is his latest estimate of outturn in 1987-88.

Mrs. Rumbold: Public expenditure on education within the responsibility of my Department was £8,605 million in 1979-80. The estimated outturn for 1987-88 is £16,512 million. This represents an increase of 11 per cent. in real terms.

Polytechnics and Colleges (Funding)

46. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional resources will be made available in 1988-89 to facilitate the transition from local authority to polytechnics and colleges funding council control of those institutions named in the White Paper "Meeting The Challenge".

61. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what additional resources will be made available in 1988-89 to facilitate the transition from local authority to polytechnics and colleges funding council control of those institutions named in the White Paper "Meeting The Challenge".

Mr. Jackson: In his statement on 3 November about plans for expenditure on education and science in 1988-89, my right hon. Friend announced that £9 million would be made available in that year to enable polytechnics and colleges to assume responsibility for managing their own affairs.

Testing and Assessment

47. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received in response to his consultation document about testing and assessment.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the effects of competition and testing in the schooling of children.

Mrs. Rumbold: By 20 November, some 8,800 individuals and organisations had responded to the Government's consultation document on the national curriculum. Many of these have expressed a variety of views about, among other issues, the place of testing and assessment in the national curriculum.

City Technology Colleges

50. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a further statement on the progress towards establishing city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Stoke on Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher).

Contract Researchers

52. Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the Advisory Board for Research Councils on the current employment conditions of contract researchers.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has had none. However, I have agreed to meet the Association of Researchers in Medicine and Science to discuss its concerns on this issue.

University Grants Committee

54. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next proposes to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee to discuss the future of university research; and if he will make a statement.

63. Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he plans to meet representatives of the University Grants Committee in order to discuss future fundings for universities in teaching; and if he will make a statement.

68. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee; and what matters he expects to discuss.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I frequently meet the chairman of the University Grants Committee in the course of normal business, when matters including university funding and research are discussed.

Foreign Languages

55. Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to make available additional resources for the teaching of foreign languages; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend plans to make available education support grants to some local education authorities in England in 1988-89, to support pilot work on the diversification of first foreign language provision in secondary schools. He will be considering how education support grants and grants for in-service training can best be used in future years to support the introduction of the national curriculum, including foreign languages.

Parent-Teacher Associations

57. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next proposes to meet representatives of parent-teacher associations.

Mr. Dunn: My ministerial colleagues and I meet representatives of parent-teacher associations from time to time. My hon. Friend the Minister of State has agreed to meet the National Confederation of Parent-Teacher Associations on Monday 11 January.

Grant-aided Schools

59. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further representations he has received about his proposals for grant-aided schools.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Welwyn Hatfield (Mr. Evans).

Religious Education

60. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to extend the obligation to teach religious education to non-maintained schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: It would be wrong to impose such a requirement in schools which are independent foundations. It is a matter for the judgment of parents whether curricula offered by independent schools meet their requirements with regard to religious education.

Church Leaders

62. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent meetings he has had with church leaders; and what subjects were discussed.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend and other ministerial colleagues have, over the past four months, had six meetings with representatives of the Churches; other meetings have been held at official level. The subjects discussed have included almost all the proposals now embodied in the Education Reform Bill.

Pupil-Teacher Ratios

64. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will indicate the change that has taken place in teacher-to-pupil ratios since 1979.

Mr. Dunn: The overall pupil-teacher ratio in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England has fallen from 18·9 in 1979 to 17·3 in 1987.

72. Mr. Andrew Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the latest figures for teacher-to-pupil ratios in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1987, the pupil-teacher ratios in maintained primary and secondary schools in England were 21·9 and 15·6 respectively.

Truancy

65. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to monitor levels of truancy.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer which I gave on 26 November.

Schools (Business Links)

66. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent discussions he has had with employer organisations about business links with schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: I and my officials are in regular contact with a wide range of employers and employer organisations. We aim to help them to decide how they can contribute most effectively, having regard to both educational needs and company priorities.

University Veterinary Schools

69. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there are any plans to reorganise universities veterinary schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: As one of a series of subject rationalisation reviews, the University Grants Committee has established a working party on veterinary under the chairmanship of Sir Ralph Riley FRS which is to make recommendations for the committee's consideration.

Science

70. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to make available additional resources for the teaching of science subjects; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is supporting expenditure of £8·3 million in 1987-88 through education support grants to improve the effectiveness of science and technology education in primary schools. This is planned to rise to £8·8 million in 1988-89. The Government are also supporting expenditure of £5·5 million in 1987-88 through the LEA training grants scheme towards in-service training for science teachers. In 1988-89 support for science in-service training will be £5 million and in addition the Government are targeting up to £4 million in 1988-89 for retraining courses for teachers in the shortage subjects of science, maths and CDT.

The Government have taken a number of initiatives to improve the supply of teachers in shortage subjects, including physics and CDT. These initiatives include:

£5 million to higher education institutions for new types of training provision.

Nearly £2 millon in bursaries to trainee teachers.

£0·5 million on other initiatives, including a series of BBC training programmes for serving science teachers.

We are also supporting work at the Open university to develop distance learning packs to assist in the teaching of physics and mathematics.

Shortage Subjects

73. Mrs. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to increase the number of teachers in shortage subjects in primary and secondary schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: In the primary phase, where teachers are expected to teach the full primary curriculum, the teaching of maths, science and CDT is being strengthened by Government support for in-service training. In addition, certain teacher training institutions are developing courses with maths and science as subject specialisms.

In secondary schools a number of measures have been taken to improve supply. These include the introduction of a £1,250 bursary scheme, better training opportunities, and the setting up of the Teaching as Career Unit to promote a career in teaching.

Further details are in a DES bulletin "Action on Teacher Shortages: One Year On," which I have placed in the Library.

These measures have made an impact with applications for initial teacher training well up on previous years. Actual recruitment figures will become available shortly.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many secondary school teachers of (a) mathematics, (b) physics and (c) craft, design and technology ceased to work within the maintained sector in the academic years 1984-85, 1985-86, and 1986-87; whether he will list this information by economic region; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information for 1985-86 and 1986-87 is not yet available. The numbers of secondary school graduate teachers who left teaching service in the public sector during the 1984-85 financial year, whose first named subject of qualification (other than education) was mathematics or physics, are as follows[1]:

Region	Graduates (including BEds) in Mathematics	Physics
North	42	21
Yorkshire and Humberside	66	28
North West	70	35
East Midlands	47	28
West Midlands	66	33
East Anglia	20	12
Greater London	144	54
Other South East	169	74
South West	68	29
Total England	692	314

[1] Figures for non-graduates by subject, including Craft, Design and Technology are not available.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the number of applications for post-graduate certificate of education courses in (a) mathematics, (b) physics, (c) craft, design and technology for the academic years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of applications for PGCE secondary courses in England and Wales in these subjects was:

Subject	Applications for courses in academic year 1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Mathematics	1,502	1,234	1,140
Physics	695	535	582
CDT	172	169	239

Note: Figures on applications for PGCE primary courses are not disaggregated by subject.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students on post-graduate certificate of education courses in the present academic year are taking (a) mathematics, (b) physics or, (c) craft, design and technology as their main subject.

Mrs. Rumbold: The principal findings of the Department of Education and Science's survey of this year's recruitment to initial teacher training, including PGCE secondary courses with main specialisms in these subjects, will be available very shortly.

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students on post-graduate certificate of education courses in the academic years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 took (a) mathematics, (b) physics or (c) craft, design and technology as their main subject.

Mrs. Rumbold: The number of students on PGCE secondary courses in England and Wales in these subjects was:

Subject	Academic year 1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Mathematics	801	696	741
Physics	408	255	341
CDT	81	93	159

Note: Figures on students admitted to PGCE primary courses are not disaggregated by subject.

GCSE

76. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether there are any local education authorities now making representations to his Department about their state of preparedness for the forthcoming general certificate of secondary education examinations; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations from local education authorities on this matter.

The Government recognise that successful implementation of the GCSE requires continuing commitment from authorities and the education service in general. My right hon. Friend has demonstrated the Government's own continuing commitment in our expenditure plans for 1988-89 which allow for some £87 million local authority expenditure on GCSE non-teaching costs. As in 1987-88, the Government are providing as much as the local authorities say they need. It is for local authorities to ensure that the available resources are targeted on priority needs.

Undergraduates

78. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has plans to introduce mandatory awards for part-time undergraduates on the same basis as awards for full-time undergraduates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's review of student support is considering the possibility of making some form of support available for part-time undergraduate students.

MENCAP

79. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet MENCAP and other voluntary organisations to discuss conductive education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has no plans to do so. He has not received a request for such a meeting from MENCAP or any other voluntary organisation. I met representatives of the group Rapid Action for Conductive Education (RACE) on 29 October and am ready to consider requests for a meeting from other organisations.

Save British Science

80. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards the funding of research in the light of the speech by Sir James Lighthill FRS at the first annual general meeting of Save British Science, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will provide additional funds earmarked to enable universities to appoint new young people to their staff.

Mr. Jackson: The Government's policy for research is set out in Cmnd 9849, Cm 114 and Cm 185. We are committed to maintaining and enhancing the strength and quality of the science base. To this end, we are seeking to encourage greater concentration and selectivity of research activities, closer and better working with industry and commerce, more funding from private sector sources, better management yielding greater value for money, and increased flexibility enabling faster responses to new scientific opportunities. I was pleased to see that in his speech Sir James Lighthill was broadly supportive of these objectives. As regards new appointments, I announced on 3 November the provision of additional funds for universities, including £155 million over three years for a targeted programme of restructuring, in which some "new blood" appointments will feature.

Indiscipline

81. Mr. Speed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy towards indiscipline in schools, in the light of the report on indiscipline in schools prepared by the Professional Association of Teachers and the Daily Express, a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will have discussions with teachers' unions, education authorities and parents' organisations with a view to taking effective steps to tackle the problem.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend deplores any violent behaviour in schools, and urges schools to take positive action to tackle the problem. The Education (No. 2) Act 1986 will strengthen the authority of head teachers and governing bodies — which in future will include more parents — by giving them direct responsibility for maintaining discipline.

Sports Injuries (Pupils)

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department has any system for monitoring the incidence and frequency of injuries to school pupils taking part in sports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My Department does not collect these figures but monitors the general incidence of injuries. Educational establishments, as places of employment, are covered by the Reporting of Injuries, Diseases and Dangerous Occurrences Regulations 1985 (RIDDOR) made under the Health and Safety at Work Act, etc. 1974. Local education authorities and other education employers are thereby required to provide the Health and Safety Executive, with which my Department works closely, with written details of specified major injuries sustained by persons (including pupils) for whose activities they are responsible, within seven days of an accident occurring.

This legislation is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment.

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mrs. Rumbold: None at present. I understand that British-made recycled paper suitable for general stationery purposes is available from Her Majesty's Stationery Office but that supplies are limited and prices uncompetitive when compared with wood-free printing and writing quality paper. I understand further that Her Majesty's Stationery Office will continue to encourage the greater use of recycled fibre in the paper it purchases.

Waste paper from the Department is collected by contractors and may be used for recycling.

School Building

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has considered any report of the particular needs for improved capital expenditure on school building within the area of the Rotherham education authority.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received, and is studying, the bid by Rotherham local education authority in respect of its plans for capital expenditure in 1988-89 and subsequent years. In addition, I met the hon. Member, his parliamentary colleagues and representatives of the authority in April; and officials have since discussed the capital situation. The points made at those meetings will also be taken into account in considering Rotherham's bid.

School Governors

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps his Department is taking to train school governors for their new duties; and if he will make a statement.

53. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to make any provision for the training of school governors to enable them to implement his proposals on school government.

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether school governors will be given any special training to enable them to carry out the duties required of them under the Education Bill.

77. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provisions he is proposing to make for the training of school governors so that they can implement his proposals on school government.

Mr. Dunn: The Government recognise that the increasing responsibilities of school governors will reinforce the demand for appropriate training. We intend to discuss what needs to be done with all interested parties, including education authorities, voluntary bodies and the business community.

Students (Travel Costs)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total expenditure by his Department in respect of travel expenses for students in higher education for each academic year from 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Jackson: The table shows reimbursements to students for excess travel by local education authorities in England and Wales. Up to and including 1982-83, such information was collected centrally in respect of mandatory and full-value discretionary award-holders; and thereafter in respect of mandatory award-holders alone. Following the introduction of a flat rate travel allowance, a diminishing minority of students were entitled to continue claiming travel expenses in excess of the flat rate. Hence the sharp fall in payments from 1984-85 onwards.

Expenditure by local education authorities in England and Wales on excess travel claims.

	£ million
Mandatory and full-value discretionary awards
1979-80	16·9
1980-81	21·0
1981-82	21·1
1982-83	26·2
Mandatory awards
1983-84	23·8
1984-85	2·7
1985-86	1·2

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the percentage of students with travel costs in excess of the flat rate travel grant from the academic year 1984-85 to the present.

Mr. Jackson: Information is held centrally only on excess travel payments to students in receipt of mandatory awards from local authorities in England and Wales. Before 1984-85, such students were reimbursed relevant travel expenses in excess of £50; 46 per cent. of them received reimbursement in 1983-84. From 1984-85, a flat rate travel allowance has been incorporated in the main rates of grant. There are provisions for reimbursement of travel costs in excess of these figures in the case of disabled students, students obliged to study away from their normal place of study and students who began their course before September 1984. In 1984-85 5 per cent., and in 1985-86 2 per cent., of students received excess travel payments. Information for 1986-87 is not yet available.

Inner Cities

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his achievements with respect to education in the inner cities.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's plans for improving the overall quality of education, which include the establishment of CTCs, will have particular relevance for the needs of the inner cities. A range of existing policies, including the education support grant programmes on ethnic diversity and curriculum development in urban primary schools, together with the REPLAN and adult literacy training schemes are already making a significant contribution to the improvement of educational provision in the inner cities. In addition, the school teachers' pay and conditions document 1987, which came into force on 1 October, will have a particularly beneficial effect in the inner cities since it allows LEAs not only to pay extra increments to teachers starting work in an urban area but also to give schools extra incentive allowances on criteria which include the difficulties of recruiting and retaining teachers, and various socio-economic factors. My Department also contributes resources to and advises on the running of the urban programme which supports a wide range of educational activities in inner-city areas. Many schools and colleges also receive grant under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 to meet the special needs of pupils and students from ethnic minority backgrounds, many of whom live in inner-city areas.

Further and Higher Education

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the average weekly pay of manual and non-teaching white collar staff in institutions of higher and further education, as a ratio of the pay of similar grades in private sector industry; and what were the figures in 1981 and 1984.

Mrs. Rumbold: Data on the average weekly pay of manual and non-teaching white collar staff in institutions of higher and further education are not available. The table compares the pay of all manual and administrative, professional, technical and clerical staff in local authority employment, which includes those employed in LEA-maintained further and higher education, with the pay of all manual and non-manual employees in the economy other than those in mostly public sector services.

	£ per week[1]
	April 1981	April 1984	April 1987
1. Local Authority manuals	95	113	[3]137
2. All manuals[2]	115	147	176
3. Local Authority APTC	127	155	[3]188
4. All non-manuals[2]	132	175	224

[1] All data are taken from the new earnings survey and reflect gross weekly earnings, including overtime payments.

[2] All employees in the standard industrial classification (SIC) categories 0 to 8 (ie category 9, "other services", is excluded; category 9 employees had to be estimated for 1981 because of the different classification used then).

[3] The figures for local authority staff do not include the 1987 settlements.

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the population of the United Kingdom go on to study in higher and further education; and what information he has as to the proportions in (a) the United States of America, (b) Sweden, (c) West Germany and (d) Japan.

Mr. Jackson: The readily available information is given in the following table:

	New entrants to higher education[1]			Participation in education and training of 16 year olds
	Year	Age	Participation rate (per 100)	Year	Full-time	Part-time[2]	All education and training[2]
United Kingdom	1984	18-21	[3]31	1983	[4]45	[5]42	87
	1985	18-21	[3]32
United States of America	1982	18	[6]60	1981	94	—	94
Sweden	1979	na	25	—	na	na	na
West Germany	1984	19-21	27	1981	62	[7]30	92
Japan	1984	18	[6]38	1981	[8]87	[8]2	[8]89

na = Not available.

[1] New entrants (all ages) to full-time and part-time higher education as a percentage of the average population in the most relevant age group. This is the age group which includes 70 per cent. of new entrants to higher education. The average population is calculated by dividing the total population of the group by the number of years involved.

[2] Including apprenticeships, Youth Training Scheme and similar schemes.

[3] Students from abroad are excluded, as are post-graduates and others already having a higher education qualification. Excludes students studying for higher education qualifications outside the public education system other than nursing and paramedical students at DHSS establishments.

[4] Excludes private sector full-time further education and training in the United Kingdom.

[5] Includes estimates of those studying in the evening only.

[6] Includes new entrants to private colleges.

[7] Including compulsory part-time education at 16.

[8] Estimated from new entrant and enrolment data.

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the funding of (a) universities, (b) public sector higher education institutions and (c) further education colleges is made up of private sector payments.

Mr. Jackson: The proportion of universities' recurrent income derived from the private sector payments was estimated to be 21 per cent. in the academic year 1985-86, the latest year for which figures are available. Comparable information is not available for polytechnics and colleges under local authority control.

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of students in (a) university and (b) public sector higher education institutions, are from a manual working class background; and what were the figures in 1966 and 1976.

Mr. Jackson: Estimates based on a survey conducted by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in "Young People's Intentions to Enter Higher Education" show that some 27 per cent. of those aged less than 21 entering polyechnics and colleges in England and Wales in 1985 were from a manual working class background, compared to 18 per cent. for universities. The proportion of older students from working class backgrounds is thought to be higher.

Information for 1962 published in the Robbins report (Cmnd. 2154) show that about one third of entrants to full-time higher education were from a manual working class background.

The percentage of acceptance to universities alone in the United Kingdom through the Universities Central Council on Admissions from a manual working class background were 24 per cent. in 1976 and 21 per cent. in 1986. Similar information is not collected by the polytechnic central admissions system.

The proportion of the population in the manual working class is estimated to have decreased more rapidly than the decrease in the proportion of entrants to higher education from the manual working class.

Student Awards

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to make adjustments to the level of student awards for students who will have to pay a community charge in the academic year 1989-90.

Mr. Jackson: Decisions on the level of student grants in future years have not yet been taken.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Dead Sheep

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provisions was made for the disposal of dead sheep following 20 June 1986 in the areas of restriction under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Carcases of sheep that are slaughtered as part of the monitoring programme are buried by Cumbria county council under arrangements approved by the radiochemical inspectorate (now Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution). Sheep in the restricted area that die of natural or unexplained causes cannot be disposed of by farmers to knackers' yards but either have to be buried or cremated on their own land or, where this is not possible, buried by Cumbria county council under similar arrangements to those above.

Pigmeat

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if in the light of the risk to the United Kingdom's swine fever-free status, he will impose an immediate ban on the import of pigmeat.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding reply 26 November 1987]: No. A unilateral ban on imports is not justified and would be illegal under European Community law. Trade in pigmeat is subject to detailed veterinary conditions and, following pressure from the Government, strengthened European Community rules on classical swine fever controls were adopted in September.

Sheep (Radioactivity)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to undertake spot-checks for radioactivity on sheep flocks in the counties of Durham, Humberside, Northumberland, north Yorkshire, south Yorkshire and west Yorkshire.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 27 November 1987]: As a purely precautionary measure, the Ministry has carried out some monitoring for radioactivity on a small number of sheep flocks in upland-areas which experienced localised rainfall during the weekend of 3-4 May 1986. This monitoring has covered the counties of north Yorkshire, west Yorkshire, Durham and Northumberland and also Devon and Somerset and that part of Cumbria which lies in the extreme south-east of the county, outside the restricted area. As a result, I am able to reassure the public in those areas that the conclusion of earlier monitoring in 1986 and 1987 that there was no risk to food supplies remains valid. The results of this monitoring will be published in due course. I have no plans at present for any further special monitoring; routine monitoring of both sheep and vegetation continues and is especially concentrated in areas known to have received deposition of radioactivity from the Chernobyl plume.

NATIONAL FINANCE

North Sea Oil

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the percentage contribution of North sea revenues to Government receipts for each year since 1976-77.

Mr. Lilley: Government revenues from United Kingdom oil and gas production expressed as a percentage of total general Government receipts in each year from 1976-77 have been as follows:

	Number
1976-77	0·2
1977-78	0·4
1978-79	0·9
1979-80	2·9
1980-81	4·0
1981-82	5·8
1982-83	6·4
1983-84	6·8
1984-85	8·5
1985-86	7·5
1986-87	3·0

Public Service Messages (Television)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in order to achieve wider audience coverage, he will discuss with the BBC the possibility of a greater proportion of public service messages placed by the Central Office of Information being transmitted on the corporation's television channels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Central Office of Information already has regular discussions with the BBC on the production and placement of public service messages (known as fillers) on health, safety and welfare subjects for use on BBC1 and BBC2.

We value the air time which the BBC devotes to these public service messages and will continue to seek any increase in audience cover that the corporation can achieve.

EC (Own Resources)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has on how the European Commission arrived at the precise figure of 1·4 per cent. of gross national product when proposing an increase in the European Economic Community own resources.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The Commission's reasons for proposing an increase in the own resources ceiling to 1·4 per cent. of Community GNP are set out in its "Report to the Council and Parliament on the Financing of the Community Budget" (COM(87)101), which was deposited in Parliament on 27 March 1987.

Personal Searches

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many personal searches were made by Her Majesty's customs officers in 1986 at each of the Welsh ports and airports.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 30 November 1987]: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Waste Paper

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of the paper supplied by Her Majesty's Stationery Office to the Palace of Westminster; and what provision is made for recycling that part which accrues as waste.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The value of paper supplied to the Palace of Westminster for the last complete financial year (1986-87) is assessed at £710,000. Unclassified waste is collected and pulped, without charge, by a contractor who covers his costs from the sale of the waste.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Brooke: Most paper is generally supplied through Her Majesty's Stationery Office whose contracts encourage the use of recycled paper in manufacture. Waste paper other than classified waste is collected by a contractor for recycling.

Commercial Banks (Debt-Relief)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what criteria he expects the Bank of England to follow in assessing current sovereign debt problems for the purpose of assessing the tax claims of commercial banks.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 26 November 1987]: the Bank of England has no responsibility for the determination of the banks' tax liabilities. That is a matter for the Inland Revenue, applying the tax law.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the Inland Revenue to complete its negotiations with the commercial banks concerning the tax relief allowable in developing country debt provisions.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 26 November 1987]: Deductions legally due for losses incurred on irrecoverable loans are established in the course of the annual determination of each bank's taxable profits when its accounts and tax computations have been submitted to the tax inspector.

Taxation

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect on the retail price index of raising an extra £1,000 million in taxation from each of tobacco products, beer, wine and spirits, petrol and value added tax.

Mr. Peter Lilley: The estimated effect is as follows:

	Estimated effect on the retail price index per cent.
Raising an extra £1,000 million in a full year at 1988-89 prices in taxation from:
Tobacco Products	0·8
Beer	0·6
Wine and Spirits	1·9
Petrol	0·4
Value Added Tax	0·5

Because of the very large changes in duty levels involved for tobacco and alcoholic drinks, the estimates for those products are subject to wide margins of error.

Thin Capitalisation

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he proposes to take in the light of the recent study of thin capitalisation by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We welcome this study by the OECD of the international tax consequences which can arise from "thin capitalisation" — that is, the use of loans as a substitute for equity capital in the financing of companies for the purpose of obtaining a tax advantage. The problem for the United Kingdom manifests itself primarily in relation to subsidiaries of foreign companies, and it gives rise to growing concern.

In considering the case for any possible counteraction the wider economic and commercial implications must, however, be assessed and we are therefore inviting comments on the OECD report from interested parties. Any comments should be sent by 31 March 1988. An Inland Revenue press release issued today gives further details.

Cigarettes

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the effects on import levels of cheap foreign-manufactured cigarettes of the freezing of excise duties on cigarettes announced in his 1987 Budget Statement.

Mr. Peter Lilley: It is not possible to isolate the effect of the freezing of excise duties on cigarettes in the 1987 Budget from the effect of other changes which have affected the market for cigarettes during recent months.

ENVIRONMENT

Children (Sports Teaching and Coaching)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the amount of money paid in grants to sports clubs of all kinds in each of the past five years for the purposes of teaching and coaching children in sport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Sports clubs and governing bodies of sport can receive funding for facilities, equipment, training and coaching programmes, proficiency award schemes, administrative expenses and so on from a number of sources such as the Sports Council, local authorities, charitable trusts, and the private sector. Details of that funding are not kept in a form which enables the proportion of it specifically devoted to the training and teaching of children to be identified.

Sport

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with the Sports Council and the Central Council of Physical Recreation with a view to resolving the current differences between them.

Mr. Moynihan: The arrangements for the funding of the CCPR by the Sports Council are a matter for them, and I have no power to intervene.

I had hoped that it would be possible for the two bodies to reach agreement without arbitration and I deeply regret that this has not been possible. As a result of the initiation of arbitration proceedings, money provided by the Government for the development of sport will now be absorbed by expensive legal fees. It cannot be in the interests of the governing bodies of sport or of anyone else concerned with sport for resources to be used in this way. I hope that the legal costs will be kept to an absolute minimum.

Housing Authorities (Project Control)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the effects on the housing revenue accounts and capital programmes of housing authorities of the proposed abolition of project control.

Mrs. Roe: The abolition of project control is expected to have a neutral effect on local authorities' housing revenue accounts and capital programmes.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department has undertaken any detailed appraisal of housing needs and the ability of housing authorities to continue with improvements and repair schemes following the abolition of project control; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: The responsibility for assessing housing need is a matter for individual housing authorities. The abolition of project control will not affect their ability to continue with improvements and repair schemes.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his assessment of the implications for the level of housing subsidy, under the proposed abolition of project control, of those authorities which agreed that former Greater London council estates outside the Greater London council boundaries be transferred to their residing authority at no cost to tenants or ratepayers.

Mrs. Roe: Authorities that have received dwellings from the Greater London council treat these dwellings in the same way as other dwellings and the abolition of project control should make no difference to their entitlement to housing subsidy.

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department has given to owner-occupiers who have bought property on former Greater London council estates regarding their responsibilities for improvements and repairs, in the light of the proposed abolition of project control.

Mrs. Roe: The abolition of project control will not affect owner-occupiers of former GLC dwellings.

Housing (Unit Cost Limits)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make available the basis of the formula for the system of unit cost limits and how it applies (a) in areas with major housing problems and high land values and (b) in areas with fewer housing problems and where land is cheaper.

Mrs. Roe: The proposed cost figures and groups for the new system of admissible cost limits were derived from an examination of house prices and construction costs in both the private and public sectors. The sources used were Nationwide Anglia Building Society data on mortgages, the Valuation Office's property market report and data on projects carried out in 1986-87 by local authorities and housing associations. Analysis of these data places authorities in groups according to the cost of land and construction. The same formula applies for all groups throughout the system.

National Parks

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the English national parks and the parliamentary constituencies that fall within the boundaries of each park.

Mr. Moynihan: The information is as follows:

National park and parliamentary constituency

Tyne and Wear Planning Forum

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place a copy of the papers, minutes and proceedings of meetings of the Tyne and Wear planning forum in the Library.

Mrs. Rae: A copy of the papers circulated in advance of the meeting of the Tyne and Wear planning conference on strategic guidance held on 10 November, and a copy of the summary of proceedings, will be placed in the Library. The advice to be tendered to the Secretary of State by the conference will be made public and there will be an opportunity for interested parties to comment on it.

Polychlorinated Byphenyls

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of the quantities of polychlorinated biphenyls imported annually into the United Kingdom for incineration.

Mr. Moynihan: This information could not be provided without disproportionate cost since, to obtain it, it would be necessary to examine all individual consignment notes held by waste disposal authorities.

Housing

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has received from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation to his White Paper, "Housing: the Government's Proposals"; if there is any action he will be taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The association has made a full response to our White Paper, commenting on its implications, as it sees them, for disabled people. Its comments, together with many others we have received, are now under careful consideration.

Members' Tea Room

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of the installation of the new counter display and dispensing facilities in the Members' Tea Room.

Mr. Chope: The estimated total cost of the improvements to the Members' Tea Room is £241,000. The contract included the refurbishment of the food preparation and wash-up area and improvements to the ventilation system as well as the new servery.

Rating Reform

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, for each higher education institute, the estimated cost of the community charge to be borne per student (a) at the full rate and (b) with an 80 per cent. rebate.

Mr. Howard: Where a student is undertaking a course of full-time education he will be liable for 20 per cent. of the full community charge for the area of his term-time address. Tables placed in the library on 17 November show, on the basis of 1987-88 spending, what the full community charge in each area might be.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 12 November, Official Report, column 190, on the basis of each Salvation Army hostel in Greater London paying a collective community charge and not passing the charge to its residents, if he will estimate absolute and percentage increases in costs (a) per annum and (b) per bed that will accrue to each hostel.

Mr. Howard: I do not accept the premise on which the question is based. Each resident in a property designated for the collective community charge will be under a duty to pay a contribution to the landlord, who will be responsible for passing it on to the local authority. The collective community charge is simply a mechanism for levying community charges on people who change address frequently.

Urban Regeneration

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of applications received for urban regeneration grants since introduction of the scheme, (b) the number of grants given, (c) the total amount of all grants given and (d) (i) shortest, (ii) longest and (iii) average time taken to process applications for grant.

Mr. Trippier: Since the introduction of urban regeneration grant over 30 schemes have been discussed with the Department, 13 of which are being appraised. A £3·25 million offer of grant was awarded on 19 October for a scheme at Round Oaks steelworks, Dudley. Detailed discussion with the developer commenced during May of this year.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the condition of 20 acres as the cartographical criterion for an urban regeneration grant.

Mr. Trippier: We shall shortly review the progress of urban regeneration grant.

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report specific details of each scheme administered by his Department and directed towards inner-city renewal and urban regeneration in both public and private sectors.

Mr. Trippier: Details of the programmes operated by my Department to encourage urban regeneration and inner-city renewal are as follows:

The Urban Programme

The urban programme is a special allocation of resources to selected local authorities to support a wide range of projects aimed at economic regeneration, improving the environment and relieving social need in urban areas. Local authorities receive grant at 75 per cent. from central Government towards the cost of approved projects which must form part of a co-ordinated inner area programme for a district.

Urban Development Grant

The urban development grant scheme is used to encourage the economic and physical regeneration of inner urban areas by attracting private sector investment projects which would not otherwise take place in such areas, which strengthen the local economy and bring land and buildings back into use. Assistance offered is the minimum necessary to make a project commercially viable. Since 1983, £127 million of UDG grants have been approved which will lever at least £526 million of private investment.

Urban Regeneration Grant

Urban regeneration grant is intended to promote the economic and physical regeneration of older urban areas affected by industrial change, by enabling the private sector to redevelop large sites and refurbish large groups of buildings. It differs from UDG as it is specifically targeted at large scale schemes and grant is paid direct to private sector owners and developers and not through local authorities. UDG and URG are not available for schemes which appear profitable and feasible without Government help.

Derelict Land Grant

Derelict land grant is designed to encourage the re-use of land which has been so damaged by former industrial or other development that it cannot be used without treatment. In assisted areas and derelict land clearance areas grants for reclamation are paid at 100 per cent. to local authorities and at 80 per cent. to private sector owners. Elsewhere, the rate is 50 per cent. for all applicants. Priority is given to schemes which will provide land for housing, industry or commerce.

Land Registers

Land registers of unused and underused land owned by public authorities are held by the Department to help prospective developers to obtain the release of particular plots. The Department has powers to direct public owners to sell land, which is registered, on the open market.

Urban Development Corporations

Urban development corporations are set up by the Government with the objective of regenerating their designated areas. They have powers to acquire, reclaim and service land, to bring land and buildings into effective use, to promote new development, and the creation of housing and social facilities. The London Docklands and Merseyside development corporations have been in operation since 1981. Four more development corporations were set up in 1987: Trafford Park, Teesside, Tyne and Wear, and the Black Country.

Enterprise Zones

As an experiment to encourage development by deregulation, 17 enterprise zones have been set up in England since 1981. These help to unlock land for industry and commerce by removing tax burdens and relaxing administrative and planning controls. The zones have led to the development of 700 hectares of land. £90 million has been spent to improve their infrastructure and unlock their potential.

Simplified Planning Zones

Under the 1986 Housing and Planning Act local planning authorities can encourage development, particularly in older urban areas, by establishing simplified planning zones. SPZs provide planning permission for a 10 year period for those types of development specified in the scheme for which there is no planning application fee.

Estate Action

Estate Action was launched in June 1985 to work with local authorities to develop innovatory solutions to the problems arising on their run-down housing estates. It encourages a wide range of approaches. These include:

(i) new ways of running estates (such as tenant management co-operatives and trusts);
(ii) measures to diversify tenure;
(iii) the involvement of private sector financial resources and skills;
(iv) estate based management initiatives which give tenants greater involvement and control (such as Priority Estate Projects and Community Refurbishment Schemes).

Housing

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of the recent White Paper on housing, he will indicate the policy of the Government towards the building of houses by local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Our policy was set out in chapter 5, paragraph 5·1 of the White Paper "Housing: The Government's Proposals". In summary it is that local authorities should adopt a strategic approach to meeting housing needs, looking at ways in which they can encourage and assist others to provide houses, rather than building themselves.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he plans to issue a circular to local authorities setting out his intentions on house building by such authorities following the publication of his recent White Paper; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have no plans to issue such a circular at present.

Loft Insulation

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has yet received the medical advice on possible health risks to householders from the use of man-made fibres as loft insulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: My earlier statement said that a summary report of an international symposium published by the World Health Organisation had indicated an increased lung cancer risk amongst workers exposed in the early days of manufacture of man-made mineral fibres (MMMF). So far as domestic exposure was concerned I said:

"on the limited data so far available, there appears to be negligible risk to the health of householders, either from existing loft insulation installations, or from laying it themselves, or from infrequent visits to their lofts".

I stated that the Government had work in hand to collect more data and to assess the risks. I also undertook to give further advice, take action as necessary and to make another announcement when further medical advice was received.

Since making my statement, the International Agency for Research on Cancer has reviewed the evidence of carcinogenicity and has classified MMMF as possibly carcinogenic to humans. The Health and Safety Executive has received advice from the DHSS Committee on carcinogenicity and has issued a news release on 24 June, which confirms the appropriateness of the current precautions on exposure to MMMF in the work place. Meanwhile, the programme of work to collect more data on the extent of domestic exposure has been completed and the results presented to the committee on carcinogenicity for their assessment of the risk to health of householders.

The committee's advice on the risk to health from MMMF loft insulation, DIY installation and subsequent disturbance in the home was:

"(i) the levels of exposure to MMMF reported for living spaces resulting from domestic loft insulation do not pose a carcinogenic risk of any practical consequence to the health of residents.
(ii) the infrequent and short-term exposures to the higher levels of MMMF associated with DIY installation or disturbance of insulation do not pose a significant additional risk.
(iii) it would be prudent nonetheless for installers to wear an appropriate mask as recommended during installation.
(iv) the overall situation should be kept under review in the light of further developments of materials and types of installation."

In view of the committee's advice, householders need not be concerned about the presence of MMMF in their lofts, about installing it themselves, or about doing DIY work in lofts insulated with MMMF. The appropriate mask recommended for installation work is one conforming to BS 6016 or BS 2091. To avoid skin irritation, householders should also use gloves when handling this material.

Wildlife Protection

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be making an announcement, following the recommendations submitted to him by the Nature Conservancy Council under section 24 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, about the protection of United Kingdom native species.

Mr. Ridley: After extensive consultation and careful consideration of the NCC's recommendations, the Government have today announced their decision to change the protected lists in the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 as follows:

Waste Recycling

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what encouragement Her Majesty's Government are giving to recycling of waste; and whether, in the interests of conservation and the reduction of litter, he will consider means to ensure that bottles, tins and so on, are returnable on cash deposit.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The Government are currently taking four main initiatives to encourage the economic recycling of waste:—

1. By promoting greater awareness of the potential of waste as a resource through, for example, a video directed at industry and an education pack for schools;

2. By holding sectoral conferences with all the interested parties to explore the prospects for increasing the economic recycling of specific waste materials; a conference on glass recycling in July 1986 resulted in a commitment to double the number of bottle bank sites within five years;

3. By setting up the recycling advisory unit at the Warren Spring laboratory in July 1985; and

4. By supporting the work of voluntary organisations, for example, the Waste Watch project of the National Council for Voluntary Organisations.

This encouragement does not extend to the imposition of mandatory deposits. The Government prefer to leave it to the market to decide whether goods should be packed in returnable or non-returnable containers and whether a deposit should be charged. There would be practical problems in introducing deposits on many forms of packaging.

Raptors (Licences)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer of 23 November, if he will now provide a complete list of the numbers of licences granted for the taking of birds of prey from the wild and the numbers of birds of prey taken under such licences, by species in each case, for each of the last five years and the current year to date.

Mr. Moynihan: [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Following are the number of licences issued since 1982 permitting birds of prey to be taken from the wild in England and Wales, and in Scotland, and the number of birds so taken.

Nuclear Waste

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on financial contracts entered into by Nirex in connection with (i) geological surveys of potential nuclear waste deep disposal facilities and (ii) the technology required to assess the suitability of sites for nuclear waste deep disposal facilities.

Mr. Moynihan: [holding answer 30 November 1987]: My right hon. Friend has no information about Nirex's financial contracts. This is entirely a matter for UK Nirex Ltd.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what duty the proposed National Rivers Authority will have to consult sea fisheries committees so far as pollution is concerned.

Mr. Moynihan: Currently, a sea fisheries committee is consulted by my right hon. Friend the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when, in accordance with the provisions of the Control of Pollution Act, he is notified by a water authority of an application for consent to discharge effluent which might bear on the interests of that committee. The only change which will result from the creation of the National Rivers Authority is that the NRA instead of the water authorities will notify the Minister, who will then, as now, consult the committees affected.

Sewage Works

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those water authorities operating sewage works which contravene the requirments of the Control of Pollution Act.

Mr. Moynihan: All water authorities have some sewage treatment works which failed their discharge consent conditions at some time in 1986, according to reports submitted to the Department earlier this year. A major programme of investment to upgrade and renew old treatment works is under way. However, the detailed reasons for non compliance are being investigated by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and when it has completed its investigations, we shall want to discuss with the water industry what further measures are necessary to achieve early compliance.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Haemophiliacs

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make it his policy to provide a non-means tested special weekly benefit for people with haemophilia and HIV;

(2) what provision his Department makes for people with haemophilia and HIV who need a special diet to protect their immune systems;

(3) what assessment Her Majesty's Government have made of the extent to which people with haemophilia and HIV need extra heating;

(4) if he will list the latest measures taken to take care of people with haemophilia and HIV;

(5) what assessment he has made of the burden placed upon the finances of people with haemophilia infected by HIV as a result of treatment through the National Health Service;

(6) if he will consider setting up an insurance scheme to allow people with haemophilia and HIV to obtain mortgage endowment schemes in order to protect the home on death of the family breadwinner from AIDS;

(7) what action has been taken by Her Majesty's Government to protect widows and dependent relations on the death of a person with haemophilia with AIDS;

(8) if he will make it his policy to pay a lump sum to all those infected with HIV from blood products.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my statement to the House on 16 November at column 773 in which I announced a grant of £10 million to the Haemophilia Society.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the average social economic status of people with haemophilia.

Mr. Newton: None.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice Her Majesty's Government give to people with haemophilia and HIV on their diet.

Mr. Newton: Specific advice to haemophiliacs with HIV on diet and other aspects of their health care is a matter for the doctors responsible for their treatment.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what detailed studies his Department has made of the effects of HIV on haemophiliac families and the effect the infection will have on the community at large.

Mr. Newton: While no specific study has been undertaken, we are aware, through haemophilia directors, other health care professionals, and the representations of the Haemophilia Society, of the many difficulties HIV infection can cause for haemophiliacs and their families. There is no reason however to expect consequential effects for the community at large, since HIV is not transmitted through normal social contacts.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what difference there is as regards area health care between (a) people with haemophilia and HIV and (b) other people with HIV.

Mr. Newton: In addition to the facilities of the National Health Service which are available to all patients with HIV, special health care for haemophiliacs is provided through a network of haemophilia centres. Specialist HIV counselling facilities for haemophiliacs and their families are available at haemophilia reference centres.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the propensity of (a) people with haemophilia and HIV and (b) people with HIV to develop AIDS.

Mr. Newton: Concerning (a) I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) on 16 November at columns 435-36. In our planning for the future care needs of people infected with HIV, the current estimate is that, in general, 30 per cent. of those who are HIV antibody positive will go on to develop AIDS within five years.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people there are under 16 years with haemophilia and HIV.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will allocate more money to regional haemophilia reference centres for the care of people with haemophilia and HIV.

Mr. Newton: We shall be deciding the precise amounts to be made available for 1988-89 as soon as possible.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he expects to receive an application from the Haemophilia Society for additional resources to staff the running of the new trust fund for haemophiliacs infected from factor VIII products;

(2) whether it is his intention that the letter of intent establishing the trust fund for haemophiliacs infected from factor VIII products will insist that the Haemophilia Society will have to use all its revenue and capital to help only the 1,200 individuals and their immediate families.

Mr. Newton: It is our intention that the trust fund (both capital and revenue) will be used solely to help affected haemophiliacs and their dependants. The Department is working closely with the Haemophilia Society to assess the full implications for it of administering the new £10 million trust fund, and to determine how best to ensure that the necessary help and advice is available.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to complete his further consideration of proposals for disregarding tax and social security purposes any payments made by the Haemophilia Society from the trust fund set up from Government funds.

Mr. Newton: As soon as possible.

Blood Products

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will investigate pharmaceutical companies from whom infected blood products have been purchased.

Mr. Newton: All manufacturers of licensed medicinal products, including blood products, which are intended for use in the United Kingdom are already subject to regular inspections. This control is exercised by the Department's medicines inspectorate which follows a programme of inspections to confirm that the standards of good pharmaceutical manufacturing practice are observed. In the event of an incident which casts doubt upon the safety of a medicinal product, the licensing authority would investigate and, if necessary, take appropriate regulatory action which might include the suspension, revocation or variation of the licence.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when Her Majesty's Government took action on all the evidence available to them to ensure the quality of blood products; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: Commercial blood products are licensed by the United Kingdom Medicines Licensing Authority only after careful consideration of quality, safety and efficacy. Requirements of the licensing authority have been updated as necessary in line with advances in medical knowledge. For example, all licensed factor VIII released for use in the United Kingdom from early 1985 has been heat treated to inactivate HIV and from the end of 1985 has been made from individually screened donations.

Haemophilia Society

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last provided funding for the Haemophilia Society under section 64 of the Social Security Act.

Mr. Newton: The Haemophilia Society received a grant under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 in the financial year 1986-87. It has not applied for a further grant.

Glaucoma

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is (a) the total number of sufferers of the eye disease glaucoma who have come to the attention of his Department, (b) the total cost to his Department of treating this condition and (c) the cost per patient of the eye test which would indicate the possibility of glaucoma, for the latest period for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: In 1985, the latest year for which information is available centrally, an estimated 13,440 patients were discharged from National Health Service hospitals in England with a main diagnosis of glaucoma. Figures on costs of treatment for glaucoma are not available centrally. The cost of that part of an eye test which would indicate the possibility of glaucoma is not identified separately. Most cases are diagnosed by consultant ophthalmologists who are responsible for treatment.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take to improve the rate of early diagnosis of glaucoma; and if he has any plans to encourage wider use of available tests, including inspection of the fundus of the eye and tonometry, especially to high-risk groups.

Mrs. Currie: It is for general medical practitioners to refer patients identified as being at high risk to a consultant ophthalmologist. Diagnosis and resultant treatment are the responsibility of consultant ophthalmologists and this may require a number of specialised tests, not all of which ophthalmic opticians are qualified or trained to carry out. At present the interior of patients' eyes is routinely examined with an ophthalmascope as part of the National Health Service sight test. This process is known as fundoscopy. Practitioners may undertake tonometry if they consider this appropriate but there is no requirement to do so.

Nurses and Midwives

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the top and bottom levels of annual salaries of (a) a ward sister, (b) a state registered nurse, (c) a state enrolled nurse and (d) a midwife, showing (i) basic salary and (ii) average salary with overtime in each case.

Mr. Newton: The following table shows the current basic salary scales for these grades and the estimated average earnings of full time staff for working unsocial hours and overtime etc.

Grade	Basic Payscale		Estimated equivalent earnings rounded to nearest £50 (excluding London Weighting)
	Minimum £ per annum	Maximum £ per annum	Minimum £ per annum	Maximum £ per annum
Ward Sister (Nursing Sister II)	9,000	12,000	10,250	13,650
Staff Nurse (RGN)	7,300	8,600	8,550	10,050
Enrolled Nurse (EN)	6,250	7,750	7,400	9,150
Midwifery Sister	9,000	12,000	10,300	13,750
Staff Midwife	7,300	8,600	8,350	9,850

Note: In addition to this nurses in Greater London receive London Weighting of £930 per annum.

Organ Transplantation

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what part his Department played in the recent conference of European Health Ministers in Paris when organ transplantation was considered; whether the United Kingdom delegation subscribed to the final resolution adopted by the Ministers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I took part in the conference of European Health Ministers in Paris in early November. We now have the largest number of people with a functioning transplanted organ of any European country. The provisional figures at the end of 1986 showed a total of over 7,000. Moreover we had legislation (the Human Tissue Act 1961) much earlier than most other countries, and I shared our experience with other delegates.

The conference provided an opportunity for an exchange of views on ethical, legislative, educational and organisational matters connected with organ transplantation. The conference also explored the possibility of increasing European co-operation in this field. I on behalf of the United Kingdom subscribed to the content of the final communiqué which set out Ministers' views on guidelines for future work in the field of organ transplants and made recommendations to the Council of Europe on the steps which might be taken to follow up the conference. A copy of the communiqué has been placed in the Library.

Medical Laboratory Scientific Officers

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the work of medical laboratory scientific officers with regard to preventive health programmes and the battle against AIDS.

Mr. Newton: The laboratory work of medical laboratory scientific officers contributes to preventive health programmes such as rubella screening, cervical screening and the early detection of inborn errors of metabolism. Medical laboratory scientific officers, along with their colleagues, contribute to the battle against AIDS via their work on the diagnosis of HIV infection and its associated complications. They also have a role within the national blood transfusion services in the routine testing of over 2 million blood donations each year for evidence of HIV and other infections.

Hospital Beds (York)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, what was the number of bed spaces available for the recovering mentally ill in the York area for each year since 1982; what were occupancy figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: My hon. Friend may wish to contact the chairman of York district health authority for more detailed information. The available information held centrally is given in the table.

Number of available staffed beds and resident patients in NHS mental illness hospitals and units in York district health authority at 31 December 1982-86

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986

All resident patients	987	901	850	792	738
Percentage occupancy	86	84	88	87	87

Haringey Health Authority

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria he used in appointing the current chairman of the Haringey health authority.

Mrs. Currie: It would not be proper for me to comment on an individual appointment. However in making appointments of district health authority chairmen generally we take into account a wide variety of factors, including the candidates' personal qualities, their interest in and commitment to the National Health Service and their management or other relevant experience.

Benefits

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide an estimate of (a) the numbers of claimants benefiting from transitional protection in April 1988, (b) the numbers of claimants expected to lose that protection by April 1989 by benefit upratings, assuming benefit upratings in line with the Chancellor of the Exchequer's inflation estimates in the Autumn Statement and (c) the numbers of claimants expected to lose protection by April 1989 by the loss of entitlement to income support, assuming the unemployment projection given in the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Autumn Statement.

Mr. Scott: Estimates of the figures requested are as follows:

(a) 1·4 million
(b) 0·6 million
(c) 0·3 million.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate the annual flow of claimants on to, and off, supplementary benefit for each year since 1983, for the United Kingdom, for each standard within the United Kingdom and for each benefit office in Newcastle upon Tyne.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available in the form requested. Details are shown of the number of successful new and repeat supplementary benefit claims made and of the number of cases in action in Great Britain as a whole, for each social security region and for the three local social security offices in Newcastle, for the years requested. No information is available concerning the number of claimants who cease to receive supplementary benefit.

The count of cases in action includes cases where benefit has ceased but other action is continuing. Data for 1986-87 and 1987-88 are provisional and subject to amendment.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many supplementary benefit claimants at the latest available date had claimed benefit continuously (a) for five years but less than 10 years and (b) for 10 years or more.

Mr. Portillo: At February 1986, 1,561,000 claimants had been in receipt of supplementary benefit for five years or more. No information is available about how many of these claimants had been in receipt of benefit for 10 years or more.
Source: Annual statistical inquiry.

Mr. Millan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what instructions have been issued to local offices of his Department following the decision of the social security commissioner that ex gratia payments made by British Shipbuilders did not disqualify recipients from receiving unemployment benefit, Commissioner's file number CU/364/1985.

Mr. Portillo: The chief adjudication officer issued guidance to local offices in July 1987 in circular S25/87, a copy of which is in the Library.

West Midlands (NHS Budget)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of increases in the National Health Service budget announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer for 1988-89 and 1989-90 in his Autumn Statement, will go to the west midlands region.

Mrs. Currie: Health authority allocations for 1988-89 will be announced shortly: those for 1989-90 will be announced towards the end of next year. The west midlands regional health authority this year has taken 10·5 per cent. of the total allocated budget.

Departmental Research

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what representations he has received about the recent introduction of a requirement that the results of research sponsored by his Department may be published only with his consent; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what criteria he intends to apply when considering applications to publish in learned journals the findings of research sponsored by his Department where that research reaches conclusions critical of his policy; and in what circumstances permission to publish may be refused.

(3) if he will state the reasons why he has changed the form of his Department's contracts for research work.

Mrs. Currie: A review last year of the Department's standard conditions for research contracts showed that their wording was not fully consistent with the responsibilities for Crown Copyright delegated to it by the Controller of Her Majesty's Stationery Office, and conferred inadequate control over the publication of material resulting from research commissioned by the Department even in cases where legal advice might be against it. The wording was therefore revised accordingly.

The Department has received a number of representations from members of the research community who fear that the change could lead to the publication of research results being restricted for other reasons. The revised wording however requires that consent to publish shall not be withheld unreasonably, and we expect to give it as readily as in the past.

AIDS

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what progress he has made towards making an order adding to the AIDS (Control) Act 1987 a requirement relating to HIV statistics at district levels;

(2) when he expects the first reports under the AIDS (Control) Act 1987 to be published; and what period they will cover;

(3) what consultations he has had with regards to the implementation of the AIDS (Control) Act 1987; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have sent consultation letters to the joint consultants committee, the community medicine consultative committee, regional general managers and regional medical officers about the proposed guidance for health authorities on the completion of the reports required under the AIDS (Control) Act. We hope to lay an amending order relating to HIV statistics before Parliament in January 1988. It is proposed that the first reports will cover the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988. Authorities will be required to publish these reports by 31 July 1988.

Community Care

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what increases in funding for area health authorities have been provided in each year since 1979 for community care for the mentally handicapped; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The development of services to patients are funded by health authorities from within the total resources available to them. Community care policies have benefited especially from the availability of joint finance, which is provided specifically to encourage joint planning and collaboration between health and local authorities. Joint finance allocations have increased by over 60 per cent. in real terms since 1978-79. It is estimated that just over 30 per cent. of joint finance has been spent on services for mentally handicapped people.

Total annual provision of joint finance is shown in the table.

Year	Allocation £ million
1978-79	34·5
1979-80	41·5
1980-81	61·0
1981-82	75·3
1982-83	84·7
1983-84	94·1
1984-85	98·9
1985-86	106·1
1986-87	109·9
1987-88	110·9

Dental Care

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the annual cost in the financial year 1986-87 for the provision of free dental inspections; and what is the projected cost for the financial year 1987-88.

Mr. Newton: The cost of free dental examinations in England in 1986-87 was £97·4 million. The projected cost for 1987-88 is £105 million.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in each of the last five years, what was the annual number of free dental inspections carried out.

Mr. Newton: Information is available up to 1985 by calendar year, and by financial year from 1986-87.

England

Year	Number (thousands)
1986-87	29,043
1985	28,624
1984	28,325
1983	27,913
1982	27,451

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the £170 million which he seeks to raise in increased charges from the dental and ophthalmic services will fall upon the general dental service in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton: It is expected that approximately half will come from the proposed changes in dental charges.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total number of recipients of attendance allowance at the latest convenient date.

Mr. Scott: At 31 March 1986, the latest date for which information is available, an estimated 585,000 people were receiving attendance allowance.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to make a further statement about the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: I cannot yet add to the replies given to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 4 November and 12 November at columns 783 and 170 respectively.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of (a) the amount recovered and (b) the amount illegally claimed but not recovered from social security claimants prosecuted since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: This information requested is not available.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of full-time equivalent posts dedicated solely or mainly to detection of social security fraud.

Mr. Portillo: Precise figures are not available but it is possible to calculate the amount of staff time expended within the Department on the detection of social security fraud. In October 1987 the equivalent of 2,798 full-time staff were employed on social security fraud work.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy with respect to the prosecution of social security claimants.

Mr. Portillo: In reaching a decision whether to prosecute each case is considered individually and various factors are taken into account. These include the nature of the offence, the social, domestic and medical circumstances of the claimant and the amount of overpayment involved.

Nursing Homes

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take in the light of recent evidence concerning alleged evasions of the official controls on the registration and management of homes for the mentally ill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Under the Registered Homes Act 1984 all homes providing residential care for four or more mentally ill people must be registered with the local authority, which can refuse registration if it is not satisfied with the standard of care. Homes, hotels, and so on, not offering care are not registered, but persons living in such homes who are in need of various types of care should be able to obtain it from health and social service authorities.

The social service inspectorate has just completed a two-year study of the implementation of the Registered Homes Act 1984 for residential care homes; its report is due shortly. We shall be reviewing the registration system in the light of that report and in doing so will be taking into account the report of Lady Wagner's committee on the role of residential care—due early in 1988—and of Sir Roy Griffiths' on community care—also due early next year.

Private Health Care

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many operations on National Health Service patients in the west midlands will be done in private hospitals as a result of £240,000 being paid to a private health insurance company by the West Midlands regional health authority; what sort of operations will be done; who will choose the patients to be given these operations; and how they will be chosen.

Mr. Newton: The allocation to West Midlands regional health authority from the £25 million national waiting list fund for 1987-88 has been increased from £2·88 million to £3·12 million. This will enable the region to arrange for the treatment of additional waiting list cases, particularly through the cost-effective use of private sector hospitals. The role of the private insurance company in this imaginative project is to act as advisers to the health authorities on the options available to them from the private sector, negotiating as necessary on their behalf. The regional and district health authorities, on the advice of the doctors concerned, will then select which groups of waiting list patients are to benefit. A similar project is under way in Trent regional health authority. These projects are still at an early stage but will be closely monitored to determine the effectiveness of this approach to improving waiting time for National Health Service patients.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the average financial loss to students last academic year from the implementation of the Social Security Act.

Mr. Portillo: The average financial effect on students during the 1986-87 academic year of those parts of the Social Security Act 1986 so far implemented cannot be identified but it is thought to be negligible. The new income-related schemes introduced by the Act come into effect in April 1988.

Benefit Claimants

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will list, following the introduction of the provision for women to be nominated as head of household in the payment of social security benefits, the number of households which have taken up this option in relation to the total number of claimants.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 12 November 1987]: The most recent available information indicates that about 2 per cent. of supplementary benefit claimants with partners are women and that a similar percentage of married women claimants to benefits under the Social Security Act 1975 are receiving a dependency addition.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services at what level of gross income entitlement to housing benefit will cease, assuming that family credit is claimed and that average rent and rates are paid, after the Social Security Act 1986 is implemented in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 13 November 1987]: On the basis of illustrative assumptions about the level of rents, rates and tax allowances next year, a married man with two children aged 9 and 12 will lose entitlement to housing benefit when his total gross income reaches £134·76.

Notes:
1. The example assumes child benefit of £14·50 and family credit of £29·26 is in payment.
2. The rent is assumed to be £19·12 per week and the rates £8·02.
3. The married man's tax allowance is assumed to be £3,925 per annum and the basic rate of tax is assumed to be unchanged at 27 per cent.

DEFENCE

Missile Defence Systems

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any feasibility studies of missile defence systems deployed to protect civil nuclear facilities in war.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 24 November 1987]: It is not our practice to discuss details of deployment plans in war.

Disarmament

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any of his staff were present at the sixth European nuclear disarmament convention held in Coventry on 15 to 18 July.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 24 November 1987]: I am not aware that any member of the staff of the Ministry of Defence attended this convention.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has made any assessment of the implications of a sea- or ground-launched cruise missile fired from United Kingdom territory failing to reach its programmed target and exploding in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 24 November 1987]: No. There is no question of a nuclear explosion occurring as a result of a cruise missile launched in the United Kingdom failing in flight over United Kingdom territory.

Brecon Beacons (Military Exercises)

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps to restrict military personnel based at the Cwm Gwdi camp in the Brecon Beacons from engaging in exercises which will disturb local residents prior to 7.30 am.

Mr. Freeman: Cwm Gwdi camp provides an essential training service for the armed forces; activities include night marching, endurance training, and because of the nature of these activities there can be no restrictions on times of operation. However, no live or simulated firing or manoeuvring of tracked vehicles is involved, and disturbance to others is kept to an absolute minimum.

Armilla Patrol

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the cost of maintaining the Armilla patrol for each year since 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 5 November 1987 at column 888.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the vessels on the Armilla patrol are equipped with the Goalkeeper and Phalanx systems.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on 10 November 1987 at column 153. It would not be in the interests of the safety of the fleet to define the specific capabilities of individual ships.

Submarines

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is prepared to discuss the limitation of Royal Navy submarine operations in the Barents and North Norwegian sea in return for limitation on Soviet submarine operations in the Eastern Atlantic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Limitations on submarine operations would not only pose great problems of verification but would also be likely to be detrimental to the West's security interests in view of our greater dependence on the sea for defence and reinforcement purposes. NATO's arms control priorities, which it is pursuing vigorously, were set out by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 18 November 1987 at column 588.

Military Balance

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when North Atlantic Treaty Organisation last published an assessment of the military balance.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The last such assessment, a copy of which is in the Library of the House, was published in 1984.

FI-111 Aircraft

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many FI-111 aircraft are currently based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The number of United States Air force FI-111 aircraft assigned to NATO and based in Europe, all of which are based in the United Kingdom, is published each year in the Statement on the Defence Estimates. For the most recent statement, I refer the right hon. Member to figure 15 on page 67 of Cmnd. 101-I.

Boeing (Contracts)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to the current value of contracts placed by Boeing in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Boeing company has recently submitted its first six-monthly report under the AWACS offset programme, which claims credit for contracts placed with United Kingdom companies to the value of $141 million since November 1986. The report is currently being evaluated and it is therefore too early to say how much of the claim will be agreed as counting towards the fulfilment of Boeing's offset commitment.

Northern Waters (Maritime Activity)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with his Norwegian counterpart concerning Mr. Gorbachev's proposals to limit maritime activity in northern waters.

Mr. Ian Stewart: We maintain regular consultation on a confidential basis with all our NATO allies, both bilaterally and in NATO fora, concerning a range of arms control matters.

Nuclear Tests

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will invite representatives of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and the United States of America to monitor any future British nuclear tests at the Nevada test site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: United Kingdom tests at the Nevada test site are already carried out in co-operation with the United States. Invitations to third parties would not be a matter for the United Kingdom alone.

Doctors and Dentists (Pay)

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards maintaining parity of pay levels between doctors and dentists in the armed forces; and what salaries are currently in force.

Mr. Freeman: Pay for both medical and dental officers in the armed forces is set by the Government on the recommendations of the independent Review Body on Armed Forces pay. The review body's approach has been to base its recommendations for both groups on the career earnings of general medical practitioners in the National Health Service. Details of the methodology and of current pay rates are given in the supplement of the review body's sixteenth report 1987 (Cm. 176).

As discussed in paragraphs 4 to 7, the Ministry of Defence is developing some proposals for restructuring the pay of these groups with the aim of improving the retention of experienced people; these will be submitted to the review body for consideration during the 1988 pay review. However, they do not suggest any alteration to the parity of basic pay between service doctors and dentists.

Howitzers

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many howitzers currently in service with the Army will be replaced by the new 155 mm self-propelled howitzer.

Mr. Sainsbury: The competition for the 155 mm self-propelled howitzer remains in progress. No decision has yet been taken.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether the next generation of self-propelled howitzers will be nuclear capable; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether all types of self-propelled howitzers currently being assessed are able to fire all types of NATO issued 155 mm nuclear shells; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: All the contenders in the self-propelled howitzer competition should be compatible with a wide range of 155 mm artillery rounds in use in NATO, both conventional and nuclear.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence by what date the next generation of self-propelled howitzers will be in service with the Army.

Mr. Sainsbury: It is envisaged that the winner of the current competition for a 155 mm self-propelled howitzer for the Army will enter service before the mid-1990s.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the contract for the self-propelled 70 turret was awarded to Vickers Defence Systems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Work on the turret for the SP70 propelled howitzer programme which was allocated to the United Kingdom, was placed with Royal Ordnance, in accordance with the industrial work sharing arrangements which were agreed between the participating nations.

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to order 155 mm self-propelled howitzers for the Army.

Mr. Sainsbury: Our current intention is to reach a decision on the 155 mm SP howitzer competition in the spring of next year.

Arms Control Unit

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the arms control unit in his Department.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 4 June 1985 at column 138.

House Purchase

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if potential purchasers of his Department's housing are notified before they buy of the potential implications for compensation for latent damage under the Housing Defects Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

Potential purchasers of defective house types are notified before they buy of the legal position with regard to latent defects. Their attention is specifically drawn to the defects likely to be encountered, and this is reflected in prices.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Facsimile Machines

Mr. Wray: To ask the Leader of the House how many facsimile machines there are in the Houses of Parliament; where are they located; and who is authorised to use them.

Mr. Wakeham: There is one facsimile machine in the Central Lobby Post Office which is available for use by hon. Members on a repayment basis. There are, in addition, several machines which have been purchased by hon. Members for their own private use and others reserved for official use by certain Departments and offices.

Members (Bribery)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will introduce legislation to make the bribery of a Member of Parliament a separately identifiable criminal offence, in line with the recommendation of the Salmond report on standards of conduct in public life; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No, I believe the present remedies are sufficient. Bribery of a Member of Parliament not acting in his capacity as a Member would be caught by the criminal law. The House itself has remedies available to it in the event of bribery of a Member of Parliament acting as such.

WALES

Trade Visit (Japan)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about his recent trade visit to Japan.

Mr. Peter Walker: My visit to Japan last week was primarily an inward investment mission. I was much encouraged by the clear interest Japanese industry is showing in further significant investments in the United Kingdom over the coming years.

I had the honour of addressing the Japan-British Society in the presence of His Imperial Highness Prince Tomohito of Mikasa. I had very useful discussions with Mr. Sosuke Uno, Minister for Foreign Affairs, Mr. Yasuoki Urano, Parliamentary Vice Minister for International Trade and Industry, and representatives of the Keidanren.

I spoke at two seminars at Nagoya and Osaka which had been arranged by the Invest in Britain Bureau of the Department of Trade and Industry. These were prestigious engagements attended by many senior Japanese business people in those areas.

As this was my first visit to Japan in my present capacity, I visited a number of companies which have already established factories in Wales to make contact with them and to discuss their plans for the future of their Welsh operations. I also met senior representatives of a number of companies which are considering establishing operations in the United Kingdom. Two projects—Star Micronics and a joint venture by Onamba and Sumitomo—were announced whilst I was in Japan; between them they should bring a further 470 jobs to Wales. I attended a ceremony involving an exchange of trees in connection with the national garden festival at Ebbw Vale in 1992.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department received the annotated copy of the memorandum concerning the National Museum of Wales, prepared by the Comptroller and Auditor General and submitted to the Public Accounts Committee on 19 January; and what action was taken to investigate the criticisms of that memorandum by the author of the annotations.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The annotated copy of the document was sent to the Department for information and was received on 23 February 1987. It is for the Comptroller and Auditor General to consider what to do about comments on a document he has issued.

PRIME MINISTER

Civil Servants

Sir Peter Blaker: To ask the Prime Minister what further guidance is being given to civil servants about their duties and responsibilities.

The Prime Minister: In the light of comments made by the Treasury and Civil Service Committee, the Defence Committee and the Civil Service unions, the Head of the Home Civil Service has revised the note of guidance on the duties and responsibilities of civil servants in relation to Ministers which he issued in February 1985. With my consent, he has issued the revised note today. A copy is annexed to this answer.

Note is as follows—

THE DUTIES AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF CIVIL SERVANTS IN RELATION TO MINISTERS

Note by the Head of the Home Civil Service

In February 1985, with the consent of the Prime Minister, I issued a note of guidance restating the general duties and responsibilities of civil servants in relation to Ministers. That note was reproduced in a Written Answer by the Prime Minister to a Parliamentary Question on 26 February 1985 (OR 26 February 1985, columns 130 to 132). In the light of the subsequent discussion, including observations of the Treasury and Civil Service Select Committee and the Defence Committee of the House of Commons and comments from the Council of Civil Service Unions, I have expanded the note of guidance, and a revised version is now issued. As previously, the note is issued after consultation with Permanent Secretaries in charge of Departments and with their agreement. As with the earlier version, this revised version is issued with the consent of the Prime Minister, and will be reported by her to the House of Commons.

2. This note is concerned with the duties and responsibilities of civil servants in relation to Ministers. It should be read in the wider context of Ministers' own responsibilities, which were set out in the Government's reply to the Seventh Report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee (Cmnd. 9841):

> "The Government believes that Ministers are well aware of the principles that should govern their duties and responsibilities in relation to Parliament and in relation to civil servants. It goes without saying that these include the obligations of integrity. They include the duty to give Parliament and the public as full information as possible about the policies, decisions and actions of the Government, and not to deceive or mislead Parliament or the public. In relation to civil servants, they include the duty to give fair consideration and due weight to informed and impartial advice from civil servants, as well as to other considerations and advice, in reaching policy decisions; the duty to refrain from asking or instructing civil servants to do things which they should not do; the duty to ensure that influence over appointments is not abused for partisan purposes; and the duty to observe the obligations of a good employer with regard to terms and conditions of service and the treatment of those who serve them."

3. Civil servants are servants of the Crown. For all practical purposes the Crown in this context means and is represented by the Government of the day. There are special cases in which certain functions are conferred by law upon particular members or groups of members of the public service; but in general the executive powers of the Crown are exercised by and on the advice of Her Majesty's Ministers, who are in turn answerable to Parliament. The Civil Service as such has no constitutional personality or responsibility separate from the duly constituted Government of the day. It is there to provide the Government of the day with advice on the formulation of the policies of the Government, to assist in carrying out the decisions of the Government, and to manage and deliver the services for which the Government is responsible. Some civil servants are also involved, as a proper part of their duties, in the processes of presentation of Government policies and decisions.

4. The Civil Service serves the Government of the day as a whole, that is to say Her Majesty's Ministers collectively, and the Prime Minister is the Minister for the Civil Service. The duty of the individual civil servant is first and foremost to the Minister of the Crown who is in charge of the Department in which he or she is serving. The basic principles of accountability of Ministers and civil servants are as set out in the Government's response (Cmnd 9916) to the Defence Committee's Fourth Report of 1985-86:

—Each Minister is responsible to Parliament for the conduct of his Department, and for the actions carried out by his Department in pursuit of Government policies or in the discharge of responsibilities laid upon him as a Minister.

—A Minister is accountable to Parliament, in the sense that he has a duty to explain in Parliament the exercise of his powers and duties and to give an account to Parliament of what is done by him in his capacity as a Minister or by his Department.

—Civil servants are responsible to their Ministers for their actions and conduct.

5. It is the duty of civil servants to serve their Ministers with integrity and to the best of their ability. In their dealings with the public, civil servants should always bear in mind that people have a right to expect that their affairs will be dealt with sympathetically, efficiently and promptly.

6. The British Civil Service is a non-political and professional career service subject to a code of rules and disciplines. Civil servants are required to serve the duly constituted Government of the day, of whatever political complexion. It is of the first importance that civil servants should conduct themselves in such a way as to deserve and retain the confidence of Ministers, and to be able to establish the same relationship with those whom they may be required to serve in some future Administration. That confidence is the indispensable foundation of a good relationship between Ministers and civil servants. The conduct of civil servants should at all times be such that Ministers and potential future Ministers can be sure that that confidence can be freely given, and that the Civil Service will at all times conscientiously fulfil its duties and obligations to, and impartially assist, advise and carry out the policies of, the duly constituted Government of the day.

7. The determination of policy is the responsibility of the Minister (within the convention of collective responsibility of the whole Government for the decisions and actions of every member of it). In the determination of policy the civil servant has no constitutional responsibility or role distinct from that of the Minister. Subject to the conventions limiting the access of Ministers to papers of previous Administrations, it is the duty of the civil servant to make available to the Minister all the information and experience at his or her disposal which may have a bearing on the policy decisions to which the Minister is committed or which he is preparing to make, and to give to the Minister honest and impartial advice, without fear or favour, and whether the advice accords with the Minister's view or not. Civil servants are in breach of their duty, and damage their integrity as servants of the Crown, if they deliberately withhold relevant information from their Minister, or if they give their Minister other advice than the best they believe they can give, or if they seek to obstruct or delay a decision simply because they do not agree with it. When, having been given all the relevant information and advice, the Minister has taken a decision, it is the duty of civil servants loyally to carry out that decision with precisely the same energy and good will, whether they agree with it or not.

8. Civil servants are under an obligation to keep the confidences to which they become privy in the course of their work; not only the maintenance of the trust between Ministers and civil servants but also the efficiency of government depend on their doing so. There is and must be a general duty upon every civil servant, serving or retired, not without authority to make disclosures which breach that obligation. This duty applies to any document or information or knowledge of the course of business, which has come to a civil servant in confidence in the course of duty. Any such unauthorised disclosures, whether for political or personal motives, or for pecuniary gain, and quite apart from liability to prosecution under the Official Secrets Acts, result in the civil servant concerned forfeiting the trust that is put in him or her as an employee and making him or her liable to disciplinary action including the possibility of dismissal, or to civil law proceedings. He or she also undermines the confidence that ought to subsist between Ministers and civil servants and thus damages colleagues and the Service as well as him or herself.

9. Civil servants often find themselves in situations where they are required or expected to give information to a Parliamentary Select Committee, to the media, or to individuals. In doing so they should be guided by the policy of the Government on evidence to Select Committees, as set out in memoranda of guidance issued from time to time, and on the disclosure of information, by any specifically departmental policies in relation to departmental information, and by the requirements of security and confidentiality. In this respect, however, as in other respects, the civil servant's first duty is to his or her Minister. Thus, when a civil servant gives evidence to a Select Committee on the policies or actions of his or her Department, he or she does so as the representative of the Minister in charge of the Department and subject to the Minister's instructions[1], and is accountable to the Minister for the evidence which he or she gives. As explained in paragraph 2, the ultimate responsibility lies with Ministers, and not with civil servants, to decide what information should be made available, and how and when it should be released, whether it is to Parliament, to Select Committees, to the media or to individuals. It is not acceptable for a serving or former civil servant to seek to frustrate policies or decisions of Ministers by the disclosure outside the Government of information to which he or she has had access as a civil servant.

10. The previous paragraphs have set out the basic principles which govern the relations between Ministers and civil servants. The rest of this note deals with particular aspects of conduct which derive from them, where it may be felt that more detailed guidance would be helpful.

11. A civil servant should not be required to do anything unlawful. In the very unlikely event of a civil servant being asked to do something which he or she believes would put him or her in clear breach of the law, the matter should be reported to a senior officer or to the Principal Establishment Officer, who should if necessary seek the advice of the Legal Adviser to the Department. If legal advice confirms that the action would be likely to be held to be unlawful, the matter should be reported in writing to the Permanent Head of the Department.

12. There may exceptionally be circumstances in which a civil servant considers that he or she is being asked to act in a manner which appears to him or her to be improper, unethical or in breach of constitutional conventions, or to involve possible maladministration, or to be otherwise inconsistent with the standards of conduct prescribed in this memorandum and in the relevant Civil Service codes and guides. In such an event the matter should be reported to a senior officer, and if appropriate to the Permanent Head of the Department.

13. Civil servants should always recall that it is Ministers, and not they, who bear political responsibility. A civil servant should not decline to take, or abstain from taking, an action because to do so would conflict with his or her personal opinions on matters of political choice or judgment between alternative or competing objectives and benefits; he or she should consider the possibility of declining only if taking or abstaining from the action in question is felt to be directly contrary to deeply held personal conviction on a fundamental issue of conscience.

14. A civil servant who feels that to act or to abstain from acting in a particular way, or to acquiesce in a particular decision or course of action, would raise for him or her a fundamental issue of conscience, or is so profoundly opposed to a policy as to feel unable conscientiously to administer it in accordance with the standards described in this note, should consult a senior officer. If necessary, and if the problem cannot be resolved by any other means, the civil servant may take the matter up with the Permanent Head of the Department and also has a right, in the last resort, to have the matter referred to the Head of the Home Civil Service through the Permanent Head of the Department; detailed provisions for such appeals are included in the Civil Service Pay and Conditions of Service Code. If the matter still cannot be resolved on a basis which the civil servant concerned is able to accept, he or she must either carry out his or her instructions or resign from the public service—though even after resignation he or she will still be bound to keep the confidences to which he or she has become privy as a civil servant.

[1] A Permanent Head of a Department giving evidence to the Committee of Public Accounts does so by virtue of his duties and responsibilities as an Accounting Officer as defined in the Treasury memorandum on The Responsibilities of an Accounting Officer; but this is without prejudice to the Minister's responsibility and accountability to Parliament in respect of the policies, actions and conduct of his Department.

Robert Armstrong

CIVIL SERVICE

Non-Departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many non-departmental public bodies are currently in existence; and when the annual list of such bodies will be published.

Mr. Luce: On 1 April 1987 there were 1,643 non-departmental public bodies. That is 15 fewer than last year and 524 fewer than in 1979. These bodies are listed in "Public Bodies 1987" published today. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Waste Paper

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Luce: Some of the envelopes, file covers, paper sacks and other such products used by my Department contain an element of recycled paper. As much waste paper as possible goes for recycling.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

96. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he will respond to the European Commission's proposed directive on the provision of information upon the energy efficiency of buildings; and if he will make an assessment of the effect of an energy efficiency initiative upon the generation of employment in the construction industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At a meeting of the European Council of Energy Ministers on 13 November, the Ministers did not agree that it was appropriate to impose a mandatory requirement for home energy audits. Discussions will, however, continue on a possible Council "recommendation" to improve information on the energy efficiency of buildings.

Experience of such an initiative in Denmark suggests that the effect on employment in the construction industry would depend on a high level of subsidies to householders.

Electricity Sales

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what estimates his Department has made of the amount of electricity sold by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. from Chapelcross to the South of Scotland Electricity Board in 1986-87;

(2) what estimate his Department has made of the amount of electricity sold by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. from Sellafield to the Central Electricity Generating Board in 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have been informed by British Nuclear Fuels plc that, during the 1986-87 financial year, the company sold 1·45 TWh of electricity from their station at Chapelcross to the South of Scotland Electricity Board and 1·25 TWh of electricity from its station at Calder Hall (Sellafield) to the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recyling.

Mr. Parkinson: My Department uses some envelopes made from recycled paper. Waste paper collected from the Department by Her Majesty's Stationery Office goes for recycling.

Coal Imports (Seaham Harbour)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give figures for the volume and value of coal imported through Seaham harbour for each year from 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: For the purposes of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise's import statistics, Seaham harbour is included within the port of Sunderland. The following table shows the total volume, total value, and hence the average unit value, of coal imported through Sunderland for each year from 1979.

Coal Imports through Sunderland: 1979 to 1986

	Volume (tonnes)	Value (£'000)	Average Unit Value £/tonne
1979	22,254	1,065	47·86
1980	12,605	802	63·63
1981	5,895	437	74·13
1982	43,243	2,314	53·51
1983	101,544	4,957	48·82
1984	23,111	1,220	52·79
1985	88,213	4,555	51·64
1986	242,871	9,348	38·49

British Coal

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on British Coal's external financing limit for 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Spicer: British Coal's external financing limit for 1987-88 is to be increased from £727 million to £842 million. This increase reflects price reductions of over £300 million conceded by British Coal in current difficult market conditions. This is partly offset by projected operating cost savings of over £200 million compared with the assumptions underlying the original limit of £727 million. British Coal remain committed to achieving break-even in 1988-89.

This increase is being charged to the reserve and will not add to the public expenditure planning total.

TRANSPORT

London Underground

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received any proposals from London Regional Transport for investment designed to improve the quality of service on the northern line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: We have received and approved proposals, at a cost of some £45 million, for 16 additional trains which will enhance services and relieve overcrowding on five Underground lines, notably the Northern line. London Underground is now taking delivery of the new trains and the higher service levels should be operating by the end next year. In addition we have recently approved a £20 million scheme to replace existing lifts at Angel station, with flights of escalators, emerging in a new ticket hall. This facility—on which work will commence early in the New Year—will bring substantial improvements in conditions for passengers at the station. The Government have not to date refused any investment proposed for the Underground.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to what has been the effect of placing maintenance and installation on the London Underground out to tender on a number of stations without escalator and lift services at any one time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Tendering for maintenance contracts has so far been undertaken for 25 escalators—where the work was won by the in-house team—and seven lifts, where an outside contractor bid successfully for the contract. I am advised that both contracts are operating well and that there is no adverse effect on reliability. Installation of lifts and escalators has always been carried out by external contractors.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the current incidence of driver shortages and defective rolling stock on the London Underground and as to what effect these are having on services, with particular reference to overcrowding, delays and safety; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand London Underground is currently experiencing a shortage of drivers, particularly on the Northern line, and is taking steps to recruit the necessary staff. Safety is a first priority and trains are not run, or are taken out of service, if they become defective. This inevitably affects service levels. In the week ending 27 November, I am informed that just over 1 per cent. of scheduled trips were cancelled because of staff sickness or non-availability; and less than 2 per cent. of scheduled peak hour trips were cancelled due to shortage of rolling stock or its withdrawal from service.

A1-A1 Motorway (Wetherby)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the A1 from Wetherby to the A1 motorway.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The White Paper "Policy for Roads in England: 1987" shows the schemes we have planned. They are:

Scheme	Advancement of scheme
Wetherby Bypass	Under construction
Wetherby to Dishforth Widening	At public inquiry
Dishforth Interchange Improvement	Work planned for start in 1988
Dishforth to Scotch Corner Carriageway Improvements	Added to the Programme earlier this year
Dishforth to Scotch Corner Junction Improvement Phase I (Gatenby Lane Junction)	Planned for start of construction in the period April 1989 to March 1991
Dishforth to Scotch Corner Junction Improvements Phase 2	Planned for start of construction in the period from April 1991 on-wards.

A19 (Dishforth)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to improve the A19 from Dishforth to the Tyne tunnel.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are well advanced with our plans to provide dual carriageways on the remaining two-mile section of this A19-A168 route where such a standard of road has not already been provided. Constructional work on this scheme, which includes the improvement of the junction with the A1 at Dishforth, is planned to start in 1988.

London Regional Transport

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to how he assesses London Regional Transport need for support from the taxpayer, with particular reference to his Department's press release No. 541, following the Autumn Statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Grant is provided to LRT to the extent to which it cannot cover its running costs and fund its investment needs from traffic income and other revenues. The Government fully support the need for a high level of investment by LRT to modernise and expand the system. As announced at the time of the Autumn Statement, LRT's investment next year will be increased by more than £50 million, to £365 million. LRT's requirement for external finance will however be reduced by more than £50 million to £221 million.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the level of subsidy to London Regional Transport per thousand passengers at constant 1987 prices for each year since 1979.

Mr. David Mitchell: LRT receives both revenue support and capital grant. The figures requested for both are as follows:

	Revenue support per thousand passenger journeys (1986-87 prices)	Capital grant per thousand passenger journeys (1986-87 prices)
1979	50·44	92·45
1980	70·49	98·39
1981	121·28	109·75
1982	100·52	99·93
1983	124·86	115·55
1984-85[1]	92·16	73·90
1985-86	69·28	107·43
1986-87	34·75	118·56

[1] 15 months.

Hazardous Goods

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider the setting up of joint committees at county level to monitor the transportation of hazardous goods and materials in areas where they are loaded or unloaded, consisting of police, fire, ambulance and local authority services, together with employers and trade unions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We would welcome and support any initiatives at county level which might usefully draw on the experience of the liaison panel already in existence in Cleveland.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how his Department monitors the driving hours, breaks and rest periods of drivers in vehicles greater than three and a half tons, since the increase in heavy goods vehicle drivers' hours brought about by the EEC review in September 1986.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Tachograph charts which show drivers' hours, breaks and rest periods, are checked by the Department's traffic examiners during visits to operators' premises and by both the examiners and the police at the roadside. Charts are also screened by the Department's eleven traffic area offices, using computerised equipment.

The EC regulations which became effective last year extended daily driving from eight to nine hours (with provision for up to 10 hours twice a week) but reduced overall driving from 92 hours to 90 hours in any fortnight.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines have been issued to ensure that regulations are respected concerning those drivers in vehicles greater than three and a half tons, now that driving hours have been extended.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Over 100,000 guide books (GV262) on the new drivers' hours rules have been issued free of charge by the Department since September 1986.

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review the new extended driving hours for drivers in vehicles over three and a half tons; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The new rules were agreed after two years of detailed discussion within the European Community and have been in place for a little over a year.

We will keep the rules under review.

Tachograph Records

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines he has issued, or proposes to issue, to ensure that enforcement officers within his Department, when visiting the premises of haulage companies for the inspection of tachograph records see both safety representatives as well as management; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: When visiting operators' premises, traffic examiners are always willing to advise operators on enforcement and safety matters. It is a management responsibility to see that workers and their representatives are kept informed.

Vehicle Companies (Register)

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will investigate the practicalities of establishing a register of vehicle companies to ensure that the transportation of goods and materials on the roads be handled only by those companies so registered.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Anyone who wishes to use a goods vehicle with a gross weight of more than 3·5 tonnes must hold an operator's licence. These are issued by the independent licensing authorities who keep a record of operators within their traffic areas.

A47 Bypass (East Norton)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has anything to add to his answer of 16 November, Official Report, column 404, with respect to the A47 bypass of East Norton.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the answer of 16 November, I named the schemes which are in the Government's national trunk road programme. Other schemes, each valued at under £1 million, are in the east midlands regional programme. The A47 East Norton bypass is one of them. Subject to the completion of statutory procedures, construction could start in 1990.

Coal (Transport)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the tonnage of domestic coal transported by rail annually since 1983; and if he will also indicate in percentage terms that tonnage in relation to total domestic coal transported for the same period.

Mr. David Mitchell: Figures for coal transport do not distinguish between domestically produced and imported coal. The figures for total tonnes and rail share are as follows:

	BR Coal and Coke Traffic (Tonnes: Millions)	BR per cent. of total Coal and Coke traffic
1983	87·9	53
1984	25·5	29
1985	65·9	45
1986	79·7	52

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list in the Official Report those professions or trades whose vocational qualifications have been reviewed by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications to date.

Mr. Dunn: Early in 1987, following the production of draft criteria for its vocational qualifications framework, the national council established nine project groups to test out those criteria by reviewing and advising on the standards of competence and qualifications in the fields of agriculture, electrical contracting, engineering manufacture, heating and ventilation, hotel and catering, motor vehicle repair and maintenance, office occupations, retail, and retail travel. The groups have now submitted interim or final reports, and a number of qualifications have been accredited, mostly based on combinations of existing qualifications. The council is now considering the results of this process, and hopes soon to publish fuller and more definitive criteria and to invite interested parties in all sectors of employment to submit qualifications for accreditation. The council is also consulting widely with professional bodies to see how their qualifications may be associated with the national vocational qualification framework.

Educational Reform

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the implications for (a) the standard of education and (b) school budgets in those Inner London education authority boroughs which decide to stay in the Inner London education authority, in the event that a significant proportion of the wealthier less deprived boroughs decide to opt out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The fact that boroughs dissatisfied with ILEA's educational and financial performance will be able to apply to opt out should act as a spur to improvements within ILEA. But the process of opting out should not in itself have a significant effect on either educational standards or school budgets in those inner London boroughs which decide to stay within the authority. Under the new arrangements for local government finance which will apply from 1 April 1990, inner London boroughs will receive revenue support grant related to their needs; any increase in average needs for boroughs remaining within ILEA due to other boroughs opting out will be reflected in an increase in grant.

Goldsmiths College

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether appropriate funding will be made available to Goldsmiths college, London, in order to secure its incorporation into the University of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I wrote to the vice-chancellor of London university on 20 November giving the following information about the amounts that my right hon. Friend is prepared to make available for the funding of Goldsmiths college over the next three academic years.

£ million

	1988-89	1989-90	1990-91 (August-March)
	13·66	12·96	7·61
Less Science[1]		0·56	0·34
Net Total	13·66	12·40	7·27

[1] Negotiations are continuing about the possible transfer of Goldsmiths' Science courses to other institutions.

While it has not proved possible to provide a precise year-on-year match between the available funding and the amounts which the college considered would be necessary to enable it to operate as a UGC and university court-funded school of London university, I understand that it should be possible for the college to make the required adjustments in the phasing of its expenditure. In addition the Secretary of State has also indicated his willingness to transfer the following amounts to the universities Vote to meet the costs of restructuring.

Financial year	£
1988-89	39,000
1989-90	128,000
1990-91	160,000

Speech Therapy

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will bring forward proposals to expand speech therapy provision in schools.

Mr. Dunn: The provision of health services to local education authorities is a function of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services, under the provisions of the National Health Service Act 1977. Schedule 10 of the Education Reform Bill now before Parliament extends that duty to cover the grant-maintained schools which it is proposed should be established under the Bill. My right hon. Friends do not at present plan to bring forward any other proposals in this field.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cambodian Refugees

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he takes to seek to ensure that United Kingdom public funds do not go to those organisations, claiming to represent or care for refugees on the Thai-Cambodian border, which are front organisations for the Khmer Rouge and Pol Pot.

Mr. Eggar: We provide assistance to the Cambodian refugees in camps in Thailand through United Nations agencies. We also provide a small amount of bilateral humanitarian assistance direct to the non-Communist groups. We have stipulated to the United Nations agencies that our assistance must not go to the Khmer Rouge. They have assured us that it does not.

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Eggar: Her Majesty's Stationery Office supplies paper to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and make our waste paper collections. It encourages the greater use of recycled fibre in the paper it purchases and sends suitable waste paper for recycling.

South Africa

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his reply of 19 November, Official Report, column 618, what is his estimate of the cost of providing the information originally requested about British nationals arrested, tried and imprisoned in South Africa.

Mr. Eggar: It is estimated that the cost would be in excess of the £200 limit recommended by central guidance for answering hon. Members' questions.

Inflation

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the current rate of inflation for all the EEC countries, together with the Scandinavian countries, United States of America, Canada and Japan.

Mr. Mellor: The figures are as follows:

	Consumer prices September 1987 Change over 12 months earlier per cent.
Belgium	1·7
Denmark	3·6
France	3·2
Germany	0·4
Greece	14·7
Ireland	3·2

United States of America	4·3

VAT

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to the value added tax bands and rates in the individual member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply. According to the latest information available, rates of VAT in the EC member states are as follows:

EC VAT Rates: 1 November 1987

	Standard Rate per cent.	Increased/ Luxury Rate(s) per cent.	Reduced Rate(s) per cent.
Belgium	19	25, [1]33	Zero, 6, 17
Denmark	22	—	Zero
France	18·6	33⅓	5·5, 7
Germany	14	—	7
Greece	18	36	6
Ireland	25	—	Zero, 10
Italy	18	38	Zero, 2, 9
Luxembourg	12	—	3, 6
Netherlands	20	—	6
Portugal[2]	16, [3]12	30, [3]21	Zero, 8, [3]6
Spain	12	33	Zero, 6
United Kingdom	15	—	Zero

Notes:

[1] Higher rate includes 8 per cent. luxury tax and applies to restricted selection of goods, including, inter alia, arms, furs, jewellery, perfumes and cosmetics.

[2] Portugal is obliged to apply the common VAT system only from 1.1.89.

[3] Lower rates apply in the autonomous regions of the Azores and Madeira Archipelagoes.

Citizenship

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether, in the light of the printing errors on the guide form 'R'—"Registration as a British Citizen", he will extend the time limit for registration by six months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We do not accept that there are any such errors in the guide accompanying form R, nor any ambiguities which might lead someone eligible to conclude that he need not apply.

Mr. Bashar Samara

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) why Mr. Bashar Samara was deported from the United Kingdom and whether he will make a statement;

(2) to which country Mr. Bashar Samara was deported in September.

Mr. Hurd: Mr. Samara was refused entry to the United Kingdom on 18 September 1987 on the grounds that his exclusion was conducive to the public good for reasons of national security. He was removed to Israel on 19 September 1987.

Passports

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken by the Passport Office to (i) issue and (ii) renew passports.

Mr. Renton: The time taken to deal with passport applications varies from office to office. Current delay times for non-urgent applications of all types at each of the regional offices are as follows:

	Working days
London	36
Peterborough	15
Newport	10
Glasgow	8
Liverpool	6
Belfast	2

Urgent applications are given priority; all others are dealt with in date of receipt order, irrespective of the type of application.

Prisoners (Guilt Admissions)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Merseyside on the number of admissions of guilt resulting from prison visits by police officers during the last year; and if he will review the guidelines he issues on the obtaining of admissions in this way, in the light of information supplied by Merseyside police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Merseyside that, in 1986, 36,320 offences were cleared up following prison visits by his officers. These represent 59 per cent. of all offences detected by his force in that year. Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary issued guidelines on the use of prison visits to clear up crimes earlier this year and is satisfied that practice in Merseyside accords with them.

Television Licences

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the additional revenue which would be raised by charging hotels the full television licence fee on every television which they provide for the use of hotel guests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The information on which to base an estimate could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Election Expenses

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long after the general elections of 1983 or 1979 the return of candidates' expenses was published; when he intends to publish the 1987 return; whether its preparation is now complete with all returns in; by whom the analysis is being done; and how many of those returns so far received are over the maximum.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The returns of candidates' expenses following the general elections of 3 May 1979 and 9 June 1983 were published on 11 February 1980 and 12 December 1983 respectively. As on those occasions, the 1987 returns are being compiled by the statistical department of the Home Office. The information is not yet complete but my right hon. Friend hopes that the publication will be available by next February. Details of any candidates whose expenditure is over the permitted maximum will not be published until investigations are complete.

Prisoners (Works of Art)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals to increase the public access to prisoners' works of art.

Mr. John Patten: There are no plans to alter the current arrangements for public access to prisoners' works of art. Prison governors already have discretion to allow inmates to enter works of art for public competition or exhibition and many local initiatives are taken in this area in addition to a national competition and exhibition of prisoners' art sponsored each year by the Koestler Trust. The next Koestler Trust exhibition is planned to take place at the royal festival hall between mid-September and mid-October 1988.

Risley Remand Centre

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he intends to take action to relieve pressures on Risley remand centre.

Mr. John Patten: We have taken a number of measures to relieve the pressure of the overcrowding at Risley remand centre. We took advantage of the reduction in the prison population brought about by the change in the remission rules earlier this year, to create more space for remand prisoners elsewhere in the north-west. We opened New Hall as a female prison in August, to take female prisoners who would otherwise have been sent to Risley. Male prisoners are drafted out at regular intervals to the trials unit at Preston prison. We have announced plans to provide accommodation for young offenders on remand at Hindley youth custody centre. We shall continue to keep the situation at Risley under review.

Prisoners (Drugs)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities are available for drug rehabilitation in Her Majesty's prison Holloway.

Mr. John Patten: If on reception at Holloway a person is identified as having a history of drug misuse she is offered the treatment the medical officer, in her individual clinical judgment, considers necessary. Subsequent support after withdrawal could include psychotherapy.

Prisoners (Psychiatry)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of inmates of Her Majesty's prison Holloway are estimated to suffer from significant psychiatric problems.

Mr. John Patten: A census taken by prison medical officers at Holloway on 1 October 1986 of sentenced inmates serving six months and over showed that there were eight (7 per cent.) who were considered to require specialised therapeutic facilities for mental disorder. On the same date 22 unsentenced inmates, (9 per cent.) were considered to be suffering from mental disorder of a type or degree such that they would be detainable under the Mental Health Act 1983.

The latest returns of the number of inmates considered to be detainable under that Act show that on 31 March 1987 there were 13 (three sentenced and 10 unsentenced), or 3·5 per cent. of the total population at Holloway prison.

Satellite Information Services

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the latest agreement between Satellite Information Services and the horse racing and greyhound racing industries with regard to the duration of the agreement and representation on the board of Satellite Information Services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: These are commercial matters for the parties concerned.

Immigration

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many British citizens have unsuccessfully applied for permission for spouses and financés from Australia to enter the United Kingdom for residence since 1978; and what evidence was offered in an attempt to prove that the marriage or engagement was a genuine one;

(2) how many British citizens have successfully applied for permission for spouses or fiancés from Australia to enter the United Kingdom for residence since 1978; and what evidence was offered to prove that the marriage or engagement was a genuine one.

Mr. Renton: The only information readily available is of the numbers of citizens of Australia who have been accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom as spouses: this information is published annually in "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom", tables 3 and 4 of the latest issue for 1986 (Cm. 166), and is brought together in the table. Copies of this publication are in the Library.

The sponsors may have been British citizens or persons already settled in the United Kingdom or persons being accepted for settlement in their own right at the same time. The requirements for any person seeking to settle in the United Kingdom as a spouse are set out in the Immigration Rules. If the hon. Member has any specific case in mind, he may care to write to me about it.

Citizens of Australia accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom as spouses, 1978 to 1986

Year	Number
1978	850
1979	760
1980	570
1981	400
1982	320
1983	450
1984	620
1985	630
1986	480

Entry Clearance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, pursuant to his answer of 30 October, he will provide a breakdown in the most convenient form available of the reasons for refusal of entry to those in possession of a valid entry clearance.

Mr. Renton: I regret that the information is not available centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Civil Servants (Industrial Action)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many working days were lost in his Department due to industrial action by civil servants in the period 1976-86.

Mr. Hurd: Comprehensive figures for the years 1976-80 are not readily available, although I can say that 8,220 working days were lost in the Home Office during the 1979 Civil Service pay dispute. The number of working days lost through industrial action in the years 1981-86 was 12,282.

Fire Precautions

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the Fire Precautions Act 1971 and the Fire Precautions Order 1976 so as to have trainees included in the count when determining whether or not a premise requires a fire certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: When the Fire Precautions (Factories, Offices, Shops and Railway Premises) Order 1976 is replaced to give effect to provisions contained in the Fire Safety and Safety of Places of Sport Act 1987, provisions will be included in the new order for trainees to be counted as employees for the purpose of determining whether premises require a fire certificate.

Irish Prisoners

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many category A Irish prisoners have been transferred at their own request from England and Wales to Northern Ireland since 1973.

Mr. John Patten: The information readily available shows that five category A inmates sentenced in England and Wales have been permanently transferred to establishments in Northern Ireland since 1973. All are thought to have been originally from Northern Ireland.

Mr. Truong Nguyen Thank

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to reply to the letter of 1 July from the hon. Member for Woolwich about the case of Mr. Truong Nguyen Thank.

Mr. Renton: I am sorry that the hon. Member has not had an earlier reply to his letter of 1 July. Further inquiries are needed before a decision can be taken in this case. I will write to the hon. Member as soon as these are completed.

Mr. T. D. Phung

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to provide a substantive response to the letter of 17 March from the hon. Member for Woolwich about the case of Mr. T. D. Phung.

Mr. Renton: I regret that the pressure of work within the refugee section of the immigration and nationality department, and the need to make further inquiries of Mr. Phung have delayed consideration of this case. We are at present awaiting translation of documents submitted by Mr. Phung in Chinese and I hope to be able to send a substantive reply to the letter of 17 March once this is available.

Mr. Yao Kwong Yan

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to reply to the letter of 6 July from the hon. Member for Woolwich about Mr. Yao Kwong Yan.

Mr. Renton: I am writing to the hon. Member today.

Radio 4

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the board of governors of the BBC to discuss the future of Radio 4.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the BBC periodically to discuss a range of current broadcasting issues, but the future of particular radio services is a matter for the BBC within the resources available to it.

John Manley

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will establish an independent public inquiry into all decisions taken by his Department concerning John Manley, sentenced to life at Leeds Crown court for killing Donald Swaine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. I would refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave yesterday to questions from the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) which set out the action which we have already taken to review the case.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes in his Department's procedures he has introduced as a result of the case of John Manley; what further changes in procedures he proposes to make; what proposals he has received from the probation service for changes in procedures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave yesterday to questions from the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer). If the further examination of this case suggests that there is scope for improving procedures, this will be carefully considered. We shall gladly take into account any proposals which may be received from the probation service.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why requests by Bradford probation service for John Manley to be readmitted to Rampton hospital were refused by his Department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to replies I gave yesterday to questions from the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer). The West Yorkshire probation service did not specifically request that Mr. Manley should be recalled to Rampton hospital.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why he authorised the release of John Manley from Rampton hospital in 1981; and what terms and conditions were applied to his release.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave yesterday to Questions from the hon. Member for Bradford, South (Mr. Cryer) which refer to a review conducted earlier this year of the handling of this case. The decision to release Mr. Manley from Rampton hospital was based on medical advice that he was fit to be conditionally discharged. The conditions of discharge were that Mr. Manley, on leaving hospital, should go immediately to a hostel in Lincoln; that he should reside there under the supervision of a social worker appointed by the local authority; that he should keep in touch with and receive home visits from the supervising officer, as directed by that officer; and that he should attend a psychiatric out-patient clinic, as directed by a consultant psychiatrist at Rampton hospital.

Horse Racing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the total number of bookmakers registered for British horse racing courses; and if he is able to give a regional breakdown.

Mr. John Patten: Information available from Customs and Excise shows that on 31 March 1987 1,543 bookmakers were registered to pay duty for on-course bookmaking at racecourses or greyhound tracks (or both) in Great Britain. The regional breakdown is as follows:

	Number
Birmingham	149
Bristol	25
South Wales	96
Dover	22
East Anglia	33
Leeds	169
Liverpool	72
London	170
Manchester	55
Northern England (Newcastle)	175
Northampton	107
Nottingham	81
South West England (Plymouth)	53
Reading	61
Southampton	80
Aberdeen	2
Edinburgh	105
Glasgow	88
	1,543

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the total amounts of money ploughed back into British horse racing courses through the totalisator system since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: The Horserace Totalisator Board has contributed £15·5 million to racing since 1979 in levy payments to racecourses and in sponsorship. In doing so, the board has drawn on proceeds from its bookmaking and credit betting, as well as its racecourse totalisator business.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the number of horses killed on British racecourses in the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: Safety standards on racecourses are the responsibility of the Jockey Club and the racecourse authorities. We do not hold information on the number of horses killed on racecourses.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the total number of persons employed in horseracing for each year since 1979; and if he is able to provide a breakdown between full-time and part-time employment.

Mr. John Patten: Information about employment in horseracing is not separately identified in the centrally collected statistics on employment.

Mr. Alan Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the number of deaths and serious accidents which have occurred to those employed in the horse racing industry in each of the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: No comprehensive figures are kept centrally. Details of those claiming benefit from the racing industry benefit scheme are given in the reports of the Horserace Betting Levy Board which are laid before Parliament annually.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many registered horse racing courses there are in Britain.

Mr. John Patten: Fifty-nine. Sixty-six racecourses hold certificates of approval issued by the Horserace Betting Levy Board; seven of these relate to harness racing.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the total registered attendances at British horse racing courses in each year since 1979.

Mr. John Patten: Information available from the Racing Industry's statistical bureau shows the following total racecourse attendances:

	Number
1979	4,105,327
1980	4,140,358
1981	3,752,757
1982	3,703,653
1983	3,522,558
1984	3,756,926
1985	3,749,811
1986	3,958,473

Some of these personnel have filled posts in overseas staff colleges and similiar establishments which may have been attended by students from countries other than the host nation. I regret that records of such students are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Romanian Vessel Fundulea

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the assistance given to the Romanian vessel Fundulea by the Royal Navy frigate Battleaxe in the Straits of Hormuz on 23 November; and to what extent Royal Naval vessels are permitted to aid foreign shipping under attack.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The role of the Armilla patrol is to uphold the safety of British merchant shipping in the Gulf area. It is our long-standing practice not to comment on the patrol's rules of engagement in fulfilling this task.

Any Royal Naval ship will, on humanitarian grounds, take appropriate action to help save life. In this particular case, following reports that the Fundulea had been attacked and was on fire, HMS Battleaxe deployed a Lynx helicopter to help search for survivors. The helicopter remained in the area of the stricken vessel until it was confirmed that all her company had been accounted for.

Tornado (Saudi Arabia)

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will report progress with regard to the letting of design and construction civil engineering contracts for hardened shelters, airstrips, roadways and workshops ancillary to the supply of Tornado fighters to Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Sainsbury: The memorandum of understanding signed with the Government of Saudi Arabia on 17 February 1986 covers a number of tasks including construction work. Some of this work is already underway, and discussions continue between the Ministry of Defence and the royal Saudi air force to agree the scope of future work. The Ministry of Defence's prime contractor for the whole project covered by the memorandum of understanding is British Aerospace, which is responsible for letting sub-contracts for design and construction.

US Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, pursuant to his answer 2 November, he will publish that part of the special arrangement between the United Kingdom and United States of America which relates to procedure following an accident involving United States nuclear weapons on British soil.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. The documents setting out the special arrangements to which I referred in my reply to the hon. Member on 2 November 1987 at column 607 are classified and cannot therefore be published.

AOR Vessels

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects all six AOR vessels to be in Royal Navy service.

Mr. Sainsbury: Decisions have not yet been taken on the size of the auxiliary oiler replenishment vessel class, the first vessel of which is on order and is expected to enter service in the early 1990s.

Privatisation

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any current plans for privatising services within the responsibility of his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: We shall continue with our policy of improving efficiency in the provision of defence support services through competition and increased involvement of the private sector.

Radioactive Materials

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the representative organisations which have been consulted regarding improved contingency and liaison arrangements for incidents arising from the transportation of radioactive weapons materials.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 2 February 1987 by my right hon. Friend the Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Mr. Stanley) at column 516.

Aircraft Carriers (Refits)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it is planned the HMS Ark Royal and HMS Invincible will be refitted.

Mr. Sainsbury: HMS Invincible is currently undergoing refit at Devonport dockyard. Under existing plans HMS Ark Royal should be due for her first refit in the mid-1990s.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Secure Units

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the regional medium and interim secure units in England and Wales and indicate how many people, broken down into those awaiting transfer from special hospitals and those from other sources, are awaiting transfer to each unit; and if he will give the figures, where possible, for the last three years, together with an indication of the current average waiting time for transfer into each unit.

Mrs. Currie: The information held centrally regarding people awaiting transfer to permanent and declared interim secure units is in respect of special hospital patients only. Information is not available for the last three years, as historical data are not retained. The current position is provided in the table. Any question of the number of prisoners awaiting transfer to National Health Service secure units is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Home

Secretary and the provision of health service facilities in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Cholesterol

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of recent research indicating the prevalence of high rates of cholesterol in British adults, he will launch a campaign along the lines of that in the United States, designed to encourage people to establish their own cholesterol level; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I am conscious that medical opinion in this country is evolving as new scientific results become available. Most doctors already agree that for families with a history of heart disease it is important to consider whether cholesterol levels are elevated.

The "Look After Your Heart" campaign, which was launched in April 1987, encourages people to follow a diet low in fat and particularly saturated fat, and to give up smoking. The effect of these changes could be expected to reduce average levels of cholesterol in the population as a whole. As the campaign develops, we will keep closely in touch with medical opinion on the question of cholesterol measurement.

Doctors (Merit Awards)

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the total amount paid in merit awards to doctors in the North Staffordshire district health authority for 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986;

(2) what was the total amount paid in merit awards to doctors in the west midlands region in 1983, 1984, 1985 and 1986.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to consult West Midlands regional health authority.

Civil Servants (Industrial Action)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many working days were lost in his Department due to industrial action by civil servants in the period 1976-86.

Mr. Newton: I regret that no information is available on the number of working days lost through industrial action in the period 1976-80. Working days lost from 1981-86 were as follows:

	Number
1981	161,562
1982	86,302
1983	17,408
1984	106,733
1985	24,803
1986	31,608

Foreign Nationals (Treatment)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the annual cost to the National Health Service of the treatment by general practitioners of foreign nationals from countries which do not have reciprocal arrangements with the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mr. John Manley

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services at what stage during proceedings the medical records of John Manley, sentenced in Lincoln in 1986 for assaulting his wife, were made available to the court.

Mrs. Currie: The sentence to which the hon. Member refers was given in 1983. At no stage during the proceedings did the Department make Mr. Manley's medical records available to the court.

Intensive Care Nurses

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the representations he has received during the past 12 months on the shortage of specialist intensive care nurses; what his response has been in each case; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: During the past 12 months the Department has received some 40 letters which refer to the shortage of specialist intensive care nurses. In responding to those letters, we have explained that although there have been significant increases in qualified nursing staff working in intensive care units (for example, a 75 per cent. increase in general intensive care and 142 per cent. in paediatric intensive care between 1981 and 1986) and an increase of 15 per cent. in the number of nurses undergoing specialist training in intensive care in the year ending 31 March 1987 over the previous year, we recognise there are staffing difficulties in some locations. Action is being taken to overcome these difficulties. Current central activities include a joint NHS-DHSS working group on equal opportunities for women which is aiming to find better ways of retaining existing staff; the Nursing and Midwifery Staff Negotiating Council is reviewing the nursing clinical grading structure with the aim of creating a more flexible structure which can recognise individual skills and responsibility; the regional health authority chairmen have commissioned a study to examine factors influencing recruitment and retention and suggest improvements; and a career development project group has been set up to examine the scope for more attractive career goals for nurses.

Pensioners (Benefits)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of how many pensioners in Scotland now receiving housing benefits will lose rights after the change in the social security system in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Legionnaires' Disease

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now publish the second report of the committee of inquiry into the outbreak of Legionnaires' disease in Stafford in April 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have arranged for this report to be published today and a copy has been placed in the Library.

In its second and final report, the committee has considered and dealt with that part of its terms of reference which asked it to "make recommendations on any action necessary to reduce the danger of future outbreaks originating in hospitals, other buildings and elsewhere".

I welcome the report. The Government are grateful to Sir John Badenoch and his committee for their comprehensive review of current knowledge of the disease and its transmission and for their balanced assessment of what needs to be done to minimise the risks of future outbreaks.

The report's recommendations have implications for a range of Government Departments, health and local authorities, industry and the medical and engineering professions, and for future study and research into the disease. In conjunction with other relevant departments, the Department will take forward consideration and follow-up action on those recommendations which are the responsibility of Government, and will monitor progress towards implementing the recommendations as a whole.

Two health notices were issued in May 1987, following the committee's first report, to supplement earlier guidance. The first of these asked health authorities to install dry-cooled air-conditioning systems in new hospital buildings, and to replace existing wet-spray systems when upgrading is required, unless this is absolutely precluded by space, weight or other considerations. It also confirmed existing advice on the safe operation and maintenance of wet-spray systems where they continue in use. The second advised on avoiding Legionella infection risks in hot and cold water systems. A code of practice on the operation of both cooling and water systems is expected to be published shortly.

Pensioners

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many disabled pensioners currently claim supplementary benefit; and how many will (a) gain and (b) lose from the change to income support.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 24 November 1987]: It is estimated that around 175,000 pensioners currently receiving supplementary benefit will qualify for the higher pensioner premium on grounds of disability. Of these, around 60,000 will gain at the point of change (excluding those whose entitlement increased by less than 50p). There will be no losers as transitional protection ensures that any claimants who remain entitled to benefit and whose entitlement decreases will not lose at the point of change.

EMPLOYMENT

Employment Bill

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received (a) supporting and (b) opposing clause 3 of the Employment Bill 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: Individual responses to the Green Paper "Trade Unions and their Members" and representations on particular clauses of the Employment Bill have been treated in confidence by my Department. I can tell the hon. Gentleman, however, that of the 67 comments received on the Green Paper proposal to give a statutory right for trade union members not to be subject to disciplinary proceedings for refusing to take industrial action, 16 expressed approval and 51 expressed disapproval.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of employers were meeting the quota established by the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 in (a) June 1979, (b) June 1983 and (c) June 1987; and what is the most recent figure.

Mr. Lee: The percentage of employers within the scheme meeting their quota obligation in (a) June 1979 was 35·3 per cent., (b) June 1983 31·4 per cent. and (c) June 1987 27·3 per cent. June 1987 is the latest date when figures are available. A particular difficulty for employers is that only registered disabled people count towards the quota and the number of people choosing to register as disabled has declined over the years to the extent that the 3 per cent. cannot now be met overall.

MSC Trainees (Accidents)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number of serious accidents sustained by Manpower Services Commission trainees within Easington constituency during the last three years.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available in the form requested and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Mines

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers of Her Majesty's inspectors of mines operating within the north-east area of British Coal over the last five years.

Mr. Nicholls: The numbers are as follows:

	Numbers
1 April
1983	6
1984	7
1985	6
1986	5

1987	5

Civil Servants (Industrial Action)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many working days were lost in his Department due to industrial action by civil servants in the period 1976-86.

Mr. Nicholls: Figures for the number of working days lost in the DE group due to industrial action between 1976 and 1980 are not available. Statistics for the years 1981 to 1986 are set out below:

Year	Number of days lost
1981	59,959
1982	3,332
1983	271
1984	22,313
1985	2,007
1986	3,121

Disabled Workers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information is available on the percentage of disabled workers employed in (a) the public and (b) the private sectors.

Mr. Nicholls: The only information available is about the extent to which employers covered by the quota scheme meet their obligations under that scheme. On 1 June 1986, 8 per cent. of public sector employees, and 1 per cent. of private sector employees, were registered disabled.

Fit For Work Award

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employers in (a) the public and

(b) the private sectors have won the Manpower Services Commission's fit for work award in each year since its foundation to 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of employers in (a) the public and (b) the private sectors who have won the Manpower Services Commission's fit for work award in each year since awards were first made are as follows:

	Public	Private
1980	3	97
1981	17	87
1982	15	86
1983	14	88
1984	24	76
1985	16	85
1986	20	80

Job Release Scheme

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will extend the closure dates for applications under the job release scheme; what steps he has taken to inform the public of the closure of the scheme in addition to issuing a press notice on 3 November; if he will consider extending the scheme with substantially lower age limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The job release scheme is being closed because of a targeting of resources on our top priority of reducing long-term unemployment. I do not intend to extend the closure date for applications or to reduce the age limits. In addition to the announcements of the closure and a press notice, closure was advertised in the national press on 6 November.

YTS (Inspections)

Mr. Neillist: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what form Her Majesty's Inspectorate type of inspections of YTS schemes will take; how many new staff will be involved; and what is his estimate of the average time between the inspections of placements.

Mr. Cope: The training standards advisory service has been set up to provide an independent assessment of the quality of training in YTS and to advise on how it could be improved.

The inspections undertaken by the TSAS take the form of a thorough survey of selected elements of the training programmes being delivered in YTS with emphasis on quality assurance. The service has 32 training standards inspectors engaged on YTS inspection, all of whom have a professional training background. The TSAS expects to visit every approved training organisation within a five-year period.

Professional and Executive Recruitment

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the operation of Professional and Executive Recruitment.

Mr. Fowler: Yes. Professional and Executive Recruitment provides specialised consultancy and advertising recruitment services to employers wishing to fill professional, technical, scientific, supervisory and managerial vacancies. It operates these services on a commercial basis, charging fees to employers and earning revenue from its free newspaper, Executive Post, which is sent direct to well over 100,000 jobseekers each week as part of PER's advisory and information service. PER's consultancy service extends from straightforward advertising to full recruitment assignments. It operates nationwide, from a network of 35 offices.

There is extensive and effective private sector provision in the activities which PER provides on a fee charging basis. The Government's view is that activities of an obviously commercial nature are better carried on in the private sector.

I have accordingly decided to seek professional advice about options for transferring PER out of the public sector. I have appointed Lloyds Merchant Bank Limited to act as my advisers and to report to me early in the New Year.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Inner City Task Forces

94. Mr. Squire: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made with the inner city task forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I would inform my hon. Friend that my Department is responsible for the inner-city task forces.

All 16 of our inner-city task forces are now operational. Specifically the task forces aim to:

- Generate more jobs for local people.
- Encourage local enterprise development.
  - Provide enterprise training, financial and managerial assistance to new businesses.
- Improve the employability of local people, including those about to enter the labour market, by training programmes aimed at specific employment opportunities.
- Support initiatives designed to improve the environment, the provision of community services and to reduce the level of crime where these can be linked to the reintegration of local people into local economic activity.
- Improve co-ordination between different Government programmes, and with the activities of other local bodies such as (local authorities/the voluntary sector, private industry).
- Strengthen the capability of local organisations to undertake long term economic and enterprise development activity.
- Target the employment needs of specific disadvantaged groups, especially ethnic minorities.
- Develop innovative solutions to problems, which can be applied in other inner-city areas.

I encourage our task force teams, who are civil servants from several Departments and secondees from the private sector, to adopt an imaginative non-bureaucratic approach to the problems of their districts and to develop strong links with the residents and the businesses.

Over 250 projects with a focus on enterprise and jobs are already being funded in the areas they cover. The private sector is becoming increasingly involved with our efforts. Over 200 companies are already working with the task forces and more are looking to help. I believe that the task force approach is proving very successful now that some of them are well established and that all the task forces are a valuable instrument of direct Government help for the areas they serve.

Space Research

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in the light of Her Majesty's Government's stance at the recent Hague meeting of the European Space Agency and the United Kingdom's withdrawal from the Hermes project, he will make a statement on his plans for unilateral initiatives in this field and for the promotion of the United Kingdom space research effort.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We declined to join the Hermes programme because we were not satisfied that there were adequate industrial, economic, commercial or scientific benefits to justify the considerable expenditure involved. We are studying and evaluating proposals for the next generation of space launchers, including re-usable spaceplanes such as Hotol.

Industry (Revitalisation)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received concerning his plans for revitalising industry in inner city areas.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am regularly in touch with those who share our commitment to revitalise industry in inner city areas. We are continuing to develop measures, including the Government's inner cities initiative, to target assistance more effectively on the problems of the inner city, including the problems of industry in these areas.

London Underground

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what consideration he is giving to referring the London Underground to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission; and if he will detail the evidence on levels of service and standards which have led him to consider this action.

Mr. Maude: I announced this reference on 7 September. It is part of the rolling programme of references of nationalised industries to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and is the first reference of the London Underground. The last reference involving London Regional Transport was made in 1983 and related to the maintenance of London Transport buses.

Tobacco (Shop Closures)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to how many independent shops retailing tobacco have closed in the last full year for which statistics are available.

Mr. Atkins: The information is not available.

Textiles

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the growth of textile imports for each year since 1977.

Mr. Atkins: Details of imports of textiles for each year since 1977 are contained in the following table:

Imports of textiles 1977 to 1986

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the growth of the textile industry's production for each year since 1975.

Mr. Atkins: The information is as follows:

Textiles (SIC class 43)

	Index of production (1980 = 100)	Growth (percentage change on previous year)
1975	125·6	..

Patent Office

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to relocate the Patent Office to Cardiff.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I am actively considering the relocation of the Patent Office outside London in order to reduce the very high costs of office accommodation and the other problems of a central London location. My Department has an established and successful contact with Cardiff where the Companies Registration Office is already located. I have therefore asked my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales to give Welsh Office assistance to my officials and the Property Services Agency in finding and considering suitable accommodation in or near Cardiff. I have not yet taken any final decision on the relocation of the office anywhere.

Joint Ventures (Soviet Union)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) if Her Majesty's Government are in favour of British companies responding to the call by the Soviet Government to set up joint ventures in the Soviet Union; what assistance the Department of Trade and Industry is providing; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report a list of British companies which (a) have entered into joint ventures in the Soviet Union and (b) are currently negotiating such joint ventures.

Mr. Atkins: Whether it is in the interest of British companies to enter into joint ventures in the Soviet Union is entirely a matter for the commercial judgment of individual companies. My Department and the commercial department of the British Embassy in Moscow maintain close contact with companies known to be interested in joint ventures to advise them of latest developments with regard to their establishment. So far, only about 20 joint ventures have been approved by the Soviet authorities, none as yet with British companies. Many British companies have however submitted proposals and some are at an advanced stage of negotiation. For reasons of commerical confidentiality, it is not appropriate for me to list interested companies.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many cases of insider dealing in the last 12 months have been brought to the notice of the Department of Trade and Industry; how many of such cases have resulted in prosecutions; and how many of such prosecutions have resulted in convictions.

Mr. Maude: In the last 12 months, 25 cases of possible insider dealing have been considered for investigation. None of these has yet resulted in a prosecution. However, two cases referred to my Department in November 1986 have resulted in prosecutions and convictions, and two more cases referred in 1986 are now the subject of criminal proceedings. Ten cases are currently being investigated under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986. A further 11 cases are currently being considered for investigation.

SCOTLAND

"Prosecuting Sexual Assault"

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he intends to act on the recommendations made in the Scottish Home and Health Department's report "Prosecuting Sexual Assault";

(2) if he has received representations from Scottish rape crisis centres on the Scottish Home and Health Department's report "Prosecuting Sexual Assault"; and if he will make a statement on the recommendations made in that report.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Govan (Mr. Millan) on 26 October 1987 at column 144.

Prisoners

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the weekly cost of maintaining a prisoner in each of Scotland's prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The latest available figures are for 1986-87 and are as follows:

Approximate gross weekly cost per inmate

The figures include transfer value of supplies drawn by establishments from central stores and prisons industries as well as the direct revenue costs of each establishment.

Domiciliary Consultations

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, in the light of the cost of domiciliary consultations in 1986-87, and in the light of the criticism by general practitioners of its alleged abuse by hospital consultants, he will review the need for such consultations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have not received any criticisms from general practitioners alleging abuse of the domiciliary consultation procedure by hospital consultants.

NHS Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the cost of merit awards to National Health Service consultants in Scotland in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Precise information on the cost of distinction and merit awards to NHS consultants is not held centrally. Taking account of abatement for those holding part-time contracts, it is estimated that some £6 million would have been paid to NHS staff.

Family Planning

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many patients were registered with general practitioners for National Health Service contraceptive services in 1986 in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: 270,797.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many general practitioners are registered to provide a National Health Service family planning service to their patients in Scotland; and how many premises are involved.

Mr. Rifkind: At 1 October 1986, the latest date for which this information is available, 3,232 general practitioners were in contract with health boards to provide contraceptive service to their patients. Information on the number of premises involved is not centrally available.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the total cost of the general practitioner provision for National Health Service family planning services to patients for 1986 in Scotland;

(2) what was the total cost of the general practitioner provision for National Health Service family planning services to patients for 1986 in Scotland.

Mr. Rifkind: In the year ended 31 March 1987, the cost was £2,830,392.

Sentencing Options

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has proposals substantially to increase the range and quality of sentencing options available to the courts for the 16 to 21 years of age group.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no present plans to extend the existing wide range of sentencing options available to the courts.

Rating Reform

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet come to a decision as to the definition of the term full-time student for the purposes of section 8(6) of the Abolition of Domestic Rates (Scotland) Act 1987.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend will shortly bring forward draft regulations under section 8(6) of the 1987 Act incorporating the necessary definitions.

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Rifkind: Scottish Office supplies of stationery are obtained from Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which works closely both with the industry and the Department of Trade and Industry in relation to possibilities for greater use of recycled paper. I understand that the general purpose paper which Her Majesty's Stationery Office supply may contain an element of recycled waste when purchased in accordance with the conditions and specifications of Her Majesty's Stationery Office contracts.

Envelopes and demand slips for internal use in the Scottish Office are made from recycled paper.

Certain categories of waste paper from the Scottish Office are uplifted by a contractor for recycling.

Students

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, with regard to the student grants paid by the Scottish Education Department, at what percentage rate the threshold at which parental contribution becomes payable has risen each year since 1979; and what has been the comparable change in (a) the retail prices index and (b) average pay increases in each such year.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is set out in the table. The percentage increases for the retail prices index and average pay are based on financial years and those for the parental contribution threshold on the equivalent academic year.

Percentage increase in:	1979-80	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The latest available figures for full-time students in receipt of fees only awards are in respect of session 1986-87. The information requested is as follows:

Strathclyde University	1,286
Glasgow College of Technology	539

Peterhead Prison

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last visited Peterhead prison; and when he next intends to visit Peterhead prison.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend was scheduled to visit Peterhead prison on 29 September 1987, but the visit had to be cancelled because of the continuation of a major incident which had started the previous evening. He last visited the prison, in his then capacity of Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, on 22 August 1979. He has no immediate plans to make a further visit.

SSHA Houses

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the outstanding debt charge for Scottish Special Housing Association homes; and what proportion of the average rent is charged as a revenue consequence of those debt charges.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The association's outstanding loan debt was £571·5 million at 31 March 1987. Average rent is set by the association in the light of overall expected revenue expenditure, including loan charges, and taking account of Government subsidy. In 1986-87, expenditure on loan charges was equivalent to 92 per cent. of rental income, or 67 per cent. of total revenue income.

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers of Scottish Special Housing Association houses in each district council area in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those financial institutions or housing associations which have expressed an interest in buying Scottish Special Housing Association houses in the event of enactment of the proposals in "Scottish Homes".

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A number of financial institutions and housing associations have expressed interest in participating in the new opportunities for improving housing choice and conditions which our proposal for the development of housing policy offer. Those expressions of interest are not dependent on the establishment of Scottish Homes nor are they confined to specific proposals involving houses presently owned by the Scottish Special Housing Association. Possibilities for changes in the ownership of those houses will involve consultation with the tenants who occupy them. Those interested in offering tenants the opportunity of a change in their renting arrangements will no doubt approach them in due course.

Health Service Unions

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy that health service unions will be consulted by his Department in relation to the Government's proposals "Promoting Better Health".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Copies of the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" (Cm. 249), published on 25 November, have been sent to a large number of bodies including the Scottish Trades Union Congress, the British Medical Association and the British Dental Association. The Government now intend to enter into discussions with representatives of the professions and with health boards about the White Paper's proposals.

Rating Reform

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a detailed breakdown of the £100,000 to be spent on the poll tax information campaign.

Mr. Lang: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Cathcart (Mr. Maxton) of 1 December.

Police Officers (Complaints)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints were lodged against Scottish police officers in each year since 1979; and of those (a) how many were withdrawn, (b) how many were upheld, (c) how many were rejected, and (d) how many prosecutions were brought against police officers as a result of a complaint.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Details of the information held centrally about complaints against the police are contained in chapter II and table 11 of the annual reports of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary for Scotland, copies of which are in the Library.

Eels

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to introduce measures to conserve the stock of eels in Scottish lochs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are no plans to introduce measures to conserve the stocks of eels in Scottish waters. Eels in Scottish inland waters are classified as fresh water fish and may be netted or trapped by the proprietor or occupier of the fishing right.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to how many companies are registered for eel fishing in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not collected by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland. No special licence is required to fish for eels in Scottish inland waters. Accordingly, if the company concerned is the proprietor or occupier of the fishing right there is nothing to prevent it from exercising its lawful right.

Housing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to bring forward legislation arising from the White Paper "Housing: The Government's Proposals for Scotland."

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Shortly.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many representatives elected by charities and other housing agencies will be members of the board of Scottish Homes;

(2) how many elected representatives of the Scottish local authorities will be members of the board of Scottish Homes;

(3) how many elected representatives of tenants' associations of the public and private sectors will be members of the board of Scottish Homes;

(4) how many elected representatives of the Scottish housing associations will be members of the board of Scottish Homes.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the White Paper, "Housing: The Government's Proposals for Scotland" (Cm. 242). Paragraph 2.17 explains the Government's intentions in relation to the composition of the board of Scottish Homes.

Prisons (Reform)

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce reform into Scottish prisons following the recent outbreaks of violence at Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 27 October 1987]: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently assessing the implications of recent incidents in Scottish prisons. The Government has taken major steps to improve the operation of the Scottish prison service in recent months. The problem of overcrowding has been greatly eased this year by the availability of 350 extra places in new accommodation at Shotts prison and by the change of use of four penal establishments to transfer under-utilised places from the young offender system to adult prisons.

On 1 November new arrangements, under "Fresh Start", for staff attendance, working practices and management structures were introduced. These will make it possible to develop more flexible and effective local patterns of working.

Plans are at an advanced stage for new approaches to regimes and improved staff training to take advantage of the major initiatives which are already under way.

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to introduce reform in Scottish prisons following the recent outbreaks of violence at Scottish prisons.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [pursuant to his reply, 18 November 1987, c. 559]: My right hon. and learned Friend is currently assessing the implications of recent incident in Scottish prisons. Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report tables listing his Department's expenditure since 1979-80 (a) in cash terms, (b) in constant 1986-87 prices and (c) as a percentage of the United Kingdom planning total; and if he will publish similar tables for the years 1988-89 to 1990-91 based on the public expenditure plans contained in the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 19 November 1987]: The information is given in the table. Column (d) shows the ratio of Scottish "block" services to comparable expenditure in England, and is more meaningful than column (c) as the United Kingdom planning total includes expenditure in Scotland on services, for example defence and social security, which are not included in my right hon. and learned Friend's responsibilities. The figure for 1990-91 in column (d) is not available pending decisions on individual programmes.

Nuclear Accidents (Monitoring)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals or representations he has received regarding a programme of systematic whole body monitoring of people in the areas affected by Chernobyl fallout to replace the voluntary programme presently undertaken by the Scottish universities research and reactor centre at East Kilbride; what his response has been; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [pursuant to his reply, 21 October 1987, c. 774]: The whole body monitoring being undertaken by the Scottish universities research and reactor centre is part of a national programme funded by the Government. Many Scots, including those from areas particularly affected by the Chernobyl fallout, have been monitored, and I understand that the current programme at the centre is likely to be continued to provide further information on the decreasing caesium levels in the body. However, the results of monitoring to date, together with evidence from the very substantial monitoring of foodstuffs and other materials, does not suggest a need for an extended programme of wholebody monitoring in Scotland.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Foreign Currency

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will review the arrangements for providing exchange risk cover for official borrowing in foreign currency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: The terms of the exchange cover scheme for official foreign currency borrowing have been reviewed in the light of this year's substantial increase in the United Kingdom's foreign currency reserves. My right hon. Friend has decided that exchange cover should continue to be provided only for official foreign currency loans of $25 million equivalent or above and that the interest rate benefit of ½ per cent. currently available to those who borrow under the scheme should now be withdrawn. The $25 million limit will not apply to loans associated with grants from the European Community. Certain other minor changes have also been made in the scheme. Nationalised industries, local authorities and others are being informed of the details.

Scottish Oil Fund

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any plans to establish a Scottish oil fund to encourage industrial enterprise in Scotland.

Mr. Lilley: No.

Manufactured Exports

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to the oral reply of 26 November, Official Report, column 365, what has been the figure for the United Kingdom's manufactured exports for each year since 1975.

Mr. Major: The information, from 1978 onwards, is available in table B7 of the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics," November edition. Figures for earlier years can be found in the annual supplement No. 8 of this publication. Copies are in the Library.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table, similar to table 13 on page 61 of the current edition of "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom", showing taxes and royalties attributable to United Kingdom and United Kingdom continental shelf oil and gas, at 1987-88 prices.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 1 December 1987]: Information on 1987-88 price levels is not yet available so the figures on tax and royalty revenues attributable to United Kingdom and United Kingdom continental shelf oil and gas production have been converted to 1986-87 prices, using the GDP (market prices) deflator. The figures are as follows:

£ million, 1986-87 prices

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

13. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) individuals, (b) local authorities and (c) voluntary organisations have submitted comments to him in respect of Cmnd. 9714, "Paying for Local Government".

Mr. Chope: Of the 1,217 responses received before the end of the consultation period on 31 October 1986, 479 were from private individuals, 268 were from principal local authorities, and 14 from voluntary organisations.

22. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to publish a White Paper on rates reform.

Mr. Chope: The Government's proposals for reforming the rating system were set out in a Green Paper published in January 1986. Consultation on the proposals ran until October of last year. We propose to introduce the necessary legislation shortly.

28. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he has now received to date to his consultation document "The Community Charge".

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Folkestone and Hythe (Mr. Howard) to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) on 4 November at column 928.

45. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Leicester city council concerning the implementation of the proposed poll tax.

Mr. Howard: Leicester city council responded to the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" but has made no specific representations on the implementation of the community charge.

46. Mr. Jim Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now proposes to introduce the community charge legislation.

51. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he now proposes to introduce legislation on the community charge and uniform business rate.

Mr. Howard: Shortly.

47. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the number of letters which his Department has now received about the proposed poll tax, and the number of letters critical of the tax.

53. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has now received about the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: A summary of the 1,271 responses received by the Department before 31 October 1986, when the consultation period on the Green Paper ended, was placed in the Library on 15 December last. Since June 1987, the Department has received more than 3,500 letters commenting on specific aspects of our proposals or requesting further information.

55. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to the observations of the National Council for Civil Liberties on the proposed community charge.

Mr. Howard: None, since the NCCL's report was not sent to me.

65. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the proportion of local government income which will be levied locally after the introduction of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: We have received a number of representations from those who are concerned that percentage changes in community charges will be disproportionate to percentage changes in expenditure. Our proposals for the way in which grant and non-domestic rates will be paid address this concern and will ensure that when the scheme is fully implemented, local authorities' gross community charges will increase in line with increases in expenditure in both cash and percentage terms.

76. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has received any representations regarding the imposition of the poll tax from Dulwich; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: Information on responses to the Green Paper received during the consultation period were recorded by local authority area by borough in London.

Of the 1217 responses received by my Department before 31 October 1986 when the consultation period on the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714) ended, four were from respondents then resident in the London borough of Southwark.

80. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from voluntary organisations in respect of the proposed community charge.

Mr. Howard: We have received representations from a number of voluntary organisations, about the community charge, in response to the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government" (Cmnd. 9714), (in respect of which a summary of responses was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986) and subsequently.

86. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what meetings have taken place between his officials and representatives of voluntary organisations to discuss the proposed community charge.

Mr. Howard: Officials have met representatives of The National Council for Voluntary Organisations, the Salvation Army, Women's Aid Federation England and Welsh Women's Aid.

88. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many recent representations he has received on the uniform business rate.

Mr. Howard: I continue to receive representations on all aspects of our proposals for reform of the rating system.

93. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the number of poll tax register changes per annum which will be required in England and Wales.

Mr. Howard: Surveys indicate that about 15 per cent. of registered electors change addresses each year, while a sample of local authorities suggests that up to 20 per cent. of rate bills are subject to such changes. While more individuals will appear on community charge registers than on rating rolls, I would not expect a large increase in the proportion of entries requiring change.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if, following his revised proposals for the introduction of the poll tax, which he announced on 17 November, he will say (a) what will be the average poll tax bill for claimants of income support (including any dependants) in the year 1994-95, assuming that real local authority expenditure levels and the number of income support claimants remain constant at 1988-89 levels (b) what will be the average poll tax bill for claimants of income support, including any dependants, in the year 1994-5 on the same assumptions, in each region of the United Kingdom, (c) what will be the average poll tax bill for claimants, including any dependants, in receipt of housing benefit and not in receipt of income support in the year 1994-95, on the same assumptions, and (d) what will be the average poll tax bill for claimants, including any dependants, in receipt of housing benefit and not in receipt of income support in the year 1994-95, on the same assumptions, in each region of the United Kingdom;

(2) if, following his revised proposals for the poll tax announced on 17 November, he will indicate (a) what proportion of adults in each region of the United Kingdom are in families (i) expected to be in receipt of income support from April 1988 and (ii) expected to be in receipt of housing benefit from April 1988, (b) whether claimants of income support will continue to be entitled to rebates of at least 80 per cent. of their poll tax bills, at least until the transition to the poll tax is completed, in 1994-95, and (c) whether applicable amounts, on the basis of which income support and poll tax rebates will be calculated (i) up-rated in line with the retail prices index at least until 1994-95, and (ii) including an amount equal to 20 per cent. of the average poll tax bill for claimants on income support for as long as such claimants are liable for 20 per cent. of their poll tax bills.

Mr. Howard: All recipients of income support will be entitled to 80 per cent. community charge rebates. If the new system had been fully in force in 1987-88, the average community charge bill would have been £224; the average amount paid by income support recipients would therefore have been £45. The average for each region, on the same assumptions, would be:

Northern region	256	51
Yorkshire and Humberside	233	47
North West	233	45
East Midlands	206	41
West Midlands	183	37
East Anglia	172	34
Greater London	348	70
South East	184	37
South West	186	37

Estimates for 1988-89 are not available. Those receiving housing benefit, but not income support, will receive rebates of up to 80 per cent. of the community charge.

The number of adults in each region expected to be in receipt of income support from April 1988 and the number of adults in each region expected to be in receipt of housing benefit from April 1988 are not available. The level of applicable amounts in 1994 will be a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services at the appropriate time.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has completed his consideration of the measures that may be necessary to ensure that the community charges register cannot be used to track down political refugees and battered wives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: A number of representations have been made by women's aid groups and on behalf of political refugees, expressing concern that the community charges register could be used to track down political refugees and battered wives.

Following recent discussions between officials from this Department and the Welsh Office, and representatives of Women's Aid Federation England and Welsh Women's Aid; we have decided to take steps to protect the confidentiality of people at risk, to enable them to register for the community charge without making public their names and addresses.

Community charges registration officers will be required to omit from the published version of the register the name of any individual who satisfies them that he or she may suffer physical injury if his or her name is listed. In cases where this would result in an address being listed with no corresponding name, the address will also be omitted, thus ensuring that attention is not drawn to properties where people at risk are resident.

This is a move which should be welcomed by women's aid groups and by political refugees. It will enable people who live under the threat of violence to meet their obligation to register for the community charge, safe in the knowledge that there is no risk involved.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce details of the poll tax rebate system.

Mr. Scott: I have been asked to reply. We hope to publish draft community charge rebate regulations in the spring or early summer of 1988, following consultations with the local authority associations.

Homelessness

19. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer of 15 July, Official Report, columns 1126-28, what progress has been made with the Government's proposals for dealing with the problem of homelessness in London; and if he will make a statement.

59. Miss Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what new proposals he has for dealing with the problem of homelessness in England and Wales.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Members to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey.

33. Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Government-owned properties are leased to local authorities for use as accommodation for the homeless; and what steps he is taking to increase this number.

Mr. Chope: 276 properties amongst those for which my right hon. Friend has responsibility are temporarily let to local authorities to meet housing needs.

Excluding property being sold, 6·5 per cent. of the housing stock for which my right hon. Friend is responsible has remained empty for six months. This includes dwellings undergoing renovation.

My right hon. Friend's policy is to sell property which is surplus to Government requirements, usually on the open market.

57. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of homeless people currently being housed by local authorities in England.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the second quarter of 1987, local authorities in England accepted responsibility for securing accommodation (not necessarily in council-owned property) for an estimated 26,440 households, under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act.

66. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to bring council properties that are empty and awaiting sale into use for homeless people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier today to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes). Circular 12/85 advises local authorities on the temporary use of property by homeless people.

Housing Associations (Finance)

25. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Housing Corporation to discuss private finance for housing associations.

Mr. Waldegrave: I met the chairman and the chief executive of the Housing Corporation on 26 October to discuss various issues, including the use of private finance by housing associations.

Acid Rain

26. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research Her Majesty's Government are funding to ascertain the effects of acid deposition on crops and buildings; and what funds his Department is providing for this research.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government fund an extensive programme of reseach in these two areas. A total of about £870,000 pa is being spent at present, of which the Department provides about £750,000.

Nirex

27. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet representatives of Nirex; and what matters he expects to discuss.

64. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet representatives of Nirex; and what matters will be discussed.

72. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next expects to meet representatives of Nirex; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to meet representatives of Nirex.

37. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next hopes to meet the chairman of Nirex; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) and for Southport (Mr. Fearn).

92. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next hopes to meet the chairman of Nirex; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Members for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) and for Southport (Mr. Fearn).

Sports Council

29. Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he is next to meet the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss current issues facing sport.

Mr. Moynihan: I meet regularly the chairman of the Sports Council to discuss issues relating to the development of sport. I last met him on 3 November and I expect to see him again shortly.

Drug Abuse (Sport)

30. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is taking any new initiatives to curb drug abuse in sport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I and Sebastian Coe, vice-chairman of the Sports Council, carried out a review of drug abuse in sport this summer. Our report was endorsed by the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs and by the Sports Council. As a result, the council plans to have a revised, independent testing regime in place by 1 April 1988. I welcome the council's speedy response to our report.

Drug abuse in sport is an international problem. I am pursuing the need for international co-operation with Sports Ministers and a number of international bodies of sport. I am encouraged by the positive attitude they are adopting.

Voters (Statistics)

31. Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the proportion of registered voters who are registered as the official ratepayer or head of household for rating purposes; what is the proportion of registered ratepayers who are women; and what is the proportion of registered voters who are women.

Mr. Howard: Neither the electoral registers nor local authority rate rolls contain this information. It is known that in 1986, out of an adult population of 36·2 million in England, 18·9 million (52 per cent.) were women and it is therefore likely that out of the 35 million persons registered to vote some 18 million would be women. It is further known that of 17·9 million households in England, 4·6 million were headed by women though households need not equate with domestic hereditament and not all householders pay rates.

Planning Zones

32. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response there has been by local authorities to the concept of simplified planning zones.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 23 November, at column 530, to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker).

Government-owned Property

34. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of housing stock owned by Government Departments has been empty for more than six months.

48. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy that properties owned by Government Departments which have been empty for more than six months can be used for housing instead of being sold on the open market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave today to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Springburn (Mr. Martin).

Water Quality

35. Mr. Win Griffiths To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when full compliance with the two EC directives on the quality of water, including the ending of all derogations granted by the Commission, will be achieved.

Mr. Moynihan: Most public water supplies for which derogations have been sought from the European Commission are expected to comply with the EC directive relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption by 1990. Improvements are also being made or are planned for most supplies where derogations have been given by my right hon. Friend.

Severn-Trent Water Authority

36. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to visit the headquarters of the Severn-Trent water authority to discuss water privatisation and the National River Authority.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth).

38. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for dealing with the differential rate of house price inflation throughout the United Kingdom;

62. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for dealing with house price inflation.

71. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has for dealing with house price inflation in the south-east of England.

Mr. Waldegrave: I would refer the hon. Members to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe) to the Hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 4 November at column 736.

Housing Policy

39. Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has had to his White paper on housing policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have received a large number of comments on the White Paper on housing and the associated consultation and explanatory documents issued by the Department. These comments have come from the local authority associations, a number of individual local authorities, and various organisations and individuals with an interest in housing. We are considering very carefully all the points that respondents have made.

Enterprise Zones

40. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total cost, including the loss of rate fund compensation of enterprise zones for the period since the introduction of these zones until the zone-free period has expired.

Mr. Trippier: The three principal components of the cost of the EZ experiment are: grant paid to local authorities in respect of rate revenue foregone from properties on the zones; tax revenue forgone in the form of tax allowances for expenditure by developers on construction of commercial and industrial properties there; and public sector investment attributable to the zones. The final cost will therefore depend upon when development occurs and the extent of that development. In the nature of the EZ experiment, this cannot be predicted; nor is it possible to predict the effect of the introduction of the uniform business rate on the final cost. No estimate of what that cost might be has therefore been made.

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many enterprise zones have been established to date; and whether he intends to establish any further areas.

Mr. Trippier: Twenty-five enterprise zones have been established in the United Kingdom to date. My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to designate further zones.

Water Charges

41. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how charges for water services will be applied after the abolition of domestic taxes to those properties where meters have not been installed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Water undertakers will decide themselves what basis of charges they will adopt. These will have to comply with the principles of section 30 of the Water Act 1973 that charges must have regard to costs and not show any undue preference to or discrimination against any class of persons. I understand that the water industry is currently studying a number of options for charging for water services once domestic rateable values are abolished and I expect to receive their conclusions shortly.

"The Way Forward"

42. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received as a result of the publication of the Nirex discussion document "The Way Forward."

Mr. Moynihan: None. I would expect any representations about Nirex's discussion document "The Way Forward" to be sent directly to Nirex.

49. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has met the chairman of Nirex to discuss its consultation document published on 12 November, "The Way Forward."

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman of Nirex on 22 October, when the subject of the document formed part of a wide-ranging discussion about radioactive waste.

Housing Policy, Hackney

43. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will pay an official visit to Hackney to discuss housing policy.

Mr. Waldegrave: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have any plans to do so. Members and officers of Hackney LBC visited my Department on 5 October to discuss the borough's housing investment programme allocaton for 1988-89.

Inner-City Areas (Development Grants)

44. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the grants now available from his Department to private developers wishing to develop in inner-city areas.

Mr. Trippier: The following grants are available to private developers in England wishing to develop in inner-cities:

urban development grant
urban regeneration grant
derelict land grant

Assistance is also provided through the operation of 17 enterprise zones, six urban development corporations, the urban programme and land registers.

Storm Damage (Tree Replacement)

50. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans Her Majesty's Government have to replace the trees lost in the gale of 15 and 16 October with trees of similar character appropriate to the local environment.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend announced on October 21 special help for the replacement of amenity trees lost in the storm. The Countryside Commission has set up a special unit, Task Force Trees, to pay grants for this purpose and provide advice. Preliminary grant allocations to local authorities were announced on November 24. The commission's aim is to bring about, not only reinstatement, but where possible improvement, with preference given to native hardwood species.

Urban Development Corporations

52. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the location of the first group of mini urban development corporations; and how much Government funding will go to each location.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend today to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran).

Homeless Children

54. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of homeless children in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Waldegrave: At 30 June 1987 there were 10,870 households temporarily placed in bed-and-breakfast accommodation by English local authorities under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act. Information on the number of children in these households is not collected by the Department.

Teesside (Derelict Areas)

56. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made by the Teesside urban development corporation in clearing and developing derelict areas in Teesside.

Mr. Trippier: Excellent progress is being made in attracting new investment into Teesside. A major redevelopment of the former Smith's dock shipyard was announced during the Prime Minister's visit in September. Other schemes already in the pipeline include a leisure and commercial complex at Stockton racecourse, a marina at Hartlepool south docks, and developments at Bowesfield park, Belasis park and the former Acklam steelworks.

Darlington (Expenditure)

58. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what percentage Darlington borough council's annual expenditure has changed since 1979.

Mr. Howard: Darlington borough council's net current expenditure has increases by 163 per cent. in cash terms between 1978-79 and 1986-87. This represents an increase of 35 per cent. after taking account of inflation as measured by the GDP deflator.

Storm Damage

60. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the storm damage incurred by local authorities in October.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave on 19 November at column 669.

73. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities in response to his departmental letter of 23 October detailing special financial assistance for storm damage.

Mr. Chope: I have received numerous representations from local authorities about the special financial assistance scheme for storm damage.

78. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any further proposals in respect of assisting local authorities to meet the cost of the October storms; and if he will make a statement.

79. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in compensating local authorities for the recent storm damage.

Mr. Chope: My right hon. Friend has already announced details of the scheme of special financial assistance that is being made available to local authorities, and has made clear that we will interpret claims reasonably and flexibly. My Department has now issued a claim form and guidance to local authorities for use in requesting special financial assistance and additional capital allocations this year. A copy has been placed in the Library. Claims under the scheme must be with the Department by 31 January 1988.

Local Authorities (Improvement and Repair Programmes)

61. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will increase central Government subsidies to local authorities in respect of their improvement and repair programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: There are no current plans to increase central government subsidies to local authorities for the improvement and repair of their own housing stock as these are included in the housing subsidy system which is intended to meet any deficit on housing expenditure which an authority cannot finance out of their own resources. The Department's proposals for a reformed system of grants to householders for repair and improvement and the appropriate levels of Exchequer contribution to local authorities are set out in the consultation paper: "Home Improvement Policy" which was published on 5 November 1987, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Associations

63. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the National Federation of Housing Associations to discuss the role of housing associations following his White Paper on housing policy.

Mr. Waldegrave: I met the chairman and the director of the National Federation of Housing Associations on 19 October to discuss a range of issues affecting housing associations arising from the White Paper "Housing: The Government"s Proposals', and the Department's consultation paper on finance for housing associations.

Housing Action Trusts

67. Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what areas are currently being considered for housing action trusts.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is too early for my right hon. Friend to make any statement about areas in which he may propose to establish housing action trusts. It is expected that HATs will be established in London and elsewhere.

Council House Sales

68. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any new proposals to allow local authorities to use the receipts from council house sales to finance the building of new council homes.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to my hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Brecon and Radnor (Mr. Livsey) on 6 November at column 735.

77. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will allow balances from the sale of council houses to be used, by mutual agreement, by housing associations and trusts for the building of new low-cost homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Authorities may already use their housing investment programme allocations or the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts to make loans or grants to housing associations. The future use of capital receipts from the sale of council houses will be discussed in the Government's forthcoming consultation paper on a new financial regime for local authority housing.

82. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in England since May 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: From April 1979 to June 1987, about 811,000 tenants bought their houses from English local authorities and new towns.

87. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many right-to-buy applications have been received by the London borough of Waltham Forest since 1 April 1986; and how many council dwellings have been sold since that date.

Mr. Waldegrave: The London borough of Waltham Forest has not submitted a return of right-to-buy applications or of council house sales in the period from April 1986.

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many right-to-buy applications have been received by the London borough of Islington since the Housing Act 1980 came into effect; and how many council dwellings have been sold accordingly.

Mr. Waldegrave: The borough of Islington reported 4,915 applications for the right to buy and 921 sales completed in the period up to the end of June 1987.

Water Rates

69. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much he expects water rates to increase in the next financial year.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend expects to announce shortly the external finance limits and the financial targets for each water authority. It will then be for individual authorities to finalise their budgets and take their own decisions on the details of their charges.

Derelict Land Grant

74. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much Government funding has been contributed to the derelict land grant in each of the last three years; and how much vacant or derelict land in public ownership has been sold as a result.

Mr. Trippier: The resources provided for derelict land grant in the last three years have been as follows:

	£ million
1984-85	75·03
1985-86	82·78
1986-87	83·13

In these three years a total of nearly 3,500 hectares of derelict land has been reclaimed with the aid of derelict land grant. Figures are not available to show the amount of land in public ownership which has been sold following grant-aided reclamation. However a total of 27,000 acres of land was removed from the registers of unused land and underused land owned by public bodies in the period January 1985 to October 1987 because the land had been sold. It is not known how much, if any, of this land had previously been derelict, and reclaimed using derelict land grant.

Housebuilding

75. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the current level of housebuilding starts.

Mr. Waldegrave: Provisional figures for January to September of this year showed that total housebuilding starts in England were about 6,000 more than in the same period of last year. Private housebuilding starts this year have been the highest recorded in the first three quarters of any year since 1973.

Assured Tenancies

81. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of assured tenancies that have been created under the Housing Act 1980 and the Housing and Planning Act 1986; and of those how many are sheltered housing or flats.

Mr. Waldegrave: The number of assured tenancies at 1 April 1987 was 2,998. A substantial proportion of these is thought to be of sheltered accommodation, but the exact figure is not available.

Planning Applications (London)

83. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the workings of the appeal system for planning applications in the Greater London area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The Government's response to the Fifth Report from the Environment Committee, Planning: Appeals, Call-In and Major Public Inquiries, (Cm. 43) of December 1986 sets out the action which is being taken to improve the operation of the planning appeals system following detailed management reviews by the Department. Progress in implementing the changes and performance is being monitored carefully.

Runcorn New Town

84. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he intends to consult Runcorn new town tenants with regard to their wishes respecting successor landlords after the wind-up of the New Town Development Corporation.

Mrs. Roe: Before we can decide how best to canvass the views of Runcorn new town tenants about the future management of their houses, we need to know which landlords are interested in providing them with a service. We shall announce our proposals as soon as we are able.

Wetland Sites

85. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many wetland sites have been classified in the United Kingdom under the international convention.

Mr. Moynihan: I would refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave on 25 November to the hon. Member for Wentworth (Mr. Hardy) at columns 232-3.

Local Authorities (Financial Prudence)

89. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he is taking to improve standards of financial prudence by local authorities.

Mr. Howard: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on Tuesday 10 November at columns 110-11. In addition to the proposals I announced then, we have already taken a number of measures, including the provisions in the Local Government Act 1987, to inhibit the use of advance and deferred purchase schemes. We will continue to keep the situation under review, and will not hesitate to take whatever steps appear necessary to restrain imprudent behaviour by local authorities. In the longer term the new local government finance system we are proposing to establish will provide the basis for accountable and financially prudent local government.

Underground Fire, Dronfield, Derbyshire

90. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is now in a position to announce his decision on the funding of action on the underground fire at Callywhite Lane, Dronfield, in Derbyshire.

Mr. Trippier: As I have told the House, it would not be appropriate to make central Government financial assistance available to help fund the remedial works necessary to put out the fire.

My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has considered North-East Derbyshire district council's request that unrecovered expenditure they incur in dealing with the fire should be excluded from the definition of total expenditure, and has decided not to exclude it.

Shorthold Tenancies

91. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the number of the shorthold tenancies created under the Housing Act 1980.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not available. Over 5,000 protected shorthold tenancies were created in England and Wales between 28 November 1980, the date on which shorthold was introduced, and 1 December 1981. Information about shortholds created since 1 December 1981 has not been collected because the compulsory rent registration requirement for new shortholds outside the Greater London area was lifted on that date under the Protected Shorthold Tenancies (Rent Registration) Order 1981.

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Moynihan: Most types of paper we use contain varying proportions of re-cycled paper. Comprehensive information on waste paper is not readily available, but the waste paper from our London buildings is sent for recycling.

Chlorofluorocarbons

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Envrionment if he will give the 1986 levels of production of chlorofluorocarbons for (a) Britain and (b) the European Economic Community; and what equivalent information he has for (i) the United States of America and (ii) the world as a whole.

Mr. Moynihan: Production figures for chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) are not given separately for the United Kingdom or any individual member state of the European Community. Estimates of 1986 production of CFCs 11, 12, 113 and 114 are as follows:

	Kilotonnes
EC	440
United States	300
Rest of World	290

Production of CFC 115 is negligible, with world production in 1986 estimated at 15 kilotonnes.

Source: United Kingdom industry estimates.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the United Kingdom annual production of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs or Freons) in 1957, 1960, 1970 and 1980; and what is his estimate for the 1990 production capacity.

Mr. Moynihan: Information about production of chlorofluorocarbons (CFCs) by individual member states of the European Community is not available. For the years in question figures for the EC as a whole are available only for 1980 when production of CFCs 11 and 12 was estimated at 296 kilotonnes. (Source European Council of Chemical Manufacturers' Federations: CEFIC). 1980 production figures for other CFCs and estimates of production capacity for 1990 are not available.

Housing (Repairs)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department gives to local authorities regarding the type of repairs which are the responsibility of the tenant and of the local authority, respectively.

Mrs. Roe: None. Local authorities' repairing obligations are specified in sections 8 and 11 of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985. Tenants have no statutory responsibility for repairs.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be reviewing the legal framework appropriate to the identification and recording of contaminated land; and if he will consider the introduction of statutory registers for the recording of such land.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government indicated in their response to the 11th report of the Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution ("Managing Waste: The Duty of Care") that it was considering the feasibility of identifying contaminated land by means of land registers. Consideration of this complex issue has not yet been completed; registers of such land remain a possibility.

Drinking Water

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why, in view of the exclusion of toxic and microbiological parameters from derogation provisions of European Community directive 80/778/EEC relating to the quality of water intended for human consumption (Article 9), he has granted derogations for both faecal coliform and total coliform bacterial contamination of public drinking water supplies.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has not granted any derogations under article 9 of EC directive 80/778/EEC for faecal coliform or total coliform bacterial contamination of public water supplies.

Hazardous Waste

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce a system to record the types of hazardous waste imported into the United Kingdom and to record the sources of the hazardous waste.

Mr. Moynihan: Such a system will be introduced as part of the implementation of EC directive 84/631 on the trans-frontier shipment of hazardous waste. We intend to implement the Directive as soon as possible.

Ramsar Convention (Designated Sites)

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sites in the United Kingdom which have been designated as covered by the Ramsar convention; and what protection is afforded by such classification.

Mr. Moynihan: A list of the sites in the United Kingdom covered under the Ramsar convention was given to the hon. Member in a written answer on 25 November.

In great Britain it is a prerequisite for Ramsar classification that sites must first have been notified as sites of special scientific interest. Such sites are protected by section 28 of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981, which imposes restrictions on potentially damaging operations. In Northern Ireland similar protection is afforded to ASSIs. I shall shortly be issuing revised advice to local authorities emphasising the importance of giving due weight to the needs of nature conservation in considering development proposals affecting such designated sites.

Ancillary Services (Privatisation)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the savings from privatising domestic cleaning and other ancillary services in the county of Lincolnshire.

Mr. Chope: The Department does not collect systematic data of this sort.

Boswell Houses (Repairs)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to make special provision for the funding of repairs to local authority-owned Boswell-type houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: No; local authorities must decide their own expenditure priorities, including renovation of their own housing stock, within the overall resources available to them.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to approve a repair system in respect of Boswell-type houses, designated under the Housing Act 1985; what advice he has offered owners of such houses awaiting action on their homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Under the housing defects legislation it is for the local authority, rather than the Secretary of State, to specify the works needed in any particular case. However, the National House Building Council has set up a subsidiary company, PRC Homes Ltd., to approve and license repair systems for designated houses. I understand that no repair method has yet been proposed for Boswell houses and that the nature of the defect is such that repair to the standard required by the legislation is not easy. Meanwhile, it could be helpful if owners awaiting action were to discuss the position with their local authorities and reach an understanding on a likely timetable for assistance.

Tree Planting

Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further initiatives he will take to encourage public and private tree planting schemes.

Mr. Moynihan: I have made an additional £3 million available in the current financial year to help replace trees damaged in the storm on 16 October. I am also giving my full support to National Tree Week, which has been organised by the Tree Council.

North Sea Conference

70. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the achievements of the international North sea conference held on 23 and 24 November.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on Monday, 30 November by my right hon. Friend to my hon. Friend the Member for Banbury (Mr. Baldry) at column 416-17. (Vol. 123 cols. 416/7).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Water Industry (Coastal Protection)

95. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the effect of the privatisation of the water industry on the coastal protection functions of local councils.

Mr. Gummer: The privatisation of the water industry will have no effect on the coastal protection functions of local councils.

Broadleaved Woodlands (Grants)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many grants have been made under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme, since its inception, by county, in England and Wales;

(2) what is the average value of grants made so far under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme and the total value of such grants made for each county in England and Wales;

(3) what is the average and total area planted under the broadleaved woodland grant scheme for each county in England and Wales.

Mr. MacGregor: Information is readily available only for the period from the inception of the scheme (1 October 1985) to 31 March 1987 for Forestry Commission conservancies, follows:

Conservancy	Number of planting grant payments	Total value of grant payments (£s)	Average value of grant payments (£s)	Total area planted (hectares)	Average area planted per payment (hectares)
North England	125	114,629	917	175	1·40
East England	394	387,588	984	550	1·40
West England	401	573,622	1,430	539	1·34
Wales	79	80,449	1,018	110	1·39

This information relates to areas of planting (including rehabilitation and natural regeneration) in respect of which grants have been paid. During the same period, a total of 3,106 applications were approved for entry to the scheme in England and Wales, relating to a total area of 20,222 hectares, a considerable proportion of which remains to be planted under five-year plans of operation.

Food (Import Levy)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish a table showing the current levels of import levy on the food products covered by the common agricultural policy; what were the comparable levels at the same date in each of the previous five years, on the same basis as the information provided in his written reply to the hon. Member for Southend, East on 12 January, Official Report, column 44; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is set out in the table:

[2] In practice the United Kingdom's imports from third countries are normally covered by the Lome Convention and enter the Community levy free.

[3] A special lower rate of levy is applicable to imports of butter from New Zealand.

[4] Most imports of beef from third countries are subject to special arrangements allowing entry at reduced levy rates.

Crops (Diversification)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to publish a detailed statement on proposals for the diversification of crops in the agricultural industry.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 1 December 1987]: We intend to publish very shortly a detailed consultation document relating to the Community scheme for extensification of production, and suggesting ways in which that might be given effect in the United Kingdom, for both cereals and beef.

I shall be inviting views of all interested parties on this document.

Cereal Substitutes

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report the total tonnage of cereal substitutes imported into the United Kingdom over each of the past 10 years.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 1 December 1987]: The total tonnage of materials on the European Commission list of cereal substitutes imported into the United Kingdom in each of the past ten years was as follows:

Fisheries

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he was consulted or asked to approve the awarding of licences for the extraction of fish within the 150 mile fisheries zone surrounding the Falkland Islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 30 November 1987]: No. Responsibility for the management of fisheries within the Falkland Islands conservation zone rests with the Falkland Islands Government.

Sea Pollution

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many scientists have worked on the research programme of his Department on sea pollution matters, for each year since 1975.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 27 November 1987]: The estimated man years of scientific effort deployed by my Department on work in connection with the protection of the marine environment are:

	Number
1978-79	101
1979-80	85
1980-81	95
1981-82	90
1982-83	86
1983-84	97
1984-85	88
1985-86	105
1986-87	117

Figures for earlier years are not readily available.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of his Department's research staff responsible for matters related to pollution in the North sea have been working in his Department for more than five years.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 27 November 1987]: Sixty-one of my Department's scientific staff undertaking work which includes matters related to pollution in the North sea have been employed by the Ministry for more than five years.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what role the fisheries protection service plays in the monitoring and policing of the oil pollution from ships (a) in the North sea and (b) elsewhere in the United Kingdom's territorial waters.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: The aircraft and vessels of the fisheries protection service are required to report any oil pollution which impinges on fisheries to the appropriate enforcement authorities. Prime responsibility within the United Kingdom for monitoring and policing illegal discharges from ships at sea rests with the marine pollution control unit of the Department of Transport.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Quarrying (Kennedies)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a planning appeal was lodged under section 24 of the planning order to allow quarrying at Kennedies, County Armagh.

Mr. Needham: An appeal under article 24 of the Planning (NI) Order 1972 was lodged with the Planning Appeals Commission on 10 August 1987 in respect of a planning application for quarrying and crushing of rock at Cavanapole road, Kennedies, Killylea.

Quarrying (Navan Fort)

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, when rock quarrying and rock processing will cease at Navan fort; and when the quarrying equipment and rock-processing equipment will be removed.

Mr. Needham: The extraction of rock from the quarry adjacent to Navan fort ceased at the end of September 1987. The operator of the quarry is not required to cease the processing of rock, nor to remove quarrying equipment or rock-processing equipment.

Anglo-Irish Agreement

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is his policy towards the future of the Anglo-Irish Agreement, in the light of the opinion of the chairman of the Northern Ireland Economic Council, Sir Charles Carter, on the Anglo-Irish Agreement contained in the publication "Two Years of Peace, Stability and Reconciliation?", a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tom King: The objectives for which we signed the agreement remain valid, and it is important to continue to pursue them. Further progress towards peace, stability and reconciliation in Northern Ireland will, in part, depend on the willingness of constitutional politicians to engage, irrespective of their attitudes to the agreement in renewed dialogue about the future government of the Province, Sir Charles Carter's pamphlet makes a constructive contribution to such debate.

Family Planning

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many patients were registered with general practitioners for National Health Service contraceptive services in 1986 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: Patients are not required to register for particular services provided by their general practitioner.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general practitioners are registered to provide a National Health Service family planning service to their patients in Northern Ireland; and how many premises are involved.

Mr. Needham: At 31 December 1986, 866 general practitioners were registered to provide contraceptive services to their patients in Northern Ireland.

The information regarding the number of premises is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Home Helps

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people whose home helps were withdrawn applied in the past year for an allowance from the Department of Health and Social Security to pay for a daily visit for the purpose of cooking meals, lighting fires and other domestic tasks.

Mr. Needham: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disporportionate cost.

Community Relations

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the community relations unit will examine the community relations impact of Government labour-market intervention schemes.

Dr. Mawhinney: A number of Government policies are being considered by the central community relations unit as possibilities for a review of their community relations impact. It is too early to decide on the precise policies or schemes to be examined.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if it is his intention to instruct the community relations unit to commission comparative research into the issue of community relations in Northern Ireland and Great Britain.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. However, the unit will be meeting Home Office officials to discuss areas of co-operation, including research. It will also consider the need for further research into community relations issues within Northern Ireland.

Southern Health and Social Services Board

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will consider locating the new Southern health and social services board offices in Newry or Armagh; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will name the sites investigated by the Southern health and social services board in Newry Town and Armagh;

(3) to what extent the accommodation space being proposed by the Southern health and social services board at Portadown is in excess of present staff needs; and if he will make a statement.

(4) what is the proposed capital expenditure by the Southern health and social services board for new premises; and how many staff are to be accommodated;

(5) if he will indicate the estimated revenue consequences of the new building at Portadown for the Southern health and social services board.

Mr. Needham [holding answers 1 December 1987]: The Southern health and social services board have made proposals for new headquarters premises in Craigavon costing £1·94 million with estimated revenue consequences of £163,000 per annum. The premises will accommodate approximately 140 professional and administrative staff and the level of provision proposed is the minimum required for this number. The board investigated sites at the former prison in Armagh and Towerhill hospital but no sites were investigated in Newry since one of the criteria used for selecting possible sites was that they should be central to the board's area.

No decision has yet been made on the board's proposals and I will bear the hon. Gentleman's comments in mind when I consider the project.

Cross-border Incursions

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what representations he made to the Government of the Republic of Ireland following the incursion of Irish troops into the United Kingdom at the village of Calloville on 11 November 1987.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 27 November 1987]: This incursion was brought to the attention of the Irish authorities. As is generally the case in respect of the security forces on each side of the border, the incursion was inadvertent.

Strabane Flooding (Assistance)

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will reconsider the levels of assistance given to victims of the Strabane flood disaster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 27 November 1987]: Considerable assistance has already been given to help alleviate urgent need in Strabane, including £210,000 paid out under the social security system, the distribution of free coal to households, temporary residential accommodation provided by both the voluntary and statutory agencies and replacement of electricity meters free of charge. Each household affected will also be receiving £126 within the next few days through the finance provided by the European Commission. It is not the responsibility of Government to compensate for insurable losses but urgent consideration is now being given to see whether further help could be provided for those in genuine need.

Sinn Fein Incident Centres

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums of official money have been paid and to whom in respect of expenditure on Sinn Fein incident centres; for which years or financial years they were paid; on which departmental rates they were borne; whether any accounts as to the expenditure of such sums were produced by the organisation which received such funds; where each such incident centre was located; and whether any are still operating.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 27 November 1987]: As far as my Department is aware, no financial assistance from public funds was ever paid to the self-styled incident centres that were established and run by Sinn Fein in 1975.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Select Committees

Mr. Forth: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed as representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the total identifiable cost to public funds of the departmentally-related Select Committees in July 1986; and what were the comparable identifiable costs to public funds arising from (a) the employment of permanent staff and (b) other commitments in July 1987.

Mr. Beith: Such information as is available for the period including July 1986 is given in the Select Committee returns for Sessions 1985-86 (HC 172) and 1986-87 (HC 79). Additional information for the period including July 1987 will be provided in the sessional return for 1987-88. Permanent staff costs for the months of July 1986 and July 1987 were £101,430 and £107,134 respectively. Payments in respect of other commitments such as shorthand writers' fees and Committee visits amounted to £55,473 in July 1986 and to £50,663 in July 1987. Many of these payments were in respect of costs incurred in earlier months. The figures do not include printing and publishing costs which are normally recovered from sales revenue, including revenue from the House and Government Departments.

ENVIRONMENT

Rating Reform

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the 20 local authorities in England which will gain the most and the 20 which will lose the most on cash terms, as the basis of his proposals for a unified business rate.

Mr. Howard: In principle, the present grant arrangements remove the benefit of high rateable value from local authorities by making corresponding reduction in grant entitlements. Under our proposals for grant in the new system, grant per adult will vary between authorities only in so far as authorities' expenditure needs vary. A simple comparison of non-domestic rate income to authorities before and after introduction of a uniform business rate would be misleading in not allowing for the different grant effects.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the National League for the Blind and Disabled regarding the Local Government Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: A circular letter from the league was received in my Department on 26 November and is being considered.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consult women's organisations with regard to the particular effect of the proposed community charge upon women; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: We engaged in a major consultation exercise on all aspects of our proposals after we published the Green Paper "Paying for Local Government", Cmnd. 9714. Women's organisations have had ample opportunity to make representations, both during and after the formal consultation period and several have done so. My officials have, for example, had a recent meeting with representatives of Women's Aid organisations. I announced the outcome of those discussions in the answer I gave yesterday to my hon. Friend the Member for Billericay (Mrs. Gorman).

Birmingham (Charles Housing Action Area)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his reply of 27 October, Official Report, column 209, he has yet received a formal submission from Birmingham city council for the declaration of the Charles housing action area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: No submission has yet been received. I understand that Birmingham city council is still considering its proposals for the Charles housing action area.

Waltham Forest

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made of the additional administration costs falling on the London borough of Waltham Forest as a result of his decision to make transitional arrangements for the introduction of community charge in that borough; and if he will reimburse those additional administration costs.

Mr. Howard: In the first instance, the size of any extra costs must be a matter for the local authority. The question of support for administration costs will be an issue for the rate and revenue support grant settlements for the years in question.

Local Authorities (Investments)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if in the light of the failure of the News on Sunday newspaper, he will introduce legislation to define the types of venture in which local authorities are permitted to invest pension fund money; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The management, use and investment of local government superannuation fund moneys and related matters are already subject to the provisions of part P of the Local Government Superannuation Regulations 1986 (Statutory Instrument 1986 No. 24). My right hon. Friend is currently considering a number of options to control further the investment of local government pension fund monies in the light of the failure of the News on Sunday newspaper.

Easington (Housing)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of new private houses built in the Easington constituency in the last three years.

Mr. Waldegrave: This information is not collected for individual constituencies.

Power Stations (Emissions)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the proportion of fossil fuel power stations that have been fitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment in (i) west Germany and (ii) Sweden; and what is the figure for the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: Information on control technology in operation in the Federal Republic of Germany and in Sweden is contained in the major review of national strategies and policies for air pollution abatement, published this year by the Executive Body for the Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution. A copy of the report has been placed in the Library of the House.

("National Strategies and Policies for Air Pollution Abatement" (paragraph 50). Convention on Long-Range Transboundary Air Pollution, United Nations, New York, 1987)

At present, no power stations in the United Kingdom are so equipped, but the Central Electricity Generating Board plans to retrofit 6,000 MW of generating capacity with flue gas desulphurisation equipment during the next 10 years. Furthermore, all new fossil fuel fired power stations will be required to have the technology to control sulphur emissions.

Urban Programme

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many urban programme fund units on the industrial estate at Milkwood road, London S.E.24 are now occupied; and what was the total number of units funded.

Mr. Trippier: I understand from the London borough of Lambeth, which is responsible for letting these units, that 36 units on the Mahatma Gandhi/Milkwood Road industrial estate are let out of a total of 41 and that negotiations are in hand to let three of the remainder.

Storm Damage

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is yet in a position to give the estimated costs of the damage caused by the storms in October in (a) Essex and (b) the Basildon area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Essex has estimated that the cost of storm damage to them will be around £8 million. Information for Basildon is not available. Expenditure above a threshold will be eligible for special financial assistance under the Bellwin scheme, or in respect of insurable losses and, where authorities have not insured, additional capital allocations will be available this year for repair works that are capitalised.

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is yet in a position to list, by region, the estimated cost of the damage caused by the storms in October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My Department does not yet have sufficient reliable information to provide such an estimate. We expect the majority of local authorities' storm damage expenditure to be eligible under the Bellwin scheme, and so to qualify for special financial assistance above the threshold, or to be in respect of insurable losses. Where authorities have nevertheless failed to insure, additional capital allocations will be available this year for repair works that are capitalised.

Subways (Bulwell, Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what applications he has received from Nottingham county council for money to enable the subways on Crabtree road, Bulwell, Nottingham, to be filled in.

Mr. Trippier: I know of no such bid from the county council. Nottingham city council applied in January for an Estate Action allocation for improvements to Crabtree Farm estate. These included filling up two subways. The bid was unsuccessful but I understand that more comprehensive proposals may be put forward again for 1988-89. If they are I shall consider them carefully.

Albert Memorial

Mr. Cormack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to restore the Albert memorial; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The memorial is now over 100 years old. Water penetration has caused corrosion which has weakened the iron structure of the roof and spire. Below the roof level the structure of the memorial is generally sound, but many of the sculptures and other decorations have been damaged or are badly weathered.

The Government therefore intend that the memorial should be repaired and restored. Costs will of course have to be contained within acceptable levels. I shall be seeking further expert advice on the feasibility and cost of alternative options before deciding on how to proceed.

I am arranging for an engineer's report on the condition of the ironwork in the roof and spire to be placed in the Library.

Urban Development Corporations

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the criteria for selecting members of urban development corporations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend is considering the procedures.

Homeless Women

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the proportion of the homeless who are women;

(2) what proportion of households living in bed and breakfast accommodation are headed by women.

Mrs. Roe: I regret that this information is not available.

Victim Support Schemes

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to ensure that every local authority has adequate resources to provide victim support schemes.

Mr. Chope: The rate support grant settlement includes provision for both personal social services, and for services which are the responsibility of the Home Office. It is, however, entirely for individual authorities to make resources available for particular activities.

Homeless Children

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his policy is towards the resettling of homeless children outside their original local education authority boundaries; what advice he offers to local authorities contemplating such a resettlement; and what advice he offers to the local authorities into whose areas the children may be moved.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to her on 12 November, at column 191.

LDDC (Board Members)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the selection criteria for members of the London Docklands Development Corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The selection criteria for LDDC members are reviewed on each occasion when a vacancy occurs.

Housing (Repair Systems)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the types of dwelling-houses which have so far been designated under the Housing Act 1985, and indicate for which of these a repair system has been determined.

Mrs. Roe: The 24 house types designated nationally under the Housing Defects legislation—part XVI of the Housing act 1985—are listed in the table, together with progress on repair systems for each. In all, the national House-Building Council's subsidiary, PRC Homes Ltd., has now approved 44 repair systems covering 11 of the most common house types. More detailed progress reports are provided regularly by PRC Homes Ltd. and are placed in the Library.

Radioactive Waste

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to ban the use of concrete as a form of containment for radioactive waste in the light of the problem of alkali silica reaction.

Mr. Trippier: Research is progressing into the integrity of cement as an encapsulating medium. I will make no decision until that research is completed.

Concrete (Alkali Silica Reaction)

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many cases of alkali silica reaction in concrete have been reported in the years 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Trippier: There is no formal system of reporting cases of alkali silica reaction to my Department. However, I understand that the Building Research Establishment has had 20 cases brought to its attention.

Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on progress in establishing a design of concrete mixes which would not be susceptible to alkali silica reaction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Work is in progress at the Building Research Establishment on methods of test and classification of aggregates. The test methods are now being submitted to the British Standards Institution as a draft standard. BRE is also revising its present recommendations on mixes in BRE Digest 258 and is contributing to a committee of the Concrete Society which is considering the subject.

PSA (Fees)

Mr. Stevens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what fee reductions have been achieved in the Property Services Agency as a result of fee competition on major works projects since the agency's initial review which covered the period July 1984 to December 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The fee reductions achieved through fee competition and fee negotiation in 1986 compared with those of the initial review which covered the period July 1984—December 1985 are as follows:

Percentage

	Fee competition		Fee negotiation
	1984-85	1986	1984-85	1986
Architectural commissions	15	32	3	7
Quantity Surveying commissions	26	35	8	21
Mechanical and Electrical Engineering commissions	15	24	2	4
Civil and Structural Engineering commissions	10	39	1	14

In view of the increased level of savings from competition and the continuing difference between competition and negotiation, I have decided that the current £2 million project value threshold above which fee bids are sought will be reduced to £1 million from 1 January 1988.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Schizophrenia

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the report on schizophrenia research of the Medical Research Council's schizophrenia and allied conditions committee to be published.

Mr. Jackson: I understand from the Medical Research Council that the report is due to be published early in 1988.

School Discipline

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is satisfied with standards of school discipline; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 1 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed).

Deaf-blind Children

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has of the numbers of deaf-blind children in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 30 November at column 375. This information should be available when the analysis of responses to the questionnaire which accompanied the Department's consultative document on educational provision for deaf-blind children is complete.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to make a statement on the educational needs of deaf-blind children.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend hopes that the final version of the Department's policy statement on educational provision for deaf-blind children will be published in the new year.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many replies he has received to the consultative document about the numbers of deaf-blind children within each local education authority.

Mr. Dunn: Seventy-nine — four out of 97 — local education authorities in England replied to the questionnaire which accompanied the Department's consultative document. In addition, 42 replies were received in response to the points raised in the consultative document itself.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to meet officials of SENSE, the National Deaf-Blind and Rubella Association, to discuss the educational needs of deaf-blind children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 30 November at column 375.

The Prime Minister: The December 1986 European Council statement reaffirmed all EC partners' commitments to make no concessions under duress to terrorists or their sponsors. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Prime Minister if, when she meets Mr. Gorbachev, she will ask for the release of Mr. Raoul Wallenberg; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Holt: To ask the Attorney-General how many prosecutions for fraud involving bogus prescriptions by (a) doctors and (b) pharmacists have been made in each of the past three years; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service does not keep separate records of prosecutions for fraud involving bogus prescriptions, and the answer to the hon. Member's question cannot therefore be ascertained without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Attorney-General (1) whether the Crown Prosecution Service will prosecute Mr. Mohammed Fazal of Washwood Heath Road, Birmingham, for fraudulently accepting as payment for a razor a National Health Service prescription with a value of £14; and if he will make a statement;

(5) whether the Crown Prosecution Service will prosecute Dr. John Tighe of Nechells, Birmingham, for fraudulently charging for a prescription, knowing that the prescribed drugs were to be dispatched abroad; and if he will make a statement;

(6) whether the Crown Prosecution Service will prosecute Mr. Terence Taylor of Lumbs Lane, Bradford, for fraudulently accepting as payment for a toothbrush and a medicinal drink a National Health Service prescription with a value of £20; and if he will make a statement;

(7) whether the Crown Prosecution Service will prosecute Mr. Jawaid Ahmed, of Washwood Heath Road, Birmingham, for fraudulently accepting as payment for a packet of nappies a National Health Service prescription with a value of £30; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has not received any papers from the police in relation to the matters raised by the hon. Member's questions.

British Gas Shares

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General what advice is being given to magistrates who hold shares in British Gas in relation to disqualification or otherwise when issuing entry warrants on behalf of British Gas.

The Attorney-General: Whether justices who hold shares in British Gas are disqualified from hearing applications for entry warrants made on behalf of British Gas is a question of law, on which they will be advised by their clerk.

Zircon Affair

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General what criteria he used in deciding to make his announcement, concerning the decision not to bring prosecutions in the Zircon affair, in the form of a written answer.

The Attorney-General: In following earlier precedents, I adopted the most convenient way of ensuring that the first public announcement of my decision was made to this honourable House; and that it was made as soon after the decision was taken as was practicable.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government intend to make a contribution to the Disasters Emergency Committee's appeal for Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have just informed the disasters emergency committee that the Overseas Development Administration will be contributing £2 million to its appeal. This follows the Government's recent £2 million contribution to the United Nations' airlift operation and brings to over £25 million the Government's help so far this year for famine relief in Ethiopia.

Crown Agents (Pension Division)

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made with plans to merge the Crown Agents pension division with the Overseas Development Administration at East Kilbride.

Mr. Chris Patten: The merger took place on 1 December.

WALES

Family Planning

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many patients were registered with general practitioners for National Health Service contraceptive services in 1986 in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Registration with general practitioners for contraceptive services is not required.

An estimate of the number of patients in receipt of National Health Service contraceptive services from general practitioners in 1986 is 126,000.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total cost of the general practitioner provision for National Health Service family planning services to patients for 1986 in Wales.

Mr. Grist: For financial year 1986-87 the estimated cost is £2·7 million.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many general practitioners are registered to provide a National Health Service family planning service to their patients in Wales; and how many premises are involved.

Mr. Ian Grist: There were in Wales at the 1 October 1986, 1,530 general practitioners who provided a family planning service. Of these, 368 provided the service to only those who were registered with them for general medical service, and 1,162 provided a family planning service to any patient irrespective of whether that patient was registered with that general practitioner or not. No information is available centrally on how many premises are involved.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of (a) men and (b) women attending sexually transmitted diseases clinics in Cardiff and tested for HIV have proved to be HIV positive.

Mr. Grist: The information is not available centrally.

National Park Planning Board

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many members of each Welsh national park planning board live within the area of that park as a percentage of the total numbers on each board.

Mr. Roberts: The Welsh national parks are administered by National Park Committees rather than planning boards. The relevant information in respect of the committees is as follows:

	per cent.
Snowdonia	42
Brecon Beacons	56
Pembrokeshire Coast	22

National Parks

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the Welsh national parks and the parliamentary constituencies that fall within the boundaries of each park.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is as follows:

Brecon Beacons:
Brecon and Radnor
Carmarthen
Monmouth
Cynon Valley
Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney
Torfaen
Blaenau Gwent

Pembrokeshire Coast:

Montgomery
Ceredigion and Pembroke North

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department purchases its stationery from Her Majesty's Stationery Office; it contains varying elements of recycled paper. A small proportion of my Department's waste paper is recycled.

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which museums had employed Touche Ross and Co. as management consultants before February 1986; and what were the total fees paid by the National Museum of Wales to Touche Ross and Co. from grant in aid, in respect of its inquiry into its department of art conducted in 1986.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The decision to employ Touche Ross and Co. was made by the National Museum of Wales authorities acting under the terms of their Royal charter. The fee paid was £43,398·70.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, with regard to the staffing recommendations of his Department's staff inspectors for the department of art of the National Museum of Wales in 1983-84, how many conservators were in post at the time of the inspection, how many conservators were specified in the complement recommended and whether a new post at Curatorial Grade F (Registrar) was recommended.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: There were two full-time and one part-time conservators in post at the time of the staff inspection. An increase to four conservator posts was recommended. A new post at curatorial grade F was also reommended.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) when officers of the National Museum of Wales asked Dr. Roderick Bowen, QC to undertake the inquiry into allegations of professional misconduct in the department of art; when members of staff of the National Musuem were requested to submit their statements of complaint; and what disciplinary action was taken subsequently with respect to the writer of the unauthorised letter to the president of the National Museum, dated 16 September 1982, alleging professional misconduct;

(2) what were the allegations of professional misconduct in the department of art of the National Museum of Wales as a result of which a senior member of its council conducted an inquiry in 1982; and when the keeper of the department of art was provided with them in writing.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 6 November 1987 at column 891.

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister of the Arts what statements he has made, following his approval of the virement of funds from those voted by Parliament for the purchase of specimens by the National Musuem of Wales in 1984-85, about his policy towards permitting such virement in future and as to what steps he will take to ensure that this policy is adhered to.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Department's policy, which is that virement between expenditure heads should be limited to meeting exceptional needs for which specific provision has not been made, is understood and accepted by the museum authorities. As for the steps taken by the Department to ensure compliance with the policy, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the Treasury minute on the fifteenth report of the Committee of Public Accounts 1986-87 (Cm. 236).

Mid Wales (EC Funding)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if Her Majesty's Government will make representations to the European Commission as to the peripherality and extreme rurality of Mid Wales, so as to reinforce the case for continued European regional development fund funding for Mid Wales; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if Her Majesty's Government have made representations to the European Commission to ensure that the forthcoming reforms of the European Community's structural funds will not result in the exclusion of Mid Wales from access to the funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: Discussions continue — on the basis of draft Commission proposals — but on the key objectives which will underpin the future operation of the EC structural funds and on the criteria for defining those areas which may, in the longer term, be eligible for assistance. My Department is fully involved in such discussions and I have already made, in the course of them, representations to the Commission regarding the continued inclusion of Mid-Wales for European regional development fund purposes. Final decisions on the review will be a matter for the Council but I have naturally a very strong interest in seeking to ensure that structural fund assistance is retained in all those parts of Wales where the funds have a continuing role to play in structural re-adjustment.

Fatal Road Accidents

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many deaths in road traffic accidents occurred in the years 1985, 1986 and the first three quarters of 1987 by counties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information requested is given in the following table:

Number of deaths arising from road traffic accidents

	1985	1986	[1] 1987
Clwyd	35	49	15
Dyfed	40	36	18
Gwent	34	39	7
Gwynedd	21	21	15
Mid Glamorgan	47	28	14
Powys	12	12	9
South Glamorgan	29	26	11
West Glamorgan	27	23	9
Wales	245	235	98

[1] Figures for 1987 are for January-June inclusive and are provisional. No later information is currently available.

There is an encouraging downward trend in the number of deaths on roads in Wales, and we hope that this will continue.

Foreign Language Teaching

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has any proposals for the establishment of an initiative to improve foreign language teaching in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: A modern foreign language will be one of the foundation subjects in the National curriculum for all children in Wales aged 11-16 under our proposals in the Education Reform Bill. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science and I will be publishing shortly a joint statement of policy for modern language teaching in England and Wales.

Local Authorities (Capital Expenditure)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will outline the year-by-year change in real terms in Welsh local authority capital expenditure provision, in the light of his announcement of 30 November in an answer to the hon. Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) in (a) the period since the present capital control system was introduced in 1981-82 up to the latest provision for 1988-89, and (b) the period 1978-79 to 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: Gross capital provision between 1981-82 to 1988-89 in real terms is shown in the following table. Comparable figures for 1978-79 to 1980-81 are not readily available.

At 1987-88 prices[1] £ million

Contaminated Soil

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to monitor at all stages the transit and storage arrangements made with regard to the consignment of 800 tons of contaminated soil imported into the port of Mostyn from Holland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 26 November 1987]: The handling of this consignment was monitored by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution and the plant health and seeds inspectorate.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

German Democratic Republic

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of the German Democratic Republic following reports of persecution in that country of Protestant churches by the state security police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We deplore abuses of human rights wherever they occur. We are discussing with our European partners an appropriate reaction to the reports and continue to take opportunities to urge the Government of the German Democratic Republic to fulfil their commitments under the United Nations charter on human rights and the Helsinki final act.

Acapulco Declaration

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will have urgent talks with his European Community colleagues in order to take practical steps in support of the Acapulco declaration signed by the Rio 8 group of countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We shall be giving the Acapulco declaration full consideration. In some areas which it covers, we share the Group of Eight's approach, for example, through the current efforts of the Twelve to encourage negotiated peace in central America. We look forward to continuing, with our European Community colleagues, the political dialogue with the Group of Eight begun last September in New York.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he is taking to support the demands contained in the Acapulco declaration recently signed by the Rio 8 group of countries.

Mr. Eggar: We welcome the positive aspects of the Acapulco declaration for peace development and democracy, which we are studying.

We shall continue to support the current efforts to achieve a peace settlement in Central America. The United Kingdom voted in favour of the United Nations General Assembly resolution concerning the south Atlantic zone of peace to which the declaration refers, and we have consistently supported efforts to eradicate drug trafficking.

We welcome, too, the commitment of the Group of Eight to continue to seek negotiated solutions to the debt problem. We recognise the severity of many countries' difficulties and the need for the international community to provide adequate support to countries implementing economic reform programmes.

Latin America's debt problems are primarily a matter for negotiation between the debtor country and the commercial banks in which creditor Governments should not intervene.

We will continue to play our part, with our European Community partners, in the dialogue with Latin American states represented in the Group of Eight, which was begun in New York in September.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a breakdown, by country and by English region, of his Department's total expenditure on research and development, as shown in the latest edition of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development."

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give a breakdown, by country and by English region, of his Department's total expenditure on research and development as shown in the latest edition of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development."

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give a breakdown, by country and by English region, of his Department's total expenditure on research and development, as shown in the latest edition of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development."

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown, by country and by English region, of his Department's total expenditure on research and development, as shown in the latest edition of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development."

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown, by country and by English region, of his Department's total expenditure

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give a breakdown, by region, of his Department's total expenditure on research and development, as shown in the latest edition of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development."

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to answer on behalf of my right hon. Friends.

The information is not available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Butcher: My Department uses paper having a recycled content where this is consistent with operational efficiency and offers good value for money. General printing and writing papers contain up to 10 per cent. recycled fibre, the buff envelopes in general use contain at least 50 per cent. recycled fibre, and some stationery items are made of 100 per cent. recycled material. Used paper is disposed of for recycling where this is consistent with economic and security considerations. Following a paper recycling commitment conference which I chaired in January 1987, a working group is exploring the scope for greater use of waste paper in the production of printing and writing papers which are acceptable to private and public sector users in terms of both quality and cost.

Balance of Payments (International Comparisons)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has about the balance of payments surpluses and deficits for the seven leading industrialised countries in each of the years 1981 to 1986.

Mr. Butcher: The information is in the table. International comparisons are normally made in a common currency, but exchange rate fluctuations cause different trends to emerge depending on which currency is used. Data are therefore given both in United States dollars and in national currencies.

Cigarettes

Mr. John Garrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the present level of imports of cigarettes into the United Kingdom by main supplying country; and what were the comparable figures in 1986 and 1985.

Mr. Butcher: The information is given in the table.

Acrylic Yarn Imports

Mr. Waller: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the level of imports of acrylic yarn from Turkey in 1985, 1986 and to the latest available date in 1987.

Mr. Butcher: United Kingdom imports of acrylic yarn from Turkey were: 1985, £1·6 million; 1986, £8·1 million; and, for the seven months to July 1987, £5·9 million.

Voluntary Restraint Arrangements

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received from the British Textile Confederation, the British Textile Employers' Association, and the Confederation of British Wool Textiles on European Community negotiations with Egypt and Turkey for renewal of voluntary restraint arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Various representations have been received by the Department expressing concern at the level of the voluntary restraint on exports of Egyptian cotton yarn agreed in the recent negotiations between the European Community and the Egyptian authorities, and urging the need for increases in access for cotton yarn and certain other textile products to be kept to a minimum in the negotiations for a voluntary restraint agreement between the European Community and Turkish textile exporters. We have taken note of these representations.

Cotton Yarn

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the outcome of recent negotiations between the European Community and Egypt for renewal of a voluntary restraint arrangement on cotton yarn; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: In the recent negotiations between the European Community and Egypt for renewal of the voluntary restraint arrangement on cotton yarn the level for 1988 was agreed at 29,500 tonnes for the Community as a whole, with a growth rate of 3·4 per cent. The United Kingdom share for 1988 is 2,500 tonnes.

The outcome was the best the Community could achieve in the circumstances. Without an agreement the Community market would have been wide open to unrestrained imports of Egyptian cotton yarn.

British Aerospace (Westair Airlines Order)

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assistance Her Majesty's Government provided to British Aerospace in connection with its securing an order to supply Westair Airlines of Fresco California with six BAe 146-200 regional airliners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: This order was secured entirely as a result of British Aerospace's marketing skills.

Wood Imports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give for 1986 the amounts of United Kingdom imports of hard wood, soft wood and other wood products, United Kingdom production of the same, and totals for both categories, respectively, in millions of cubic metres wood raw material equivalent, and expressing each figure as a percentage of apparent domestic consumption.

Mr. Butcher: The available information is contained in the table.

Finance and Banking

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give such figures as are available to him for the latest year available for the aggregate turnover of the financial and banking sector of the economy, broken down (a) between institutions operating in the City of London, Scotland and the rest of the United Kingdom, respectively, (b) with income divided into: charges, premiums etc; and simple interest, dividends and rents etc. received, (c) with outgoings divided into: salary and associated costs; other operating expenditure on goods, services, rents etc; interest paid out; and dividends distributed and (d) between building societies, clearing banks, insurance companies, and other financial institutions.

Mr. Maude: The information is not available in the form requested. Such information as is available is given in table 8 of the article "National Income and Expenditure in the Second Quarter 1987" which appears in the October 1987 edition of Economic Trends.

EC (Internal Market Council)

Mr. Richard Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the Internal Market Council held on 30 November.

Mr. Maude: The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, reached agreement on directives on the approximation of the laws of member states relating to the type approval of wheeled agricultural or forestry tractors; the permissible sound power level of lawnmowers; the classification, packaging and labelling of dangerous preparations; and on the transparency of member states' measures regulating the pricing of medicinal products for human use. The Council also adopted decisions to accept on behalf of the Community certain annexes of the international convention on the simplification and harmonisation of Customs procedures — the Kyto convention.

Subject to a United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny reserve the Council reached agreement on the substance of a regulation determining the persons liable for payment of a Customs debt. The Council also discussed proposals for directives on non-life insurance services, on the mutual recognition of member states' professional qualifications, on the approximation of member states' laws on cosmetic products, on good laboratory practice and on procedures for the provision of information by member states on new technical standards. Also discussed were proposals for Community regulations on the control of concentrations between undertakings—the "merger control" regulation —and member states' laws on trade marks.

ENERGY

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy toward the role of investment in energy efficiency in inner-city revitalisation, in the light of the recommendations contained in the recent report "Regenerating The Inner City: The Energy Dimension", published by the Association for the Conservation of Energy, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Midlothian (Mr. Eadie) on 30 November 1987 at column 376.

Electricity

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will estimate the average cost of electricity in 1987 prices generated from coal-fired power stations in each of the years 1980 to 1986.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest analysis of comparative generating costs made by the CEGB gave data relating to 1981-82 and 1983-84. This showed the single year generation costs of major coal-fire stations, adjusted to March 1987 prices, to be 2·60p/KWh and 2·67p/KWh respectively.

Anthracite Imports

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the level of imports of anthracite annually since 1980.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Annual imports of anthracite into the United Kingdom for each year from 1980 were as shown in the following table:

Anthracite Imports

	('000 tonnes)
1980	321
1981	330
1982	617
1983	672
1984	1,264
1985	1,190
1986	592

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has as to the royalty paid by importing companies to British Coal on anthracite imports.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No royalties are paid to British Coal in respect of any imported solid fuels.

Coal Stocks

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give estimates of the total stocks of coal held in Britain in each January from 1980 to January of the current year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The total stocks of coal held in the United Kingdom at the beginning of each year from 1980 to 1987 were as shown in the following table.

1984	57,960
1985	36,548
1986	34,979
1987	38,481

Note: These total stock figures include both undistributed and distributed stocks, apart from those distributed stocks held in merchants' yards, etc., mainly for the domestic market, and those held by the industrial sector.

Research and Development

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give a breakdown, by country and by English region, of his Department's total expenditure on research and development, as shown in the latest edition of the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development".

Mr. Parkinson: No. A breakdown of expenditure by my Department on research and development of the kind the hon. Member requests is not available and cannot be produced without disproportionate costs.

SCOTLAND

Mortality

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will express the number of deaths in Scotland of those aged 65 years and over which occurred in the months October to March as a percentage of those which occurred in the previous six months, for each year since 1974-75.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Note: Deaths are processed by month of registration.

M8

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many stretches on the M8 are currently coned off; what is the length of each stretch; how long it has been restricted; and when it is expected to be returned to normal.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are six lane closures on the length of M8 for which the Secretary of State is responsible. Details are as follows:

Lothian Region

Livingston interchange (A899)—two closures for bridge repairs, westbound fast lane 600 m, eastbound fast lane 900 m, introduced 23 October, expected to end spring 1988.

Blackburn to Bathgate road (B792)—one closure for bridge repairs, westbound fast lane 2·5 km, introduced Autumn 1987, to end 3 December.

Strathclyde Region

East of Newhouse interchange (A73), approximately 1 km of the eastbound slow lane is coned off from 9 am to 4 pm each day to effect repairs to the surfacing, the start point coinciding with the previous day's finishing point. Work started on 16 November, expected to end before Christmas.

M8 Viaduct over the White Cart Water (east of Glasgow airport interchange)—two closures for bridge repairs, 1,300 m of eastbound slow lane from 25 November to 18 December, and 1,400 m of westbound slow lane from 26 November to 4 December.

Homelessness

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make any additional funds available to local authorities to deal with the problem of homelessness during the current year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is for local authorities to determine how best to deploy consent allocated to them for capital expenditure on housing. My right hon. and learned Friend took into account, however, local authorities' responsibilities for the homeless when making very substantially increased housing allocations in 1987-88. In addition, in October, Scottish housing authorities received £3·6 million supplementary allocations—not paralleled in England—for expenditure on their own housing stock.

In the expectation of underspends by English local authorities of allocations issued for financial year 1987-88, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced this week a redistribution of resources which will allow English authorities to devote an additional £25 million to projects specifically designed to alleviate the problems of homelessness. No corresponding underspends are expected in Scotland.

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications have been made for accommodation in Scotland under the Housing (Homeless Persons) Act during 1987; and what is the average size of families making such applications.

Mr. Rifkind: Statistics on applications under the homeless persons legislation are returned to the Scottish Development Department by local authorities on a financial year basis. Although a small number of authorities have not yet completed the processing of figures for 1986-87, the returns submitted to date show just over 21,700 applications. No information is collected on the size of applicant households.

Health Care (Tayside)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the latest figures for the accumulated debt owed to Tayside health board by private patients since 1979.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not available in the terms requested.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many of the new full-time staff employed by the National Health Service in (a) the Tayside health board area and (b) the Dundee district authority area are filling vacancies: (i) left by retirement or other similar causes, and (ii) new posts;

(2) how many (i) doctors, (ii) nurses and (iii) other staff were involved in operations performed on National Health Service patients in (a) the Tayside health board area and (b) the Dundee district authority area in 1986; and what were the numbers performing similar operations in each year since 1974.

Mr. Forsyth: This information is not readily available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Council and SSHA House Sales

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many homes in Scotland formerly owned by (i) local authorities and (ii) housing associations excluding the Scottish Special Housing Association have been sold to private owners during that part of 1987 for which figures are available;

(2) how many homes in Scotland formerly owned by (i) local authorities and (ii) housing associations excluding the Scottish Special Housing Association had been sold to private owners by 31 December 1986; and what percentage this figure represents of the total Scottish public housing stock;

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Final decisions on the level of housing support grant and rate fund contribution limits for 1988-89 will not be taken until later this month when my right hon. and learned Friend has completed his consideration of representations made by COSLA and individual local authorities. Decisions on 1988-89 rent levels are for local authorities themselves to take.

Gifts in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any further items have been accepted in lieu of tax in the current financial year.

Mr. Rifkind: I am pleased to announce that the following item has been accepted in lieu of tax:

Item	Amount of tax satisfied £
Portrait of John Gray of Carntyne by Sir Henry Raeburn	96,250

The portrait has been allocated to the national galleries of Scotland temporarily while the question of permanent allocation is being considered.

EMPLOYMENT

Disabled Persons

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many registered disabled people were unemployed (a) three years ago, (b) two years ago and (c) one year ago; and what is the most recent figure.

Mr. Lee: The number of registered disabled people who are unemployed claimants at unemployment benefit offices is not available. However, the table shows the number of unemployed registered disabled people in Great Britain registered for employment at jobcentres and careers offices at October of each year since 1985 and for September 1984. The figure for October 1984 is not available.

	Number
7 September 1984	35,189
4 October 1985	29,009
3 October 1986	25,539
2 October 1987	21,769

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of unemployment for disabled people; and what is the average length of unemployment for able-bodied people.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available.

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of registered disabled people were unemployed in (a) June 1979, (b) June 1983 and (c) June 1987; and what is the most recent figure.

Mr. Lee: Information on the number of registered disabled people who are unemployed claimants at unemployment benefit offices is not available. However, the number of unemployed registered disabled people in Great Britain registered for employment at jobcentres and careers offices for the closest month to June of the requested years and the latest figure are as follows:

	Numbers
12 July 1979	60,381
3 June 1983	69,544
3 July 1987	24,350
2 October 1987	21,769

The figures are not directly compatible due to the ending of compulsory registration at jobcentres in October 1982.

The numbers of disabled people in Great Britain registered under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944, which are counted annually in April are:

	Numbers
April 1979	482,006
April 1983	433,177
April 1987	383,439

Adjudication Officers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many additional support staff for unemployment benefit adjudication officers have been appointed, following recommendations of the chief adjudication officer's annual report.

Mr. Lee: The chief adjudication officer first recommended an increase in support staff for adjudication officers in his annual report for 1984-85. Since the period covered by that report my Department has conducted an internal survey into the organisation of the adjudication service. In the two years since that survey, some 90 additional clerical and secretarial staff have been introduced to support the work of adjudication officers.

Employment Opportunities (Barking and Dagenham)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 12 November, Official Report, column 232, if Westminster city council has sought any advice from his Department concerning (a) employment prospects in Barking and Dagenham for people previously resident in Westminster but to be housed temporarily in Barking, (b) the availability of his Department's programmes for people previously resident in Westminster but to be housed temporarily in Barking, (c) the availability of Manpower Services Commission programmes for people previously resident in Westminster but to be housed temporarily in Barking and (d) general employment matters in Barking and Dagenham.

Mr. Lee: My Department is not aware of any requests for advice having been made to it by Westminster city council in relation to any of the matters in the question.

Local Office Staff

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will supply figures for staffing levels in the unemployment benefit offices in the Bristol area, listing vacancies by grade.

Mr. Lee: There are 267 staff employed in unemployment benefit offices in the city of Bristol area. There are currently no vacancies at any grade.

Benefit Claimants

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the number of claimants whose unemployment benefit is suspended pending inquiry in the Bristol area.

Mr. Lee: There are no records maintaned to show the number of suspensions of unemployment benefit.

However, statistics for the third quarter of 1987 show that in the Bristol sector adjudication office area 6,081 cases on which a question of doubt arose were decided by an adjudication officer.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will institute an inquiry into the series of decisions made by the unemployment benefit office in Bristol which led to Ms. Rachel Caine's entitlement to unemployment benefit being suspended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Following the very sad death of Ms. Caine, I have asked my officials to examine the circumstances of her recent claim to unemployment benefit and to report their conclusions to me.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crime (Inner Cities)

10. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to reduce crime in the inner cities.

Mr. John Patten: We shall continue our efforts to reduce crime with a range of appropriate measures—first, by strengthening the manpower available to the police and encouraging chief officers to deploy more officers on the streets. Second, through the ministerial group on crime prevention a range of initiatives is under way to promote crime prevention in inner urban areas. Thirdly, the Home Office five towns initiative has shown the value of bringing key public, private and voluntary sector agencies together in combating crime. We are now urgently studying how best to promote this co-operative, locally based, approach in the inner cities.

Extradition

15. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the proposed changes in the extradition laws contained in the Criminal Justice Bill [Lords].

Mr. John Patten: We have received five letters.

Visas

16. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on recent developments regarding the operation of the visa system for visitors to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Renton: The extension of visa requirements to India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Ghana and Nigeria is working well. The Government are always prepared to consider suggestions for improvements in the operation of the system, but we have no intention of reversing the arrangements.

Remand Prisoners

17. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with custodial arrangements for prisoners on remand; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No, which is why, in addition to other measures, we have started on the biggest building and refurbishment programme of prisons this century, provided for further bail hostels places, built new courts, appointed additional judges and set time limits on the remand period before trial.

21. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time spent on remand in custody awaiting trial at the latest date for which information is available.

Mr. John Patten: The average number of days spent in custody by untried prisoners received in 1986 was 57 for males and 44 for females.

40. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on measures to reduce the remand population.

Mr. John Patten: The size of the remand population is affected both by increasing use of remands in custody and increases in the time taken to deal with cases. We are taking action on both fronts. Work is being done by the probation service and the Vera Institute of Justice on providing magistrates with better information on defendants through bail information schemes. Resources are being provided over the next three financial years for about nine new bail hostels. On the time taken to deal with cases, we have urged magistrates and their clerks to concentrate on efforts to reduce delays. The management information system which we are introducing to the service will assist courts to monitor their performance. We have also introduced statutory time limits on custody cases in pilot areas. We hope to extend this next year. The Criminal Justice Bill's proposals to allow courts in certain circumstances to remand a defendant in custody for up to 28 days should lead to a reduction in the number of fruitless remand hearings.

Crime Prevention

18. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps he plans to take to encourage further crime prevention schemes on industrial estates.

Mr. John Patten: As an example of the co-operative approach we support, the National Westminster bank is currently sponsoring an extensive scheme in Milton Keynes aimed at establishing industry watches on local factory estates. I am also aware of the success of a similar scheme in the hon. Member's constituency, on the North Lynn industrial estate. These are examples of the activity we are keen to disseminate as good practice for others to follow.

38. Mr. Budgen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on progress on the implementation of the various crime prevention initiatives recently undertaken.

Mr. John Patten: A wide range of crime prevention initiatives are successfully under way at both national and local level. The energy and enthusiasm of those concerned is evident and we are determined that this should be further encouraged and that where initiatives are successful in preventing and reducing crime and in reducing the fear of crime, experience and good practice is made known to all. At national level, the ministerial group on crime prevention and the standing conference on crime prevention have important roles in exchanging ideas and co-ordinating policies. To support and encourage crime prevention work locally we hope shortly to announce details of a new crime prevention organisation.

53. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implications for his policy on crime prevention of the latest figures of recorded crime.

Mr. John Patten: The recorded crime figures for the 12 months to the end of June 1987 show an increase of 3 per cent. compared with the previous 12 months. This is appreciably less than the 6 per cent. average annual increase between 1980 and 1986. There was a fall in thefts from shops, and the increase in burglaries was well below the long term rate of increase. This is encouraging because these are both types of offence which can be prevented.

Crime prevention will therefore continue to play an important part in our efforts to reduce crime. We will continue to encourage all those who can help to prevent crime to take appropriate action.

Remands

19. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans for improving the quality of information provided by the police to magistrates courts when making decisions about whether to remand in custody or on bail.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The police are already aware of the need to provide the Crown Prosecution Service with all information in their possession relevant to the decision whether or not to oppose bail. In addition, the probation service has run pilot schemes in certain areas, in which they have provided magistrates, through the Crown Prosecution Service, with detailed information about a defendant's suitability for bail. I am keeping a close eye on the progress of these schemes, with a view to evaluating the case for their extension.

Shoplifting

20. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to bring forward crime prevention initiatives to deal with the problem of shoplifting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: During the last two years a working group of the Standing Conference on Crime Prevention has been looking at the question of shop theft. Over 3,000 copies of the group's report have now been issued, mainly to members of the retail trade. The majority of the report's recommendations are directed at the retail trade itself and we therefore welcome the group's most recent suggestion that the trade should mount a national publicity campaign aimed at informing the individual retailer of the problem of shop theft and the measures by which he can protect himself. We hope very much that such a campaign will be launched.

Mentally Ill Prisoners

22. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will conduct an inquiry into those cases where convicted prisoners, who are awaiting sentence but are also mentally ill, have to spend time in prison rather than being committed to a secure or other psychiatric unit.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. We do not think that there are grounds for establishing a general inquiry of this kind. As my right hon. Friend stated in reply to a question from the hon. Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson) on 30 November a joint Home Office—DHSS working party was set up last year to look at the problems presented by mentally disordered offenders in prison in England and Wales, including those awaiting sentence. It made a number of recommendations, including that steps should be taken to ensure that the courts are fully aware of the non-custodial options open to them, particularly their powers of remand to hospital for report or treatment under the Mental Health Act 1983 and the facilities available in the health system. We shall be acting on these recommendations. In the meantime, if my hon. Friend has a particular case in mind, I hope he will let me know.

Commission for Racial Equality

23. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future funding of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. John Patten: Current provision for grant-in-aid to the Commission for Racial Equality is £10,845,000 in 1987-88 and £11,116,000 in 1988-89.

Independent Television

24. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to discuss the future of the independent television network.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend meets the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority regularly to discuss matters of current interest. The future of the independent television network is a matter discussed with him before and we expect to discuss it with him again at some point.

Firearms

25. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received in connection with proposed changes to the firearms laws.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion) earlier today.

Concessionary Television Licences

26. Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to extend to people who are deaf or hard of hearing the arrangements for a concessionary television licence which apply to the registered blind.

Mr. Renton: We have no plans to do so.

Drug Abuse

27. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on recent initiatives being co-ordinated through his Department to combat drug misuse and trafficking.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government continue to intensify their campaign against drugs. The Home Office programme to help finance overseas projects relevant to this campaign will be increased from £500,000 to £2 million next year. Schemes under consideration include working with the United Nations fund for drug abuse control in its plan to reduce drug abuse and trafficking in India, to support law enforcement projects in the coca growing countries of Latin America, and assistance to West Africa, which is emerging as a major drug trafficking route.

We are continuing to boost the resources available to the police and Customs in the fight against drugs. Since May 1986 17 dedicated drugs wings have been added to regional crime squads in England and Wales, with 221 additional police officers to man them. The strengthening of the national drugs intelligence unit will continue in 1988-89, with an increase in staff to improve international liaison, and provision for a six-man drugs profit confiscation team. On the Customs side there will be about 450 additional staff allocated to Customs work in 1988-89, mainly on the prevention of drug smuggling. Three hundred and sixty will be employed on preventive controls on passengers and freight at ports and airports, and some 90 investigation, prosecution and support staff will be added to strengthen drug investigations, including the tracing of assets of traffickers suspected of drug smuggling.

Under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986, the High Court had by 2 December made 140 restraint or charging orders, freezing assets of the order of £7 million, and the first confiscation orders are beginning to be made as cases work their way through the Crown court.

Neighbourhood Watch

28. Mr. Bright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes are currently operating in Luton.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that there are now about 240 such schemes.

44. Mr. John Greenaway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the growth in numbers of neighbourhood watch schemes, with particular regard to their quality and the results that are being obtained; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Neighbourhood watch is essentially a local initiative and the number of schemes throughout England and Wales has grown to over 42,000 in just five years. The quality and effectiveness of schemes in preventing crime and reducing the fear of crime inevitably varies. It is important that experience and examples of good practice are shared and to this end the Home Office is preparing fresh guidance for the police and the public on the implementation and maintenance of schemes.

48. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will report the progress of neighbourhood watch schemes; and what is his latest estimate of the number of schemes in operation in the Metropolitan police area.

Mr. John Patten: Since 1982 neighbourhood watch has flourished to such an extent that there are now over 42,000 schemes in England and Wales including some 7,500 in the Metropolitan police area. Many of the schemes have been instigated by members of the public and it is this emphasis on the involvement of all members of the community to prevent crime and reduce the fear of crime that makes neighbourhood watch an important element of our overall crime prevention strategy. We shall continue to encourage the growth of these schemes.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

29. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects there to be a meeting with officials of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend has no plans for such a meeting at present.

Local Radio

30. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the implications for his policy on local radio for the future prospects of Radio West Midlands.

Mr. Renton: A number of responses to our Green Paper "Radio: Choices and Opportunities" expressed concern about the withdrawal of BBC local radio services in general, even though the Green Paper made clear the Government's view that, while the BBC would have to judge the extent of its commitment to local radio alongside the other claims on its resources, there continued to be a case for the provision of public service sound broadcasting at local level by the BBC.

Sunday Trading

31. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been found guilty of offences under the Sunday trading laws over the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information, which may be incomplete, is given in the table.

Defendants found guilty of offences in relation to Sunday trading under the Shops Act 1950
England and Wales

Year	Number of persons found guilty
1982	382
1983	496
1984	720
1985	594
1986	543

51. Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to introduce legislation on Sunday trading.

Mr. Renton: We are considering possible options for changes in the law but legislation is unlikely to be introduced in the present Session.

Convicted Murderers

32. Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total annual cost of keeping all the prisoners in Her Majesty's prisons who have been convicted of murder.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible to distinguish the costs of keeping different types of prisoner in custody. The average annual cost of keeping a person in a penal establishment in 1986-87, the latest financial year for which information is available, was £13,104.

Capital Punishment

33. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received in support of urgent legislation for the restoration of capital punishment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We receive many letters on the general issue of capital punishment from hon. Members and from the public, expressing all shades of opinion.

Prisons

34. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners of black and ethnic minority origin are currently held in British prisons.

Mr. John Patten: The latest available information for England and Wales is given in the following table. The information is published annually in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales", Table 1.13 of the 1986 issue, Cmnd. 210, copies of which are in the Library.

Estimated population in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales on 30 June 1987: by ethnic origin

Chinese, Arab, Mixed origin	990
Other, not recorded (including refusals)	1,280
All persons	50,270

[1] Provisional data.

35. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current cost of maintaining a person in prison for a year.

Mr. John Patten: In 1986-87, the latest financial year for which information is available, the average annual cost of keeping a person in a penal establishment was £13,104.

36. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are currently serving sentences of less than one week in Winson Green prison, Birmingham.

Mr. John Patten: On Wednesday 2 December five people were serving sentences of less than seven days at Winson Green prison.

Procurement of Males

37. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the number of (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions of men in each of the last three years for procurement of males under the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Data in the form requested are not collected centrally. The readily available information is given in the following table:

Males aged 21 or over proceeded against and found guilty of procuring or attempting to procure or being party to the commission by a man under 21 of an act of gross indecency with another man.

England and Wales

Year	Proceeded against	Found guilty
1984	15	18[1]
1985	106	98
1986	37	37

[1] Includes some against whom proceedings were begun in previous years.

Fresh Start

39. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implementation of new Fresh Start working practices in the prison system.

49. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prison establishments are now operating the Fresh Start working practices.

Mr. John Patten: Fresh Start working has now been implemented at 102 establishments. At the remainder management and staff are working towards the conclusion of local agreements to enable Fresh Start to be implemented.

46. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what benefits he foresees for the prison service from the introduction of the Fresh Start working practices.

Mr. John Patten: Fresh Start is intended to improve the efficiency, effectiveness and economy with which the prison service discharges its public service. The new working arrangements match resources more closely to the work needs of establishments; and provide more responsive and flexible systems, improved accountability, and the opportunity for managers to manage more effectively. For prison officers, the new working practices bring reduced hours, predictable attendance patterns, improved job continuity and satisfaction and increased basic pay. For inmates, Fresh Start aims to provide a sound organisational basis for the enhanced delivery of regimes.

Tamils

41. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the Tamils who were disembarked at London airport subsequent to undressing (a) have since left the United Kingdom, (b) have been allowed leave to enter or (c) have cases still under consideration.

Mr. Renton: Decisions have been taken in respect of four of the 64 Tamils in question. One of those concerned has been refused asylum and returned to Sri Lanka; the other three, who have also been refused asylum, have applied for judicial review of the decision. The case is currently before the House of Lords. Decisions on the following 60 cases are awaiting the judgment in that case.

Women Police Constables

42. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of woman police constables recruited in the last three years, and the number who have left the service during the same period.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

Women Police Constables
(All forces in England and Wales)

Year	Recruitment	Wastage
1984	861	818
1985	1,071	815
1986	1,297	841
[1]1987	1,176	574

[1] 1 January to 30 September.

Electricity Meters

43. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to make it a criminal offence to be in possession of equipment designed illegally to tamper with domestic electricity meters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: No. Depending on the circumstances, a person found in possession of such equipment could already be charged with attempting, conspiring or inciting another person to commit an offence; or with aiding, abetting, counselling or procuring an offence, contrary to section 1 (theft) or section 13 (abstracting of electricity) of the Theft Act 1968; or with conspiracy to defraud.

West Midlands Police

45. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to authorise an increase in the establishment of the West Midlands police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend will consider the needs of the West Midlands police in the light of progress in the civilianisation programme in the force, the applications received from the police authority, and the assessment of them by Her Majesty's inspector of constabulary.

Nationality

47. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what evidence he has of hardship suffered by elderly and unemployed people of African, Caribbean and Asian origin as a result of the requirement to pay £60 in order to register under the Nationality Act; if he will waive the charge in such cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We have received a number of representations from hon. Members about constituents who say they cannot afford the fee. There is, however, no requirement for registration, and failure to apply, for whatever reason, will not affect immigration status or existing rights to social security benefits, local authority housing, medical treatment under the National Health Service or voting. We do not therefore believe that any hardship will result. There is no power to waive the fee in particular cases.

Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis

50. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis; and what was discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend last met the commissioner on 19 October. They discussed a number of policing issues of concern to the Metropolitan police, such as the carrying of knives and the controls on firearms.

Minors (Abduction)

52. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the remedies for those affected by the illegal taking overseas of minors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We receive letters from time to time from or on behalf of parents whose children have been taken abroad against their wishes. Under the Child Abduction Act 1984, it is a criminal offence for a parent to take or send a child out of the United Kingdom without the consent of the other parent. Civil remedies for the return of abducted children from abroad—for example, under the provisions of the Child Abduction and Custody Act 1985—are a matter for my right hon. and noble Friend the Lord Chancellor.

Football Violence

54. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to improve the standard of public order at Football League matches.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The maintenance of public order at Football League matches is the responsibility of the police, whose unremitting efforts have led to a significant improvement in crowd behaviour over the last two years. We have strengthened police powers through the controls on alcohol and the provisions of the Public Order Act 1986. On 1 August, part IV of that Act also gave the courts new powers to make an exclusion order against any person convicted of a football-related offence.

We are determined to make further progress, in partnership with the football authorities and the clubs themselves. The clubs are extending the use of closed-circuit television, which has played a major part in the improved behaviour at football grounds, and are being strongly encouraged to introduce effective membership card schemes. Progress is monitored by a working group chaired by my hon. Friend the Minister for Sport.

Toys (Advertising)

55. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will introduce legislation to restrict the advertising of children's toys on television prior to Christmas.

Mr. Renton: The statutory requirements governing broadcast advertisements are of long standing and we have no present plans to amend them.

Prison Industries

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the turnover and (b) the profit or loss of prison industries in the latest available year.

Mr. John Patten: The last finalised accounts for prison industries were for the year 1985-86. Turnover for that year was £23·5 million, and the loss £25·5 million. Final accounts for 1986-87 are not yet available, but provisional figures are a turnover of £26·1 million and a loss in the region of £18·5 million.

Lindholme Prison

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what is the present maximum number of prisoners that Her Majesty's prison Lindholme accommodates; and if he has any plans to increase this number;

(2) if he has any plans to keep prisoners in Her Majesty's prison Lindholme of different categories from those held there at present.

Mr. John Patten: The maximum number of inmates that can presently be accommodated in uncrowded conditions in Her Majesty's prison Lindholme is 750. A further 250 places are due to become available towards the end of this year and will be brought into operation when extra staff are in post and the necessary preparations have been completed. That is expected to be in late March next year. We have no plans to introduce prisoners other than those in security categories C and D as at present.

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that all prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Lindholme have a release date.

Mr. John Patten: So far as we are aware, all prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Lindholme have been notified, in accordance with standing orders, of their earliest and latest dates of release and of the dates on which, if they are eligible for consideration for parole, they might, if selected, be released on licence. Delays can occur, however, for a variety of reasons, in reaching decisions on parole. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, perhaps he could let me know.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Tom Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the responsibilities of each of the deputy secretaries in his Department and the numbers and ranks of staff reporting to each.

Mr. Hurd: The information relating to staff in post as at 1 November 1987 is as follows:

Grade 2: Criminal, Constitutional and Statistical Departments and Research and Planning Unit:
Three grade 3s, and 708 other staff.

Grade 2: Police Department (including Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary, Forensic Science Service and Scientific Research and Development Branch):
Three grade 3s, Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Constabulary, Controller, Forensic Science Service, and 2,641 other staff.

Grade 2: Broadcasting and Miscellaneous, Equal Opportunities and General, Immigration and Nationality and Passport Departments:
Four grade 3s, and 4,417 other staff.

Principal Establishment Officer: Establishment, Fire and Emergency Planning, Finance and Manpower Departments:
Three grade 3s, one director of information services and 1,887 other staff.

Legal Adviser
Two principal assistant legal advisers (Grade 3) and 26 other staff.

Director-General of the Prison Service:
One Deputy Director-General, three grade 3s, one Director, Prison Medical Services, and 27,795 other staff.

Television Advertising (Alcohol)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received on alcohol advertising on television in the past three years.

Mr. Renton: About 30, the majority of which have been received this year.

Electoral Register

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to exempt electoral registration officers from the requirement to sell the electoral register in machine readable form to any person who pays the correct fee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Representation of the People Regulations 1986 require electoral registration officers, on payment of a prescribed fee, to supply electoral registration data only to those people who are entitled to free copies of the printed register, that is, those who need it in connection with elections. Electoral registration officers are not required to supply the data to any other person, though they may do so on payment of a higher prescribed fee.

Fires

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish for each of the last five years the number of fires which have required attention by the public fire services which have been caused by cigarettes; and what proportion of fires requiring the attention of the public fire services are caused by cigarettes.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information relates to fires, other than minor fires, attended by local authority fire brigades. Detailed information on the source of ignition of those fires is published annually in "Fire Statistics United Kingdom" (Tables 34 and 61 of the latest issue for 1985) copies of which are in the Library. The information on accidental fires ignited by smokers materials (other than matches) is brought together in the following table.

Accidental fires where the source of ignition was reported as smokers' materials other than matches[1]

	Number of fires	Percentage[2]
1981	9,374	8·0
1982	10,125	8·4
1983	10,624	8·8
1984	11,541	9·1
1985	11,395	9·0

[1] Mainly cigarettes, but also cigars and pipe debris.
[2] Percentage of all accidental fires attended (excluding minor fires).
Figures for 1986 will be available later this month.

Prisoners (Body Belts)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has completed consideration of Sir Montague Levine's report on the use of body belts on prisoners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Sir Montague Levine, Assistant Deputy Coroner for the inner south district of Greater London, wrote to the prison department on 31 July 1987 following an inquest into the death of a former inmate of Wormwood Scrubs prison. In the course of the evidence it had been found that a body belt had been used to enable the inmate — who had been violent and had been unwilling to consent to the administration of a sedative — to be transferred from the hospital at Wormwood Scrubs to the hospital at Brixton prison. The inquest had heard that it was the usual practice of medical staff at Wormwood Scrubs not to sedate a patient in the absence of consent unless the need to do so had been confirmed by an independent consultant psychiatrist, but that difficulty had been experienced in the past in obtaining the services of a consultant at short notice.

In his letter Sir Montague Levine made no recommendation about the use of body belts, but he did report the jury's view that a rota system should be employed to ensure that help from a consultant psychiatrist could be obtained at all times. In the light of Sir Montague's letter the principal medical officer in charge of medical services at Wormwood Scrubs has been asked to seek the agreement of the appropriate psychiatric hospital to medical staff at the establishment having access to consultant psychiatrists on the hospital's duty rota for emergencies, including those occurring at weekends.

Juvenile Courts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will commission a study into the creation of an appointments system for the juvenile courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There have been recent research studies on the management of magistrates' courts business. We intend to publish the results shortly, with a commentary on the lessons which emerge including those on listing practices. We doubt whether an appointments system for individual cases would be practicable in juvenile courts, as in all magistrates' courts, because it is difficult to predict how long a case will last.

Carlisle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 20 November, if he will give separately the number of police in the Carlisle city sub-division for each year since 1977.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Cumbria that this information is not available. Police officers are deployed throughout the whole of the northern division, which covers both Carlisle city and Carlisle rural sub-divisions, as operational circumstances demand.

Police (Firearms)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the total number of guns held by each police force; and what steps his Department takes to monitor these numbers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to questions from the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) on 30 November at column 395.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis as to the reasons why the Metropolitan Police now record only the number of operations in which guns are authorised rather than the actual number of weapons issued; if he will seek to change this practice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A joint study carried out by Home Office officials and police representatives in 1983 concluded that the figures for the police use of firearms collected in 1982 were not reliable because they reflected wide variations in the interpretation of what should and should not be recorded.

As a result all forces were asked to submit to the Home Office annually details of the number of operations and not occasions in which firearms were issued. A more detailed compilation of firearms statistics has been considered but no justification could be found for the considerable extra resources such an elaborate system would require both within police forces and the Home Office. There are no plans at present to change the criteria for recording statistics relating to the issue and use of police firearms.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in Leicestershire were issued with firearms in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1986, the latest year for which figures are available, 58 officers of Leicestershire constabulary were issued with firearms.

Draize Test

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he is satisfied that laboratories using the Draize eye irritancy test are conforming to his Department's guidelines; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what steps he takes to monitor compliance by animal experiment laboratories with his Department's guidelines on (a) the Draize eye irritancy test and (b) other experimental tests.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Implementation of the Home Office guidelines on the Draize eye test, like all aspects of the control of the use of animals in experiments or other scientific procedures, is closely monitored by the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Inspectorate. We are satisfied that the introduction of the guidelines on the operation of the Draize eye test has played a major part in the adoption of best practice in the conduct of this test.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the BIOS consultancy and contract research laboratory at Bagshot in Surrey is still performing experiments on live animals under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not our practice to reveal where work licensed under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 is carried out.

Immigration

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, when he expects to announce the conclusions of his review of the arrangements for hon. and right hon. Members' interventions on immigration cases which he announced on 16 November, Official Report, column 789.

Mr. Renton: I have nothing to add to my reply of 23 November to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) at column 57.

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Hurd: The Home Office obtains its stationery from Her Majesty's Stationery Office, including brown envelopes, paper bags and toilet tissue containing recycled paper. More general use is inhibited by the much greater cost of recycled paper. The Department arranges for local authorities and private contractors to collect waste paper for recycling where it is economic to do so.

Television Licences

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton will receive a reply to his letter to him dated 18 September, following correspondence involving his Department, Melton borough council and the National Television Licence Records Office, which has continued since March, on the subject of residential care television licences.

Mr. Renton: The application by Melton borough council for accommodation for residential care licences to which this correspondence relates has raised legal issues concerning the application of the relevant statutory regulations. I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as these have been resolved.

Remand Prisoners

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for changing the privileges to which unconvicted remand prisoners are entitled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The unconvicted prisoners' food privilege is to be withdrawn with effect from 1 March 1988. That is announced today and the reasons explained, in the Government's response to the Home Affairs Committee's report on the state and use of prisons.

Strip Searches

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many strip searches were carried out on men serving sentences of imprisonment during each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many strip searches were carried out on women serving sentences of imprisonment in each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(3) how many strip searches were carried out on unconvicted male prisoners in each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how many strip searches were carried out on unconvicted female prisoners in each of the years 1984, 1985 and 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available.

DNA Tests

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, how many people have taken part in DNA blood testing; and in how many cases the claimed relationships have been proved by this method.

Mr. Renton: The commissioning of reports on relationships based on DNA tests is a private arrangement between the individuals concerned and the testers. Outcomes are not recorded centrally.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will institute a research programme designed to increase the number of randomly selected persons tested for DNA profiles, in order to facilitate the evaluation by courts of DNA profiling tests; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We see no need to do so. Work on the evaluation of DNA profiles is already well established both in the forensic science service and elsewhere; I am satisfied that this will enable a full evaluation to be made of the technology.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current budget for staff training, and the performance and evaluations of DNA profiling tests carried out in his Department's and Metropolitan Police forensic science laboratories; if he has any proposals to increase it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The provisions in the current financial year for the development of DNA profiling and the related staff training costs for the forensic science service is £423,500. The corresponding figure for the Metropolitan police Laboratory is £70,500.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to establish facilities capable of carrying out DNA profiling tests at his Department's forensic science laboratories other than the central research establishment at Aldermaston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is expected that a DNA profiling service will be available in each of the Home Office forensic science laboratories, and also the Metropolitan police forensic science laboratory, within the next 12 months.

Prisons

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the future of the therapeutic regime at Grendon Underwood prison.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 26 October at column 18.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's policy on the use of closed conditions for prison visits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Governors are encouraged to allow open visits, at which the inmate and visitors sit together at a table without any barrier between them, wherever possible. Closed visits, at which the inmate and visitors are separated by a barrier, may, however, be imposed in certain circumstances, particularly where it is thought that this is justified in order to prevent the introduction of drugs or other illicit articles into the establishment and special arrangements are made with respect to certain category A prisoners.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women are currently serving sentences in H Wing, Her Majesty's Prison, Durham; how many are serving life sentences; and what are the sentences of the remainder.

Mr. John Patten: According to the records held centrally 37 females were serving sentences in Durham prison on 31 October 1987. 24 were serving life sentences, including custody for life or detention during Her Majesty's Pleasure or for life under section 53, Children and Young Persons Act 1933. Three were serving determinate sentences of over 10 years and 10 were serving sentences of over four years up to 10 years.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to reply to the third report of the Home Affairs Committee on the state and use of prisons. Session 1986-87 (HC35-1).

Mr. Hurd: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to the right hon. and learned Member for Warley, West (Mr. Archer).

Fires (London Underground)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the estimated time it will take the fire brigade to reach from the surface to the middle of the longest stretch of underground line on the Heathrow loop; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: These are operational matters which are the responsibility of the London and Surrey fire brigades, who inform me that practical tests have revealed that approximately 20 minutes is needed to reach on foot the furthest part of the loop from the surface.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated length of time the standard fire brigade breathing apparatus lasts before it needs to be refilled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There is no standard fire brigade breathing apparatus, but most brigades are equipped with sets which have a nominal duration time of 35 and 46 minutes.

Metropolitan Police (Accounting Practice)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cause of the delay in introducing real functional costing to the accounts of the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 23 November 1987]: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the system to provide information on the costs of certain Metropolitan police functions is being developed in accordance with the agreed programme and will be implemented as planned.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tobacco Industry (Employment)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what extent employment has declined in the tobacco manufacturing industry in Northern Ireland since 1979.

Mr. Viggers: The number of employees declined by 3,897, from 6,129 at June 1979 to 2,232 at September 1987.

Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he proposes to table a draft order similar to the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: A proposal for a draft Matrimonial and Family Proceedings (Northern Ireland) Order containing provisions corresponding to those of the Matrimonial and Family Proceedings Act 1984 was published in February of this year.

The closing date for comments was the 3 April and I am at present considering the issues raised.

Suckler Cows

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the suckler cow numbers in Northern Ireland for 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Viggers: The numbers of suckler cows on Northern Ireland farms at the June agricultural census, including estimates for those on minor holdings, were:

	Number
1979	245,907
1981	208,537
1983	198,152
1985	204,384
1986	201,505
1987	199,073

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what new policy initiatives he will take to halt the decline in suckler cow numbers in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Returns from the 1987 June census suggest that the rate of decline in suckler cow numbers in Northern Ireland has been checked. Moreover, prices for store cattle and suckled calves have been considerably higher this year than they were last. For the present therefore I have no plans for new policy initiatives in this area.

Agricultural Development Programme

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the new agricultural development programme will be introduced in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: It is hoped that it will be reintroduced in the spring of 1988.

Social Fund

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in due course his social fund allocations for each office in Northern Ireland, with figures for the number of claimants at each office in Northern Ireland, and express the social fund sums for each office as a sum per head for the claimants of each office; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The budget for the discretionary part of the Northern Ireland social fund for 1988-89, its first year of operation, will be £21·1 million. Of this, some £7·2 million will be for community care grants, £13·7 million for loans and just under £0·2 million will be held back as a contingency reserve. The allocations to each social security office in Northern Ireland are listed below along with the other information requested.

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement giving his reasons why the social fund allocations for Northern Ireland were not announced along with those for Great Britain, pursuant to his answer of 17 November, Official Report, column 532, to the hon. Member for Belfast, South.

Mr. Needham: The information was not available.

Shipbuilding

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what estimates are available to him of the potential for expansion in the Northern Ireland shipbuilding industry should there be a general upturn in shipbuilding in the 1990s.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Information about the potential for expansion in Northern Ireland shipbuilding industry is obtained from Harland and Wolff, advising consultants, the Commission of the European Communities, the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, Lloyd's List and other sources as appropriate. The scope for expansion by Harland and Wolff depends on its ability to secure orders on a commercial basis.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to place his Department's future marine engine building contracts with a company in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: [holding answer 30 November 1987]: In the event that a marine engine building contract were to be placed tenders would be sought on a commercial basis, under the usual terms and conditions which apply to Government purchasing.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will place a copy of Harland and Wolff's corporate plan in the Library; when he expects to receive an update of this or a new corporate plan; and if he will place a copy of this document in the Library.

Mr. Viggers: [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The company submitted its 1987 corporate plan on 16 November. I regret that I cannot place this or the previous plan in the Library as it contains commercially confidential information.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the present composition of the Harland and Wolff board; and what information he has on changes pending.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The directors of Harland and Wolff are: A. Ferry; P. M.

Nielsen; T. J. Parker; C. J. Perrin; A. P. Shearer; J. M. Williams. No changes are imminent, although membership of the board is kept under review.

Agricultural Improvement

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will allocate further funds under the non-plan agricultural improvement scheme to small farmers.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Additional funds have recently been made available under this scheme to all farmers irrespective of business size but subject to expenditure limits per farm business and per labour unit. I have no plans to make further special arrangements for small farmers.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money was allocated under the non-plan agricultural improvement scheme in 1986 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 30 November 1987]: In 1986-87 financial year £8·46 million was paid to Northern Ireland farmers under this scheme.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications were received under the non-plan agricultural improvement scheme in 1986 in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 30 November 1987]: In 1986-87 financial year 2,273 claims were received from Northern Ireland farmers for grant under this scheme.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications under the non-plan agricultural improvement scheme were refused in 1986; and what were the reasons for refusal, giving the numbers in each refusal category.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 30 November 1987]: In 1986-87 financial year 28 claims for grant were refused on the grounds that:

(a) they failed to meet the minimum level of expenditure for a claim (£750).

(b) they could not be paid during the currency of an improvement plan undertaken by the applicant.

(c) the work on items on which grant was claimed had not been completed or not completed to required standards; or

(d) a commitment to expenditure for agricultural waste and effluent facilities had been made after the scheme had been closed to such works on 23 July 1985.

To establish the number of refusals in each category would require disproportionate expenditure.

Community Relations

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the remit, staffing, budget and work programme of the community relations unit.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 2 November 1987]: The main roles of the unit are: to examine all major policy initiatives from the point of view of their possible impact on community relations; to review at appropriate intervals the impact on community relations of existing major policies and programmes; to develop new ideas about improving community relations and about how best to support those on the ground who are working to improve community relations.

The unit is staffed by two full-time officers and two senior officers who devote part of their time to directing the work of the unit. The unit has a part-time academic adviser, Professor John Darby, head of the centre for the study of conflict at the University of Ulster. The budget for 1987-88 is £26,000·00.

The unit does not have an operational budget and any policies formulated through the new arrangements and approved by the Secretary of State will be sponsored or carried out by the Department or Departments directly concerned.

Since its formation on 1 October 1987 the unit has been making contact with a very wide range of people and organisations involved or with an interest in community relations issues. It is now examining major policy submissions to Ministers which could have a significant effect on community relations. The unit has also begun work on a short-list of possible policy areas for review and an analysis is being undertaken of the available date on community relations issues and about the need to initiate further research.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the progress achieved by the community relations unit within his Department.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 2 December 1987]: The unit became operational only on 1 October 1987 and it would be much too soon to make a progress statement.

The unit has, however, been making contact with a very wide range of people and organisations involved or with an interest in community relations issues. It is beginning to examine major departmental policy submissions which could have a significant effect on community relations.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Drugs

56. Mr. Cash: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in recent months in stimulating closer international co-operation by customs authorities against drug production and trafficking.

Mr. Lilley: The United Kingdom has an excellent record of international co-operation in the customs field.

Customs and Excise officials attended the United Nations international conference on drug abuse and illicit trafficking held in June in Vienna. This was attended by 138 countries, most of which agreed on a set of recommendations for further action at national, regional and international level which will be presented to the United Nations commission on narcotic drugs next February. Similarly, the United Kingdom has been an active participant in the intergovernmental group set up by the Economic and Social Committee of the United Nations to consider a new draft convention on drug trafficking and related matters which will enhance co-operation between customs authorities in many areas.

A significant boost to international co-operation was given by the Drug Trafficking Offences Act, which came into force this year. Customs and Excise is in close consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, which is negotiating bilateral agreements with a number of countries on the confiscation of drug traffickers' assets.

United Kingdom Customs have in recent months assisted in the training of officials from Peru and Bangladesh, and have arranged for drug testing equipment to be made available to Nigeria, Ghana and Bangladesh. In addition, a United Kingdom Customs officer will shortly be going out as training officer to the Caribbean.

Customs and Excise have a total of nine drug liaison officers in post in countries known to be sources or points of transit for drugs. This improves intelligence gathering and assists these countries in their own fight against drugs. It is hoped that two more officers will be in post by next year.

The United Kingdom has continued to support the initiatives of the Customs Co-operation Council in such areas as enforcement training, co-operation with trade and industry and better collation, analysis and dissemination of drugs intelligence. Through the International Maritime Organisation and the International Chamber of Shipping, United Kingdom customs are co-operating with other customs authorities in encouraging these international organisations to recognise and develop the role they can play in the struggle against drug trafficking and abuse.

The commitment of Customs and Excise to international co-operation is exemplified by the recent successful operation in which 208 kg of cocaine, with a street value of £51 million, was seized at Southampton and followed by the arrest of eight people in Holland as a result of close collaboration with the French, German and Dutch authorities.

Eurotunnel

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his reply of 23 November and the details of the particular facts of the free journeys concession now published in the enrolment prospectus, how he expects to apply the rules on the tax treatment of benefits to shareholders in relation to the Eurotunnel scheme.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The facts in the prospectus are not, by themselves, sufficient to establish the tax treatment of the benefits to shareholders. The tax treatment will depend upon all the relevant facts. As I explained, the rules will apply to Eurotunnel in the same way as they apply to other schemes.

Beer, Wines and Spirits

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on (a) the retail price index and (b) the tax take, from an increase of 10 per cent. in the duty payable on beer, wines and spirits.

Mr. Lilley: The estimated effects in a full year at 1988-89 prices are as follows:

Increasing the duty payable by 10 per cent.	(a) Estimated impact effect on the retail price index Per cent.	(b) Estimated net revenue yield (£ million)
Beer	0·1	170
Wine	0·1	50
Spirits	0·1	65

Note: The RPI effect is shown to the nearest 0·1 per cent.

Housing Bill

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total cost of reprinting the Housing Bill; what happened to the incorrectly printed copies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The total cost of reprinting House of Commons Bill No. 54—the Housing Bill—was £4,837. Around 2,100 unissued copies of the original print were destroyed by HMSO.

Educational Reform Bill (Corrections)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the cost of issuing the corrections slip (50/1) to the Education Reform Bill.

Mr. Brooke: The cost of printing the corrections slip to House of Commons Bill No. 53—the Education Reform Bill—was £124. Distribution costs cannot be determined exactly without incurring disproportionate cost, but are estimated to have been around £200.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects the European Court of Justice to announce its decision in the case taken by the European Economic Community Commission on 15 September against the United Kingdom regarding the levies of value added tax on new households, gas, electricity, water, sewerage and other services.

Mr. Lilley: Pursuant to my reply of 9 November 1987 at column 64, the Advocate General has now delivered his opinion on the zero-rates infraction case in the European Court of Justice. The opinion is only advisory and does not form part of the court's judgment.

The court will base its final judgment on the full pleadings, both written and oral, of the two parties. This is expected to be delivered early in the new year. We shall need to see and study in detail the precise term of the court's judgment which is of course binding on the United Kingdom before any implications for policy become clear.

The Government have vigorously contended that the zero rates disputed by the Commission are consistent with European Community law.

The case is entirely separate from the Commission's new proposals on indirect tax approximation presented to the ECOFIN Council which Lord Cockfield made public recently and which cannot be adopted without unanimous agreement by the Council of Ministers. In this context, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor has made clear, both in the House and elsewhere, that the Government will not permit to come into force any proposals that in any way conflict with the pledges we have given concerning the United Kingdom's zero rates of VAT.

TRANSPORT

Train Accidents

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give for British Rail for each year since 1979 (a) the number of accidents involving trains, (b) the number of fatal accidents involving trains and (c) the number of fatalities due to train accidents.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information is given, for each of the years 1979 to 1986, in the Department's published annual reports on the safety record of the railways in Great Britain, copies of which are in the Library. The information for 1987 is not yet complete but will be published in due course.

M11 and M6 (Repair Work)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will ensure that those stretches of the M11 and M6 currently subject to contraflows and the coning-off of lanes for repair work will be restored to full use over the Christmas and new year holiday period, where it is safe to do so.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: During bank holidays it is our practice to lift current closure and contraflow arrangements wherever it is safe to do so and the nature of the operations permit. There is always the possibility that an emergency may make it necessary to impose new restrictions. Subject to this possibility, it is hoped over the Christmas and new year holidays to keep the M6 clear and also the M11 with the exception of an area affected by bridge construction at Stansted rail works.

Cowes Harbour (Fatal Accident)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold an inquiry into the fatal incident involving a hydrofoil in Cowes harbour on Friday 27 November, with the results to be publicly available as soon as possible after the end of the inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have appointed a marine surveyor in my Department to undertake a preliminary inquiry into the collision between the hydrofoil ferry Sheerwater 3 and the cabin cruiser Kingfisher on 27 November.

The collision occurred at 1720 hours in West Cowes harbour. The Kingfisher was extensively damaged and the three occupants were thrown into the water. I much regret that one of them lost his life and another suffered very serious injuries. A 14-year-old boy was rescued unhurt. There were no injuries to passengers on board the hydrofoil and it did not suffer any damage.

Details of the findings of the inquiry will be made available to interested parties as soon as possible.

Marine Radio Station Facilities

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he will be taking to seek alternative quotations for the provision of marine radio station facilities from alternative radio and telephony operators.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am seeking advice to who may lawfully offer such facilities and I shall write to my hon. Friend.

London Underground (Drivers)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many drivers on the Underground have been disciplined or threatened with disciplinary action for refusing to take out trains on which the driver's radio was not working; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Disciplinary action is entirely a matter for the management of London Underground. Trains are not allowed to be taken out on the deep tube system unless they have a working radio; and I am informed that no drivers have been disciplined for refusing to take out trains on which the driver's radio was inoperative.

London Underground (Victoria Line)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which of the safety measures for one-person operation of the Victoria line have been omitted from the conversion of other lines to one person operation with the agreement of the railways inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: None. The Victoria line was constructed before detailed criteria for one-person operation had been developed by London Transport or British Railways. The only significant difference, which is not strictly a safety measure, lies in the fact that Victoria line trains are automatically driven.

Railway Inspectorate

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish fully the recent departmental review of the railway inspectorate.

Mr. David Mitchell: We are consulting widely on the Department's review of the railway inspectorate, and I am placing a copy in the Library of the House.

Coaches

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if in the light of the further coach accident on the M25 he will now ban coaches from the outside lane of three-lane motorways;

(2) if in the light of the further coach accident on the M25 he will now restrict coach speed limits to 50 mph on all roads at all times.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Preliminary investigation of the coach accident on the M25 suggests that the coach was travelling at approximately 45 mph in the second lane when the driver is believed to have collapsed at the wheel.

Coaches are limited to 70 mph on motorways, 60 mph on dual carriageways and 50 mph on single carriageways. New regulations requiring the fitting of speed limiters will be made shortly. There are no plans to change the coach speed limits or ban them from the third lane.

Winsford Bypass

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to commence on the A54 Station Road, Winsford bypass; what will be the cost; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: This is a Cheshire county council scheme which we are supporting through transport supplementary grant. The estimated cost shown in the council's transport policies and programme submissions is about £3 million. I understand that construction started in July.

Gibraltar Airport

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his discussions (a) with his Spanish counterpart, on the use of Gibraltar airport and (b) on the completion of an agreement on European Economic Community air fares.

Mr. Channon: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs and I yesterday reached agreement in discussion with the Spanish Foreign and Transport Ministers on arrangements relating to civil aviation at Gibraltar airport. These practical and co-operative arrangements, which are set out in a joint declaration published today, are intended to improve substantially the handling of passengers and freight at the airport and to open up possibilities for its future development. Copies of the declaration are in the Library of the House.

This agreement removes the obstacle which last June blocked adoption of the European Community's aviation liberalisation package. The package, which includes important measures to encourage new, lower air fares, was approved in principle by all member states in June and we now hope to see it adopted at the meeting of the Council of Transport Ministers next Monday.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Marginal Tax Rates

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update the information on marginal tax rates given in his reply of 21 October to the hon. Member for Kensington (Sir B. Rhys Williams), Official Report, column 809, taking account of the benefit and withdrawal rates and national insurance contributions announced for April 1988 but assuming current tax rates.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 19 November at columns 647-8.

DHSS Local Offices

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total amounts paid out in each of the last three financial years in single payments by the following offices of his Department: Bloomsbury (Tavistock Square), Hoxton (Drysdale Street), and Finsbury Park (Archway Tower).

Mr. Portillo: The information asked for is given in the table.

	1984-85	1985-86	[1] 1986-87
Bloomsbury	246,922	494,075	925,256
Hoxton	468,993	784,999	842,033
Finsbury Park	665,833	924,165	998,387

[1] The information for 1986-87 is provisional and subject to amendment.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of claimants whose housing benefit is delayed within his Department's local offices.

Mr. Portillo: The Department's local offices do not administer housing beneit, but certify to local authorities that a housing benefit claimant is in receipt of supplementary benefit.

No record is kept of the time taken to send certificates to the local authorities.

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will institute an inquiry into the series of decisions made by his Department's local offices in the Bristol area which led to Ms. Rachel Caine's housing benefit being suspended; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The handling of Rachel Caine's claim for benefit is currently being investigated. I will write to the hon. Member when all the facts of the case are known.

Welfare Milk

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he estimates would be the annual cost of continuing to provide welfare milk free to pregnant and breast-feeding women and children under five years of age from low income families, families on supplementary benefit, or family income supplement and handicapped school age children.

Mrs. Currie: We estimate that the annual cost of continuing to supply welfare milk to all the groups mentioned would be some £81 million for liquid milk and £15·5 million for dried baby milk.

West Midlands RHA (Capital Allocation)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what basis the decision was made to allocate £250,000 of the West Midlands' regional health authority's waiting list fund to BUPA; and if he will give instructions that money allocated to regional health authorities for the reduction in waiting lists should be spent only within the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: The additional £240,000 from the national waiting list fund has been allocated to the West Midlands regional health authority, not to BUPA. The BUPA role is to use its expertise in negotiating with private hospitals to advise the health authority on the private sector options available. We expect health authorities to take account of all sources of health care when looking for ways of improving waiting times for National Health Service patients.

Halifax (Cold Weather Payment)

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many households in Halifax received the extra payment for exceptionally cold weather during the winter of 1986-87.

Mr. Scott: The information is not available in the precise form requested. Information on the number of £5 weekly payments made, the total amount paid and number of claims refused for each local office in Great Britain has been placed in the Library. The great majority of successful claimants will have received £5 in respect of each of the weeks for which help was available.

High Rent Schemes

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the authorities which have (a) requested, and (b) received authorisations to operate a high rent area scheme: (i) for public authority and private tenants, (ii) for public authority tenants alone, (iii) for private tenants alone and (iv) for class authorisations; and if he will identify, in respect of class authorisations, the particular type of dwelling for which each authorisation was granted.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested for the period 1 December 1986 to 30 November 1987 is shown in the table and list. The class authorisations were granted for dwellings providing sheltered accommodation and, in the case of Coventry, also for accommodation for disabled people.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Apple Juice

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the level of consumption of apple juice within the United Kingdom for each of the last five years; and if he will indicate what proportion of this consumption is accounted for by United Kingdom domestic production of apple juice.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No precise information is available, but there is evidence that the United Kingdom market for apple juice has been expanding in recent years and may now amount to some £35 to 40 million. Domestic production probably accounts for no more than one fifth of this consumption and this represents, therefore, an important opportunity for United Kingdom growers.

Ms. Quin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will supply figures for the level of exports of apple juice from the United Kindom to (a) EEC and (b) non-EEC countries, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The figures requested are shown in the table.

Value of Exports of Apple Juice[1]

£ thousand

	[2]EC Countries	Non-EC Countries	Total
1982	295	317	612
1983	208	297	505
1984	299	279	578
1985	269	168	437
1986	564	137	701

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food to what extent his Department uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department does not use recycled paper for general stationery purposes for reasons of financial economy since it is significantly more expensive than paper of comparable quality made from new material. However, some other paper products supplied by Her Majesty's Stationery Office — for example, manilla, toilet tissue and sacks — contain varying but significant elements of recycled waste.

The Department's waste paper is usually collected and pulped by contractors, restricted or sensitive material being shredded under HMSO supervision. I understand that both these grades of waste go for recycling.

Storm Damage

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what measures he is taking to deal with tree damage resulting from the October hurricane.

Mr. MacGregor: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 30 November, at column 441, to my hon. Friend the Member for Ashford (Mr. Speed) which deals with the action we are taking in relation to shelter belts and orchard trees.

In addition, grants are available under the Forestry Commission's forestry grant scheme and broadleaved woodland grant scheme for the replacement of blown trees. Woodland owners can obtain information and advice on these schemes from the Commission's local offices.

The Forestry Commission has set up a forest windblown action committee which, within a few days of the storm, established a task force based at the Commission's research station near Farnham in Surrey. This task force has already provided help and advice to woodland owners and the public generally in response to hundreds of enquiries. Following completion of an assessment of the damage to woodlands in the affected areas, the action committee is now preparing guidance on the orderly marketing of blown trees, and woodland owners will be kept fully informed.

Wheat Exports

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will list the principal countries to which wheat grown in the United Kingdom has been exported since 1 August.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Total United Kingdom wheat exports between 1 August and 20 November were provisionally 550,713 tonnes. The principal destinations and quantities exported to them are set out below:

	Tonnes
Italy	169,300
Spain	104,589
West Germany	89,105
Poland	43,767
Soviet Union	37,864

Irradiation of Food

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to announce whether the Government intend to legalise irradiation as a method of food preservation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Government's consideration of the report of the Advisory Committee on Irradiated and Novel Foods and of the committee's further advice following representations on the original report is almost complete. An announcement will be make shortly.

Alcoholic Drinks (Packaging)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he plans to introduce legislation for strength labelling for pre-packaged alcoholic drinks.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I shall shortly be circulating draft regulations on the compulsory strength marking of alcoholic drinks to interested parties for comment. The legislation is due to be implemented by 1 May 1988.

Hedgerows

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) of 19 November, Official Report, column 1195, what is the value of grants given recently over any convenient period of time to people to look after their hedgerows.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 30 November 1987]: All environmentally sensitive area management agreements require scheme participants to maintain hedges and walls. It is not, however, possible to isolate payments for this particular item from that for all the other management prescriptions in the agreement which together qualify for the ESA payment.

In addition, grants of 60 per cent. and 30 per cent. for hedge planting and laying are available to farmers under the agriculture improvement scheme and other capital grant schemes. £889,000 was spent on these grants in England and Wales in 1986.

Intervention Costs

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the United Kingdom accepted responsibility for a share of the cost of storing food in intervention; what the current percentage is; and what has been the cost borne by the United Kingdom for such storage over the most recent annual period for which figures are available.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The Council agreed in April 1986 that, as an economy measure, payments to member states on account of their intervention operations would be reduced by one-quarter with effect from 1 December 1985. However, these payments are calculated on weighted average costs, not differentiated by member state, and therefore do not necessarily match actual costs.

The costs of intervention storage in the United Kingdom in 1986-87 and related receipts from the Community were:

£ million

	Actual storage costs	Community reimbursement	Percentage
Cereals	79·4	35·8	45
Butter	22·6	14·9	66
Skimmed milk powder	0·8	0·6	75
Beef	25·8	10·6	41
Total	128·6	61·9	48

The United Kingdom's share of the Community's stocks is lower than our share of contributions to the Community's budget. Therefore an increase in storage rates would not be in our interests since it would inflate our payments to the Community by more than our receipts from it.

Sewage Dumping

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply of 17 November, Official Report, column 527, if he will list the known sources of sewage dumping in the Bristol channel at a point some 11 miles north of Ilfracombe; and if he will list the times and places where scientific surveillance has been carried out by his Department.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Sewage sludge dumping in the Bristol channel at a point some 11 miles north of Ilfracombe is carried out by the Wessex water authority and the Welsh water authority. The site has been in use for many years and was approved by the Ministry under internationally agreed rules.

Scientific surveillance of the site was carried out by the Ministry in the following years since statutory controls were introduced in 1974: 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978, 1983, 1987.

The surveys extended up to 10 miles from the centre of the site. In addition, regular checks are made of the composition of the sludge dumped at sea—which is in liquid form — and of the operation of the dumping vessels, including inspection of the log books.

DEFENCE

Hepatitis B

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps are being taken to protect medical and para medical staff of the armed forces against contracting the Hepatitis B virus.

Mr. Freeman: Hepatitis B vaccination is already offered on request to health care workers who come into regular contact with blood and/or body fluids of their patients, in line with the current guidelines already issued by the DHSS.

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will introduce a policy of Hepatitis B vaccination for members of the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The MOD already has a policy for Hepatitis B vaccination for groups of members of the armed forces who are considered to be specifically at risk. These include personnel posted to high risk areas of the world where there is no regular Service medical support.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether further deployment of cruise missiles upon Salisbury plain will take place after the signing of the intermediate nuclear forces agreement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Our present expectation is that, following the signing of an INF agreement, off-base training exercises will continue until the missiles are withdrawn from their United Kingdom bases, but cruise missiles have never been deployed during such exercises.

F-15 Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States air force plans to deploy F-15 aircraft at RAF Bentwaters.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The United States Government have made no formal request to deploy United States Air Force F-15 aircraft at RAF Bentwaters.

F-18 Aircraft

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has any plans to purchase the F-18 aircraft.

Mr. Sainsbury: No.

British Telecom Research Laboratory

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what purposes his Department pays British Telecom Research Laboratory for the use of its Brightwell research centre.

Mr. Sainsbury: My Department pays British Telecom for the use of its research laboratory at Martlesham heath, near Brightwell, for work in connection with the Alvey advanced information technology project.

Anti-Gas Suits

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests are carried out on anti-gas suits.

Mr. Sainsbury: The protective features of chemical defence clothing are subjected to rigorous laboratory tests. Other aspects—for example, wear and tear, comfort—are tested in the same way as for other clothing.

Risk Reduction Centres

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to ensure that the United Kingdom is fully involved in the risk reduction centres which it is proposed to establish in the United States of America and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Nuclear risk reduction centres are being established in the United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics under a bilateral United States-Union of Soviet Socialist Republics agreement to which the United Kingdom is not a party. Their principal function is to exchange information and notifications as required under certain existing and possible future arms control and confidence-building agreements to which the United States and Union of Soviet Socialist Republics are party. We welcome the part they will play in further lessening the chances of conflict between the two signatories.

Export Orders

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance is available from his Department to help small firms to secure defence export orders.

Mr. Sainsbury: Through the Defence Export Services Organisation, the Ministry of Defence is able to provide advice to all United Kingdom companies—whether they be large or small—on defence market prospects on a world-wide, regional or country basis.

Further follow-up support and assistance to companies seeking to export their products and services may be provided in conjunction with our defence representatives overseas.

US Military Personnel

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list, for each year since 1979, the total numbers of United States military personnel at the military installations at (a) Thurso, (b) Mormond Hill, (c) Edzell, (d) Prestwick, (e) Machrihanish, (f) Holy Loch and (g) Glen Douglas;

(2) what was the total number of United States military personnel stationed in Scotland in each year since 1979;

(3) if he will list, for each year since 1979, the total numbers of United States civilian personnel at the military installations at: (a) Thurso, (b) Mormond Hill, (c) Edzell, (d) Prestwick, (e) Machrihanish, (f) Holy Loch and (g) Glen Douglas;

(4) if he will list, for each year since 1979, the total numbers of dependants of United States civilian and military personnel at the military installations at (a) Thurso, (b) Mormond Hill, (c) Edzell, (d) Prestwick, (e) Machrihanish, (f) Holy Loch and (g) Glen Douglas, who are resident in the area.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The numbers of United States service and civilian personnel assigned to and the numbers of dependants located at installations in Scotland and the total numbers of each category in Scotland, collated from information provided by various United States sources to the Ministry of Defence, in each year since 1979, are as follows:

RN Submarines (Nuclear Reactors)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce the location of the sites selected for disposal of the reactor components of dismantled Royal Navy nuclear-powered submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decisions have yet been taken on the preferred disposal route for reactors from decommissioned nuclear submarines.

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a further statement on his proposals for the disposal of 300 tonne reactor compartments from aging nuclear submarines.

Mr. Sainsbury: No decisions have yet been taken on the preferred disposal route for reactors from decommissioned nuclear submarines.

Army Training Area (Scotland)

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in identifying potential locations for a new 50,000 acre Army training area in Scotland.

Mr. Freeman: There is a significant shortfall of land for Army training within the United Kingdom. Our policy is to consider any suitable areas of land that may become available, in Scotland or elsewhere, particularly land near existing training areas. We expect to complete this year the purchase of some 3,600 acres to extend the existing training area at Garelochhead but no other specific areas in Scotland are under active consideration at present.

Exercise Purple Warrior

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what information he had on radioactivity levels in the exercise Purple Warrior area, prior to the exercise;

(2) whether he received any requests to postpone exercise Purple Warrior on the grounds of radioactivity levels in the exercise area; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether his Department received any communications prior to exercise Purple Warrior regarding levels of radioactivity in the area of the exercise; and if he will make a statement;

(4) how many explosions were caused during exercise Purple Warrior which occasioned significant earth movements.

Mr. Ian Stewart: On no occasion during the planning or course of exercise Purple Warrior were there any indications that the land used for exercise activity posed health risks to exercise participants due to danger from radioactivity levels in the exercise area. No such information was given to my Department prior to the exercise and no requests have been received from any source advising the postponement or cancellation of the exercise on these grounds. One letter from a member of the public has been received on the subject of levels of radioactivity in the exercise area. No explosions occasioning significant earth movement took place during the exercise.

Military Exercises (Shetland)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any military exercises by British or NATO forces are planned for Shetland in 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is not our general practice to provide details of future NATO or national exercise programmes, although notice is given of significant individual exercises at the appropriate time.

HMS Illustrious (Refit)

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his reply of 16 November, Official Report, column 459, what will be the employment implications for Devonport dockyard of his decision to delay the refit of HMS Illustrious until 1991.

Mr. Sainsbury: All matters concerning employment at Devonport dockyard are primarily for the commercial managers.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what margin of error is attached to his Department's estimate of size of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republic's chemical weapon stockpile.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1987]: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 9 November, at column 36.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to whether any North Altantic Treaty Organisation country is prepared to display publicly its chemical weapon munitions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The full range of current US Army CW munitions, including a mock-up of the 155mm binary projectile, was displayed in the course of a visit in November this year by a Soviet delegation to the US CW destruction facility at Tooele, Utah. Observers from a number of countries, including representatives of conference on disarmament members, also visited Tooele in 1983.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide his latest estimate of the United States' chemical weapons capability.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1987]: It would be inappropriate for me to comment in detail on the defence capabilities of an ally. As is well known, however, through publications such as the US Secretary of Defence's annual report to Congress, the US has a limited and aging retaliatory CW capability which they plan to modernise.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has as to whether the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics has added to its stockpile of chemical weapons since the size of its arsenal was first estimated as being 300,000 agent tonnes; and when this figure was first estimated by him.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1987]: Our assessment that the Soviet Union's stockpile of chemical weapons included some 300,000 tonnes of nerve agent alone was first made in the early 1970s. We now assess this to be a minimum figure.

Nerve Gas

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has of the extent to which the battlefield missile warheads designed for thickened VX nerve gas displayed at Shickany by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics were obsolete technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1987]: I refer the hon. Member to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence on 27 October 1987, at column 211. The weapons and equipment on display during the visit to Shikhany in October this year, including the warheads to which the hon. Member refers, generally dated from the 1950s, but we have no reason to believe that they are not still in service with Soviet forces.

Microbiology

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to the reply, Official Report, 13 November, column 335, what is his Department's assessment of the potential military implications of the Soviet Union's microbiological research capability, including the likely level of self-damage which would result from its use.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1987]: The Soviet Union's significant microbiological research programme is capable of exploitation as a source of biological warfare agents. It is unlikely that weapons of this kind would be developed without every precaution being taken to prevent or minimise self-damage in the event of their use.

Early Warning Systems

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to the reply, 13 November, Official Report, column 336, whether RAF Fylingdales is the only ballistic missile early warning system able to detect a ballistic missile attack targeted at the United Kingdom within the time required for the issuing of a national alert; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 30 November 1987]: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Kettering to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 24 March 1987, at column 136.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mineral Water and Milk

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Lord Privy Seal if he will give the prices of (i) each type and brand of mineral water on sale in the House (a) in 200 ml. bottles and (b) in one litre bottles; and (ii) milk in standard sizes of carton or bottle.

Mr. Wakeham: The price and capacity of each of the items are clearly displayed in accordance with recognised practices laid down by the Trading Standards Department.

Procedure Committee

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal, pursuant to his reply of 30 November, what consultations he will be holding before announcing his conclusions on ways of bringing recent Procedure Committee reports before the House; and if he will make a statement.

Mr Wakeham: I shall be consulting in the normal way through the usual channels, and, as required, with hon. Members particularly concerned. I have already informed the House, during Business Questions on 26 November 1987, at column 382-83, that I have been in consultation with the previous Chairman of the Select Committee on Procedure, my hon. Friend the Member for Honiton. If the hon. Gentleman wishes to let me know his views I shall be pleased to consider them.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal, pursuant to his answer of 30 November, which hon. Members, in addition to the usual channels, have been and will be consulted on the proposals to establish a Select Committee on Procedure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: A motion for the establishment of any Select Committee provides an opportunity for the House generally to express its view. In this instance, and in addition to consultations through the usual channels, I propose to consult, as necessary, with hon. Members having a particular concern in this matter.

Select Committee Reports

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord Privy Seal, pursuant to his reply of 30 November, how he gauges the general wish of the House when deciding whether to propose that a Select Committee report should be debated on a substantive motion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: In accordance with the normal processes of consultation which precede the announcement of the forthcoming business of the House.

Select Committees

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, if the Commission proposes to make any alterations in respect of its policy towards those aspects of financial control of Select Committee operations for which it has responsibility, as a result of the experience of eight years of Select Committees.

Mr. Beith: No. The Commission is, of course, prepared to consider any proposal for change which may be made by the Liaison Committee when it is appointed.

Mr. Allen: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) of 29 October, Official Report, column 357, how much has now been paid out in salaries and contributions to pensions etc., since June, for parliamentary Select Committee staff; what was the figure for the comparable period between June 1983 and the date of the eventual establishment of the Committees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: In 1983 the majority of departmental Select Committees were appointed on 9 December, and the remainder five days later. Most of the departmental Select Committees were appointed this Session on 2 December. For the purpose of this reply the dates shown above have been used for calculation. In both Sessions a number of non-departmental Select Committees were appointed earlier than these dates. The total cost of salaries at the mean of the salary scale from 1 June to 9 December 1983 of staff employed wholly or mainly in connection with the work of Select Committees, including London weighting, but excluding allowances, provision for superannuation and employers' national insurance contributions was £523,709. The equivalent total cost for 1987 was £647,995. Pensions and employers' national insurance contributions would add approximately 30 per cent. to these figures.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what change in real terms will take place in Welsh programmes for (i) housing, (ii) education, (iii) personal social services, (iv) roads and transport, and (v) all other services, as a result of his announcement in a written answer of 30 November to the hon. Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan) of his plans for local authority capital expenditure for 1988-89; and what are the equivalent percentage changes.

Mr. Peter Walker: Details of changes in gross provision in real terms between 1987-88 and 1988-89 for housing; education; personal social services; roads and transport and all other services are:

Gross provision at 1987-88[1] prices

(£ million)

Services	1987-88	1988-89	Percentage change
Housing	181·9	187·2	2·9
Education	43·0	45·7	6·3
Personal social services	7·2	7·2	—
Roads and transport	70·2	61·3	−12·7
All other services	107·8	98·9	−8·3
Total	410·1	400·3	−2·4

[1] Measured by use of the GDP deflator at market prices applicable at 24 September 1987.

Health and Personal Social Services

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has reached a decision about the allocation of resources for health and personal social services in Wales for 1988-89.

Mr. Peter Walker: Subject to parliamentary approval, I propose to allocate £1,173 million in 1988-89 to health and personal social services in Wales. This represents a cash increase of £73·9 million over provision in 1987-88.

It will provide £843·9 million for the hospital and community health services, an increase of £46 million over provision in 1987-88. I will announce allocations to individual health authorities as soon as possible. In addition to their allocations, health authorities will retain the benefit of cash released through cost-improvement programmes, income from charges for treatment of private patients, and receipts from the sale of surplus land and buildings.

Within these totals, investment of over £19 million will be devoted to special initiatives to promote the development of modern patterns of services for those with mental handicaps, elderly people and those suffering from mental illness. I expect this to be further enhanced by investment from the discretionary resources of health and social services authorities and by the reinvestment of resources released by improvements in efficiency in the running of existing services.

The funds I have announced will maintain a substantial contribution towards the costs in Wales of measures against AIDS. I am also making available from within these totals significant additional resources for the Welsh Health Promotion Authority.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the subjects discussed at the meeting in Johannesburg on 28 November between the Minister of State, the hon. Member for Wallasey (Mrs. Chalker), and Mr. Kobus Meiring, the South African Minister.

Mrs. Chalker: I took advantage of a transit stop in Johannesburg for a short talk with the South African Deputy Foreign Minister, Mr. Kobus Meiring. The conversation was mainly about Mozambique. I impressed on Mr. Meiring Her Majesty's Government's support for normalising relations between South Africa and Mozambique and desire to develop economic co-operation. I also made it clear that we wanted to see any problems between South Africa and other countries in the region solved by peaceful means.

United Arab Emirates

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting between his colleague, the hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) and the United Arab Emirates Foreign Minister Rashid Abdullah in Abu Dhabi on 24 November, with particular regard to developments in the Gulf region.

Mr. Mellor: I welcomed the opportunity to meet Mr. Abdullah during my first visit to the United Arab Emirates. We had a useful discussion on bilateral matters and exchanged views on the Iran-Iraq conflict and the efforts being made to bring the conflict to an early end.

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the meeting between his colleague, the Minister of State, the hon. and learned Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) and the deputy commander-in-chief of the United Arab Emirates armed forces, Sheikh Khalifah Bin Zayid, on 24 November with particular regard to bilateral relations and establishing peace between Iran and Iraq.

Mr. Mellor: During my visit to Abu Dhabi I met Sheikh Khalifah Bin Zayid who, in the absence of his father from the United Arab Emirates, was acting ruler of Abu Dhabi. The visit promoted the excellent relations which exist between the United Kingdom and the United Arab Emirates. Our discussions covered a wide range of issues of mutual interest including the Iran-Iraq conflict.

Humanitarian Conference

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards the humanitarian conference, as suggested by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Mellor: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Bournemouth East (Mr. Atkinson) on 18 November. The Soviet proposal is merely one of a large number of proposals under discussion at the Vienna CSCE follow-up meeting. Our approach to it is governed by the need for major improvements in Soviet implementation of Helsinki commitments.

Mr. J. A. Smith

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why the British high commission in Zimbabwe failed to answer four letters sent between October 1986 and October 1987 regarding medical forms required in connection with the disablement pension of Mr. J. A. Smith of Newmarket.

Mrs. Chalker: The British high commission in Zimbabwe received only two such letters between these dates. The first, dated 14 February 1987, was answered on 5 March. The action taken on an undated letter received in late September was reported to my hon. Friend on 19 November by the high commissioner.

Human Rights (USSR)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on violations of human rights in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics over the past 12 months.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend the the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth) on 24 July. We monitor the human rights situation in the Soviet Union closely and regularly raise these questions, including individual cases, with the Soviet authorities. Human rights will be on the agenda of the discussions to be held during Mr. Gorbachev's brief visit to the United Kingdom on 7 December.

International Literacy Year

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what part his Department will play in the United Nations International Literacy Year of 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: On 20 November we supported the resolution in the third committee of the United Nations General Assembly which formally proclaimed 1990 as the International Literacy Year. In deciding how to allocate our bilateral aid we shall continue to attach considerable importance to the vital role that education can play in the development of aid-recipient countries. We shall also continue to make clear in the appropriate form that we support the international community's efforts to eradicate illiteracy worldwide.

United Nations (Financial Crisis)

Sir Peter Blaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he proposes to respond to the appeal by the Secretary-General of the United Nations in the context of the United Nations financial crisis.

Mr. Eggar: The United Kingdom has always paid its assessed contribution to the regular budget of the United Nations promptly and in full. We share the Secretary-General's concern that, by mid-November, as many as 93 member states had failed to meet their financial obligations. We have exceptionally agreed to advance $9 million against our assessed contribution for 1988.

VAT

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which goods and services are zero-rated with respect to value added tax in the individual member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

PRIME MINISTER

Official Histories

Mr. George: To ask the Prime Minister (1) how many official histories have been commissioned by the Government since 1957; what are their titles; when each was commenced; when each was completed; who were the authors; and what was the cost of each;

(2) how many Government-sponsored official histories are currently in preparation; when they were commissioned; who are the authors; what are the estimated dates of completion; and what is the estimated cost in each case.

The Prime Minister: The original programme of official histories commissioned by the War Cabinet covered the military and civil history of the second world war. The final volume in this series "History of the War in the Mediterranean and the Middle East", volume VI, part 3 by General Sir William Jackson, CBE, KCB, MC, will be published during 1988.

Subsequently two further groups of wartime histories were commissioned:

Title	Author	Commissioned	Completion/publication
SOE in France	M. R. D. Foot	1960	1966
SOE in the Far East[1]	C. Cruickshank	1980	1983

SOE in Greece[1]	Richard Clogg	1984	Estimated completion 1988
SOE in the Low Countries[1]	M. R. D. Foot	1987	Estimated completion 1989

Vol. II	Professor Sir Harry Hinsley and others	1971	1981
Vol. III (Part I)	Professor Sir Harry Hinsley and others	1971	1984

[1] Main preparation and all publication costs met by commercial publishers.
[2] Estimated completion date for this series is 1989.

On 9 March 1966 the then Prime Minister announced that the official programme would be extended to include selected periods or episodes of peace time history. The following were commissioned:

Title	Author	Commissioned	Completion/publication
Environmental Planning	Professor J. B. Cullingworth	1969	Published in 4 vols. between 1975-81
Nationalisation of British Industry	Professor Sir Norman Chester	1969	1975
Colonial Development[1]	D. J. Morgan	1969	Published in 5 vols. 1980
External Economic Policy[2]	Professor L. S. Pressnell	1974	Vol. I published 1987. Vol. II estimated date of completion 1990
Defence Organisation since 1945[2]	Professor D. Cameron Watt	1974	Estimated date of completion 1990

Title	Author	Commissioned	Completion/publication
British Contribution to the Korean Conflict[2]	General Sir Anthony Farrar-Hockley	1978	Estimated completion date 1988
The Health Service since the War[2]	Dr. Charles Webster	1978	Vol. I due to be published 1988. Estimated completion of vol. II 1992/3

[1] Main preparation and all publication costs met by commercial publishers.
[2] Currently in preparation.

The cost of preparing official histories is borne on the votes of several Government Departments, mainly the Cabinet Office; the cost of printing, publishing and distribution falls to HMSO (revenue from sales goes towards offsetting these costs). It is not possible now without disproportionate cost to itemise the cost of individual histories.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister what are the total costs incurred since 1979 in establishing, maintaining and supervising cruise missile facilities and associated works at both Greenham Common and Molesworth under the following headings (a) by NATO, (b) by the Ministry of Defence, identifying separately the Royal Air Force (c) by any other Departments of state and (d) by local authorities; and if he will also indicate what moneys have been paid or are owed to Her Majesty's Government by the United States air force for the provision of such facilities.

The Prime Minister: The latest cost estimate for constructing the two cruise missile facilities in the United Kingdom is as follows:

Contributors	£ million
NATO	59·0
Ministry of Defence (MOD)[1]	36·9
United States Air Force (USAF)	78·0
Other United Kingdom Government Departments	0·2
Total	174·1

[1] Costs specifically to the RAF are not readily identifiable.

The cost of security and supervision at both bases since 1979 at current prices is estimated to be £24·9 million. The MOD share of this total was £15·6 million and the USAF made a contribution of £3·4 million. The share of other Government Departments was £0·2 million. Additional policing costs borne by police authorities amounted to £5·7 million.

Maintenance and the provision of base support are the primary responsibility of the USAF.

Questions (Arms Control)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will specify those matters relating to arms control and disarmament upon which (a) the Ministry of Defence and (b) the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, respectively, answer parliamentary questions; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: In general all questions on arms control and disarmament matters should be addressed to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

Mr. Mojadidi

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to meet Mr. Mojadidi, the Afghan guerrilla leader currently visiting Britain; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to do so. My noble Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office met Prof. Mojadidi, a leading member of the Afghan resistance alliance, on 1 December and reaffirmed our admiration for the efforts of the Afghan people to liberate their country.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Shipbuilding Intervention Fund

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the administration of assistance from the shipbuilding intervention fund for smaller ships.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The intensity of international competition generally diminishes as the size and cost of ships falls. It is therefore sensible to make assistance from the finite resources of the intervention fund variable according to the cost of ships. I realise that yards would appreciate some clear guidance about the support they might reasonably expect from the fund before they bid for orders. I am therefore informing the yards that, in future, offers of assistance from the intervention fund for smaller ships will normally be limited within a sliding ceiling related to the cost of build. Until further notice, the normal maximum for ships costing £10 million to build will be 20 per cent. This will fall by three quarters of one percentage point for each £1 million reduction in the cost of build below £10 million. Within the ceiling, offers will continue to be negotiated as the minimum necessary to secure orders for United Kingdom yards, always provided the rules of the sixth directive on aid to shipbuilding are met. I will look sympathetically at cases for which applications have already been received provided they are likely to result in early orders. This approach will apply both to the public and private sectors.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Prisoners

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners detained at the pleasure of the Secretary of State are currently in Northern Ireland prisons who have now served 10 years, 11 years, 12 years, 13 years or more.

Mr. Stanley: There are at present 37 prisoners in Northern Ireland serving sentences of detention during the pleasure of the Secretary of State. Of these four have served 10 years, seven have served 11 years, 10 have served 12 years and five have served 13 years or more. None has served longer than 14 years.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many prisoners were detained at the Secretary of State's pleasure, and how many released, in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Stanley: In 1985, one prisoner was sentenced to detention during the pleasure of the Secretary of State and seven prisoners were released; in 1986 there were no prisoners sentenced in this way and 10 were released; so far in 1987, two prisoners have been sentenced and 10 released.

Home Help Service

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many past recipients of home help services have been denied home help services in the past year; and how many of these have been informed of their social security entitlement to benefit for this purpose.

Mr. Needham: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. I am, however, aware that the Department of Health and Social Services issued new guidelines earlier this year on entitlement to the home help service. These are being issued in some units of management to reassess individual's need for home help to ensure that the continuing high volume of services is targeted at those most in need.

Suckler Cows

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to increase the suckler cow premium grant to £50 per cow.

Mr. Viggers: The current rate of suckler cow premium, £33·40 per cow, is the maximum rate payable under EC legislation. Review of the rate of premium will no doubt form an important part of the review of the EC beef support measures scheduled to take place during 1988.

Cytology

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cytology laboratories are available in Northern Ireland for processing cervical smear tests; how many such tests have been processed during the last three years for which figures are available; how many weeks it takes to complete processing of these tests; and what backlog currently exists.

Mr. Needham: There are currently four laboratories in Northern Ireland processing cervical smears. The detailed information is set out in the following table. The fall in the number of smears processed in 1985 was due to a higher than usual rate of resignation and sickness amongst trained staff. It takes at least one year fully to train replacements.

	1984	1985	1986	Current backlog
Total smears processed	73,555	64,736	70,122	7,224

Note: Average processing time is 7·7 weeks.

[1] Diagnostic and repeat smears are given priority and are processed normally within two weeks.

Cervical Cancer

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many women in Northern Ireland have died from cervical cancer in the last five years for which figures are available, expressed per thousand women.

Mr. Needham: The information for the last five years for which figures are available is as follows:—

Deaths from Cervical Cancer

Year	Total number of deaths	Rate per 1,000 women
1982	48	0·06
1983	39	0·05
1984	30	0·04
1985	27	0·03
1986	31	0·04

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of women in Northern Ireland who obtain a cervical smear test; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: The number of women in Northern Ireland who obtain a cervical smear test is not available. A central computerised call and recall system will be introduced next year to ensure that all women aged 20-65 will be called for screening at five-yearly intervals. Once this system is operational it will be possible to determine with accuracy the number of women having cervical smear tests. Laboratory facilities are also being expanded and decentralised to meet the demands which it is anticipated will be generated by the computerised call and recall system.

Cytopathology

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of cytopathology records in Northern Ireland are held on (a) computer and (b) manual records; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Cytopathology laboratories process a variety of test types including cervical smears. The Belfast city hospital cytopathology laboratory has a computer system for managing cervical smear tests. Other cytopathology tests at the Belfast city hospital laboratory and all tests at other cytopathology laboratories are processed manually.

The analysis for cervical smear tests for 1986 is given in the table below :

Cervical Smear Tests—Manual and Computer Processed—1986

	Number	Percentage
Manual	15,914	23
Computer	54,208	77
TOTAL	70,122	100

There are computer records for 11,000 non-negative cervical cytology cases identified in the Belfast city hospital laboratory since 1965. Statistics of the number of cases held on manual records systems are not recorded centrally.

ENVIRONMENT

Rateable Value

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 24 November, he will list those statutory references to rateable value not primarily related to local government finance which have been identified to date.

Mr. Howard: The main statutory references to rateable value appear in the Housing Act 1985; the Rent Act 1977: the Rent (Agriculture) Act 1976; the Land Drainage act 1976; the Leasehold Reform Act 1967; and the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954. I have today written to my right hon. Friend enclosing detailed lists of the relevant references.

Council House Sales

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Salisbury dated 14 October 1987 on the use of receipts from the sale of council houses by Salisbury district council.

Mr. Waldegrave: I have written to my hon. Friend today.

World Student Games

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will follow up the support his Department has given Sheffield in its bid for the 1991 world student games with the necessary backing to ensure the games' successful staging now that they have been awarded to the city.

Mr. Moynihan: I congratulate Sheffield on the success of its bid to host the 1991 world student games. I know that the city council see this as an opportunity to help them pursue its strategy for regenerating Sheffield. The Government have already recognised the needs of Sheffield by a 37 per cent. increase in urban programme funding for 1987-88. In recent years the urban programme has assisted sports and related projects including Woodburn athletics centre, East End park and Waltheof campus.

I wish the city well in its efforts to raise private finance. It is essential for it to do so. As the hon. Gentleman is aware, I have made it clear to Sheffield from the beginning that the Department can neither provide any additional finance or financial guarantee nor relax capital expenditure controls to provide direct assistance for the games.

Land for Energy Development

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the land for energy development report, begun in 1983 by his Department and the Department of the Environment, is to be published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The land for energy study was completed in 1984. There are no plans to publish the group's report.

Local Authorities (Economic Development)

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to carry out a review of the economic development activities of local authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 3 December 1987]: My right hon. Friend is considering the proper role of local authorities economic development activities, and the question of their statutory powers in the context of the Government's response to the Widdicombe report.

ENERGY

Coal Industry (Deficit Grant)

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, what is his current estimate of the amount of deficit grant payable to the coal industry in 1987-88, particularly in respect of redundancy payments; and what are the outturn figures for 1986-87.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Within the revised external financing limit of £842 million for 1987-88, payment of deficit grant to British Coal is currently forecast at £383 million, of which £214 million relates to deficits of previous years. This is subject to parliamentary approval of an order under section 2 of the Coal Industry Act 1987 and of a Supplementary Estimate later this financial year. It is not possible to identify how much of the deficit is due to redundancy costs or to any other item.

Deficit grant payments during 1986-87 totalled £546 million. For that year redundancy payments to most mineworkers were financed by the redundant mineworkers payments scheme; RMPS payments in 1986-87 totalled £610 million.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Value Added Tax

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether Post Office Counters Ltd. is registered for value-added tax purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: Post Office Counters Ltd is a member of the Post Office plc VAT group registration.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to whether the Data Protection Registrar has used his powers under section 36(5) of the Data Protection Act to report on how the use of personal data on the Government data network will affect his functions of supervising the workings of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Brooke: The registrar referred to the Government data network in his third annual report to Parliament, welcoming the approach made to him and offering to comment on proposals at a general level. As my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary said in his answer to the hon. Member on 28 October at column 333, I discussed the Government data network with the registrar on 8 September, and close contact is being maintained with him at official level.

Personal Pensions

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what rate of employer contribution the Government treat as appropriate for public service employees who choose personal pensions, once these are available.

Mr. Brooke: The Social Security Act 1986 gives all employees a new right from 1 July 1988 to opt for personal pensions as an alternative to the state earnings-related scheme or an employer's scheme. The Act requires employers to make an employer contribution for personal pension optants, as part of their national insurance contributions, at a rate no less than the contracted-out rebate, which currently stands at about 4 per cent. of the individual's salary. The Government consider that an employer's contribution at that level would be appropriate for public service employees opting for personal pensions.

Oil Refining (Tax Treatment)

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will make a statement about the treatment under the PRT nomination scheme of oil taken to refining.

Mr. Lilley: Paragraph 5, schedule 8 Finance (No. 2) Act 1987 if triggered by Treasury order, would impose an additional PRT charge on certain transactions. The fear has been expressed that this additional PRT charge could apply to an integrated group's transfers of its own production to refining even where these had not been undertaken in order to minimise PRT. Although concerned to ensure that transfers to refining are not used to undermine the PRT nomination scheme, the Government recognise that there are many such transfers which are not driven by an attempt to reduce tax liabilities. The Government have therefore authorised discussions between the Inland Revenue and the industry to see whether changes are needed to the scheme.

The Government appreciate that, until these conditions are complete, there will inevitably be an element of uncertainty attaching to the tax consequences of current company decisions. We therefore propose, in the event of the Finance (No. 2) Act provisions being triggered while consultations are still continuing, to use the power in paragraph 5 to make transitional arrangements to protect current appropriations and intergroup transfers to refining. These would ensure that the additional PRT charge would not apply to any oil a group takes to refining before the date of the Treasury order itself.

Civil Servants (Industrial Action)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many working days were lost in the (a) Treasury, (b) Inland Revenue and (c) Customs and Excise due to industrial action by civil servants in the period 1976-86.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 2 December 1987]: Records are not available for the period 1976-80. The details for 1981-86 are as follows:

Man days lost due to industrial action

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Further Education Lecturers

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has as to the effect on young people and on the morale of further education lecturers caused by the continuing dispute over pay and conditions of employment; if the assistance of the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service has been sought; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is regrettable that the National Association of Teachers in Further and Higher Education is continuing to promote industrial action by its members. The view of the local authority employers is that this action has not yet caused significant disruption to the effective provision of the further education service, and so the interests of students have not been seriously damaged.

The local authority employers have made a pay offer worth 9·3 per cent. in a full year in return for which they are seeking agreement on more cost-effective working arrangements, the need for which was accepted by the lecturers in the context of the 1985 settlement but on which no progress has so far been made. The assistance of the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service has not been sought.

I hope that a settlement will be reached soon in the best interests of the students and of industry and commerce as well as of the lecturers themselves.

Primary and Secondary Schools

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how he intends to inform parents, teachers, school governors and others about proposed changes in primary and secondary schools.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The volume of responses to the consultative documents issued this summer on various aspects of the proposed reforms in education indicates the great interest felt by many sections of the community in the Government's proposals for education reform. I am publishing this week a booklet to inform public debate during Parliament's consideration of the Education Reform Bill. The booklet is being sent to the clerk of the governing body and the head teacher of every maintained school in England. Copies of the booklet have been placed in the Library of the House.

Education Act (Report)

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes to reply to the report of the Select Committee on Education, Science and the Arts, entitled "Special Educational Needs, Implementation of the Education Act" 1981 HC 201/I.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have today sent the Government response to the report to the Clerk to the Committee. I have placed a copy in the Library.

City Technology College, Nottingham

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if, in the light of opposition from the Nottingham county council education committee, he still plans to go ahead with Government funding for a city technology college in Nottingham.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Nottingham CTC trust is planning to open a city technology college in September 1989. It has the support of the Government. The trust will continue to exchange information with the Nottinghamshire LEA.

Teacher Training

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the standard of teacher-training available to university lecturers and teachers.

Mr. Jackson: As part of the programme of action to improve efficiency in universities agreed with my right hon. Friend in November 1986, the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals published in April a code of practice on the important matter of academic staff training. The committee intends to survey universities' implementation of the code by mid-1988 and publish its findings.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service (Leicestershire)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what were the proposed staffing levels for solicitors and barristers when the Crown Prosecution Service was established in Leicestershire; and what are the present levels.

The Attorney-General: The proposed staffing level for solicitors and barristers when the Crown Prosecution Service was established in Leicestershire was 17. At present there are 22 posts for lawyers in Leicestershire of which nine were filled as at 30 November 1987.

Legal Aid (Leicester)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how much legal aid money has been paid to private solicitors to cover waiting time at court in each year since 1980 in the legal aid area covering Leicester.

The Attorney-General: Information about the cost to legal aid of waiting time in the Crown court has been collected only since April 1986. From then until March 1987, £24,000 was paid to solicitors in respect of bills determined by the Crown court at Leicester. That amount includes the cost of time spent waiting at prisons to see clients in conference. Information about the cost of waiting time in magistrates' courts is not at present readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate expense.

DEFENCE

Cadet Forces

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the number of young people who are members of the cadet forces in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Freeman: The figures for 31 March 1987, the latest complete set of strength figures for the cadet movement, are:

	Number
Sea Cadet Corps	15,426
Sea Scouts	4,977
Portsmouth Area Volunteer Cadet Corps	1,189
Army Cadet Force	43,617
Air Training Corps	38,180
Combined Cadet Force	42,318
Total number of Cadets	145,707

Service Pensioners' Widows

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has any proposals to enable the widows of service pensioners, who married or remarried after their retirement before 5 April 1978, to be able to benefit from the armed forces pension scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: There are no proposals to extend the existing provisions of the armed forces pension scheme as they relate to post-retirement marriages. They are consistent with those of other public service schemes.

Service Recruits (Easington)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service men and women have joined Her Majesty's forces from the Easington constituency in the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: Details of the numbers of entrants to Her Majesty's forces are not maintained on the basis of addresses of domicile within parliamentary constituencies. It is therefore assumed that entrants to the services from the Easington constituency would form part of the recruitment through the Royal Navy careers information offices at Hartlepool and Sunderland, Army careers information offices at Darlington, Durham, Hartlepool, Middlesbrough and Sunderland and Royal Air Force careers information offices at Darlington, Middlesbrough and Sunderland. The total numbers for these offices in the last three financial years are as follows:

	Numbers
1984-85	1,200
1985-86	1,227
1986-87	1,249

These numbers exclude all officer entrants, Army-rejoined reservists and, prior to 1986-87, service women entrants to the Queen Alexandra's royal naval nursing service, all of whom are recruited centrally.

Weather Forecasts (West Wales)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 13 November, Official Report column 334, what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the weather forecasts provided for the broadcasting services in respect of west Wales; and if he will review the geographical boundaries at present in use for these forecasts.

Mr. Sainsbury: A check is kept on the accuracy of the weather forecasts broadcast each day on BBC Radio 4 at 07.55 (for the day ahead) and at 17.55 (for the following day). For Wales, the average percentage correct over the past five years has been 83. The length, format and style of presentation are determined by the broadcasting authorities.

RAF Molesworth

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether construction work at RAF Molesworth will continue after the signing of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The operational facilities at RAF Molesworth are essentially complete, and the remaining defence works are scheduled to be finished by the end of January 1988.

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if, further to his answer of 25 November, the United Kingdom nuclear requirements envisage a 12-warhead Trident missile.

Mr. Sainsbury: Information on warhead and missile numbers is classified.

Hong Kong

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the purpose of the current level of military commitment in Hong Kong; and if he will reduce it.

Mr. Ian Stewart: British forces are stationed in Hong Kong to assist in maintaining stability through support as appropriate to the needs of defence and internal security of the territory. It is our intention to maintain the garrison at a strength sufficient to discharge this responsibility, up to the date of transfer of sovereignty of Hong Kong to the People's Republic of China on 1 July 1997.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will consider reducing the proportion of the expenditure on British forces in Hong Kong met from Hong Kong sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The current defence costs agreement between the British and Hong Kong Governments, which covers the apportionment of the costs of British forces in Hong Kong between the two Governments, is due to expire on 31 March 1988. Negotiations are under way between representatives of the two Governments about arrangements to apply after that date.

Armed Forces (Joint Procurement)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is satisfied with progress towards joint European procurement for the armed forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Joint procurement arrangements with our European allies, as well as with the United States of America and Canada, have served us well. A number of the equipments already used by our forces stem from them, and new ones are under study or development. International collaboration will be of increasing importance for the future, and we are working actively with our allies both to increase the number of joint projects and to explore new arrangements which offer the prospect of mutual benefit and value for money.

Historic Buildings, Woolwich

Mr. John Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the historic buildings in the Woolwich area which are to be considered by his Department's historic military buildings committee, indicating when he expects decisions on their future to be announced.

Mr. Freeman: The historic military buildings committee will be visiting the Woolwich area in January and is expected to look at the following historic buildings:

Royal Arsenal West

Middle Gate House
Royal Carriage Factory
Shell Foundry Gate House
Armstrong Gun Factory
Grand Store Complex
Academy Building
Pedimental Building, New Laboratory Square
Riverside Guard Houses
Royal Brass Foundry
Royal Laboratory Pavilions
Dial Arch
Main Guard House
Verbruggen's House

Woolwich Garrison

Connaught Barracks

The future location of the main organisation occupying the site, the directorate general of quality assurance, is currently under review and until this is settled it is difficult to take decisions about the future of the historic buildings on the site.

Falkland Islands (Postal Service)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost to public funds of the family-only air-letters available for the service personnel in the Falkland Islands and on Ascension Island; and if he will list any proposals he has for any changes in this service in the future.

Mr. Freeman: The cost to public funds of the free air-letter service to and from the Falklands and Ascension Islands was approximately £173,000 in 1986-87. All allowances and concessions are subject to periodic review. No decision has been taken to change this concession.

Low-flying Aircraft

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many Royal Air Force police, expressed as full-time equivalent staff, are currently assigned to covert field monitoring of low-flying aircraft; and what changes have taken place in these staffing levels since 1977;

(2) when the practice of covert monitoring of low flying by Royal Air Force police was introduced;

(3) if he will make a statement on the methods used by Royal Air Force police involved in covert monitoring of low-flying activity to assess height and speed of low-flying aircraft;

(4) if he will list the locations and dates of periods of covert monitoring of low-flying operations conducted by Royal Air Force police since 1974;

(5) on how many occasions since 1974 disciplinary proceedings have been instituted against pilots found to have been infringing low-flying regulations by Royal Air Force police involved in covert monitoring in low-flying areas, but where no complaints were received from the public.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Research Assistants

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House if he will give a breakdown, by party, of the numbers and percentages of hon. and right hon. Members who currently employ three or more research assistants.

Mr. Wakeham: The information is as follows:

	Percentages
12 Conservatives	1·8
13 Labour	2·0
8 Liberal	1·2
1 Plaid Cymru	0·15
1 Social Democrat	0·15

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House if he will give a breakdown, by party, of the numbers and percentages of hon. and right hon. Members who are currently allocated three or more desks for use by secretaries and research assistants.

Mr. Wakeham: No right hon. or hon. Member has been allocated more than one desk for use by a secretary or research assistant in any of the secretaries' typing rooms. However, the use of desks within rooms allocated to right hon. and hon. Members is a matter for them.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House if he will list the total number of research assistants' security passes which have been issued in each of the last five years.

Mr. Wakeham: I regret this information is not available.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House how many inquiries from individuals, other than Members, have been dealt with by the Library in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what was the estimated cost of dealing with these inquiries in each of those years.

Mr. Wakeham: A detailed breakdown of inquiries received from Members' secretaries and research assistants on behalf of their Members, as distinct from inquiries placed direct by Members, and the estimated cost of dealing with those inquiries, is not available. However, in 1980 the Library carried out a four-week survey of recorded research inquiries, which showed that out of a total of 576,152 such inquiries were received via Members' personal staff, or 26·4 per cent. of the total. Similarly, during the month of November 1987, 704 reference inquiries were received via Members' personal staff by the main Library's reference services section out of a total of 2,612 such inquiries, or 27 per cent. of the total.

Inquiries answered each year in writing by the research division for peers and other non-Members' excluding Members' personal staff were as follows:

Year	Inquiries	Percentage of total research inquiries
1986	101	1·3
1985	120	1·6
1984	79	1·1
1983	112	1·7
1982	98	1·5

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House (1) if he will make it his policy to seek to limit to one the numbers of research assistants employed by a Member who may be issued with a pass to the Palace of Westminster at any given time; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will, in the interests of security, seek to make it a requirement for the issuing of a security pass for the Palace of Westminster that the holder has been resident in the United Kingdom for the previous six months; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he will seek to limit research assistants' access to the main Parliament building to holders of 9B passes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: Pursuant to the Resolution of the House of 10 November, control over access to the precincts of the House is to be considered by the Services Committee; and I am sure that the question of research assistants and the issue of security passes will be included in that examination.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House whether he has received any representations from staff and officers of the House concerning the numbers of research assistants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: No. But any such representations, submitted by officers and staff of the House, would of course be given consideration by the Services Committee, along with any other representations received.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House how many individuals currently holding research assistants' passes have held a security pass for three or more consecutive years.

Mr. Wakeham: This information can only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House how many: (i) Liberal, (ii) SDP, (iii) Nationalist party hon. and right hon. Members currently employ (a) one research assistant, (b) two research assistants, (c) three research assistants, (d) four research assistants, (e) five research assistants, (f) six research assistants and (g) seven or more research assistants.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested is as follows:

(i) Liberals
(a) 1 Research Assistant — 4 Members
(b) 2 Research Assistants — 1 Member
(c) 3 Research Assistants — 1 Member
(d) 4 Research Assistants — 1 Member
(e) 5 Research Assistants — 2 Members
(f) 6 Research Assistants — 1 Member
(g) 7 or more Research Assistants — 3 Members

(ii) Social Democrats
(a) 1 Research Assistant — 3 Members
(c) 3 Research Assistants — 1 Member
(b), (d), (e), (f) and (g) are not applicable

(iii) Nationalist Parties
(a) 1 Research Assistant — 7 Members
(b) 2 Research Assistants — 2 Members
(c), (d), (e), (f) and (g) are not applicable

Photocopiers

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House what is his estimate of how many copies have been made on photocopiers in the House in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and what has been the total cost of supplying, maintaining and running the photocopying machines in each of those years.

Mr. John Wakeham: Figures are not held for the total number of copies made in the House. Based on the expenditure figures given in the table and the average cost of copies as billed through HMSO an assessment of the number of copies made is:

Year	Number
1982-83	10,000,000
1983-84	11,000,000
1984-85	14,000,000
1985-86	16,000,000
1986-87	16,500,000

Photocopier hire charges, excluding VAT, which include engineering, maintenance and consumables other than paper, for the last five years are as follows:

Year	£
1982-83	128,000
1983-84	157,000
1984-85	197,000
1985-86	224,000
1986-87	233,000

Norman Shaw North Library

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House what has been the cost of running the Norman Shaw North branch library in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Wakeham: Staffing for the branch library is provided on a rota basis by the public information office of the Library's parliamentary division. The cost of staffing can therefore only be stated approximately. The figures, which do not include national insurance contributions or other employers' overheads, are as follows:

Year	Estimated Cost £
1987	47,000
1986	45,000
1985	35,000
1984	33,000
1983	32,000

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Leader of the House how many inquiries have been dealt with by the Norman Shaw North branch library from individuals, other than Members, in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Wakeham: The number of inquiries from Members' personal staff dealt with in the branch library over the last five years is as follows:

Year	Telephoned inquiries	Inquiries lodged in person	Total
1987[1]	7,391	5,110	12,501
1986	9,152	6,642	15,794
1985	8,650	6,716	15,366
1984	8,840	8,464	17,304
1983	6,019	6,680	12,699

[1] To 30 November.

1983 and 1987 were General Election years, during which no Members' personal staff were allowed to use the branch library for a one-month period. The figures in the table exclude the inquiries from the general public which are handled by the public information office.

TRANSPORT

Public Transport, London (Financial Support)

Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements are proposed for the financial support of public transport in London following the reform of local government finance.

Mr. David Mitchell: At present I am empowered by section 13 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984 to recover up to two thirds of my annual grant to London Regional Transport by means of a levy on rating authorities in London. With the replacement of the present rating system by improved arrangements for local taxation, this levy will no longer be appropriate and I propose then to abolish it. LRT's rapidly reducing need for external support will be found entirely from the Exchequer. As a consequence, there will be no need to allow for public transport support in calculating the revenue support grant to authorities' collection funds in London. London community charge payers will therefore pay the same for spending at need as charge payers elsewhere, even though they will not have to contribute directly to the financing of public transport. These arrangements are intended to provide that London charge payers will not be unfairly advantaged when the financing of public transport in London becomes wholly a national responsibility.

Breath Test Equipment

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy towards the sale in the United Kingdom of breath test equipment designed to enable drivers to test their own alcohol/breath levels.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We discourage the use of devices marketed for self-testing alcohol levels. As this month's edition of "Which" makes clear, they can give results which are open to misinterpretation. Breath tests taken before all the alcohol consumed has been absorbed into the blood stream could mislead drivers into thinking that they are below the legal limit, when further absorption would put them above it. Such devices can also encourage drivers to drink up to the legal limit.

The only safe answer is never to mix drinking and driving. We will continue to press that message home.

Greater Manchester (Buses)

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has concerning the number of buses operating in Greater Manchester (a) before deregulation and (b) after deregulation of the service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Detailed information on the number of buses operating in Greater Manchester is not available although it is known that there has been a substantial increase. Bus mileage has gone up from 64·7 million miles before deregulation to 83·9 million miles in November 1987 (an increase of nearly 30 per cent.). Most of this is accounted for by new minibus services introduced in the competitive market created by deregulation.

Airline Competition

Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to increase competition between airlines on all international routes out of Heathrow, Gatwick and Manchester airports.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the White Paper on airline competition policy (Cmnd. 9366). Over the past three years numerous steps have been taken to increase competition at all United Kingdom airports in accordance with that policy.

Aircraft Noise (London)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to seek to eliminate aircraft noise in west London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Elimination of noise would require silent aircraft or the closure of Heathrow airport. The world's leading international airport is of vital importance to the nation's prosperity. It provides direct employment for 47,000 people and generates some 25,000 additional jobs in the immediate area.

The Government are taking steps to reduce noise disturbance in surrounding areas. The ban of non noise-certificated jets on the UK register from 1 January 1986 has been successful in environmental terms. It will be followed by a similar ban of foreign-registered noisy jets from the beginning of next year.

We are now turning our attention to the next generation of jets, the so-called chapter 2 types. With our partners in Europe, we are examining ways in which they too might be gradually phased out, in favour of modern chapter 3 aircraft which make very much less noise than their predecessors.

The Secretary of State has designated Heathrow airport for noise regulation purposes. The Government have placed restrictions on the number and type of aircraft movements at specified hours at night. Immediately after take-off, aircraft are required to keep to a small number of defined routes, chosen to avoid as far as possible, major built-up areas. They are also required to comply with maximum noise limits, by day and by night.

The present restrictions on aircraft movements at night apply until March 1988. We have recently consulted my hon. Friend, and other hon. Members whose constituencies are near the airport, on our proposals for night restrictions thereafter. We propose to reduce the quota for night flights, limiting the number of flights in future to about the present level. We propose to ban departures in the small hours by all but the quiter modern aircraft.

Regular monitoring of the daytime noise climate around Heathrow has shown that the area affected by noise disturbance has been considerably reduced in recent years. The area in excess of 35 NNI (noise and number index) was reduced from 573 sq. kilometres in 1980 to 378 sq. kilometres in 1986.

Heathrow Airport Limited already monitors the noise of each departing aircraft. BAA plc is working with the Department in the development of a new system for monitoring noise and track-keeping in the vicinity of the airport. When this is ready we shall consider new noise limits which could take into account the relatively low noise levels of modern aircraft.

Railways Inspectorate

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many vacancies currently there are in the railways inspectorate; for how long each has remained unfulfilled; what is the current establishment of the railways inspectorate; how this has altered in each year since 1979; and what plans he has for the future establishment of the inspectorate.

Mr. David Mitchell: The establishment of the railway inspectorate in 1979 and now (1987) is shown in the table:

	1979	1987
Chief Inspecting Officer of Railways	1	1
Inspecting Officer of Railways	4	4
Assistant Inspecting Officer of Railways	2	4
Principal Railway Employment Inspector	1	3
Railway Employment Inspector	14	12
Administrative Staff	15	15
Total	37	39

Two railway employment inspector posts were upgraded to principal in 1981. Between 1985 and 1987 an additional inspecting officer post was held supernumerary to the establishment. In 1987 the supernumerary post was abolished and two additional assistant inspecting officer posts created.

Between 1979 and 1987 there have been up to two posts in the administrative staff vacant for short periods. The only other shortfall has occurred in the railway employment inspector posts where the vacancies at the end of each calendar year have been:

Year end vacancies

	Number
Up to 1983	Nil
1984	1
1985	1
1986	5
1987	5

The inspectorate's future establishment will be considered in the light of the recent departmental review.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the regularity of the inspection programme of the railways inspectorate.

Mr. David Mitchell: Inspections carried out by the railways inspectorate cover a variety of subjects. Inspections of new railways, for example, Docklands, of important alterations to existing ones, for example, electrification, and of new or altered level crossings are carried out under the railway and level crossing legislation. These inspections are planned up to a year ahead and respond to the new works submitted to the Department for inspection as required by the legislation. The same remarks apply to the inspections carried out by the inspectorate in Northern Ireland, Hong Kong and Singapore under agency agreements. Other inspections are carried out by the inspectorate's railway employment inspectors in furtherance of the agency agreement between the Department and the Health and Safety Executive. These are planned ahead and are based on a system of priorities, with emphasis placed on areas of identified hazard. During 1986, 36 new works inspections were carried out in the United Kingdom plus a small number in Hong Kong and Singapore, together with 101 inspections of modernised level crossings, and 1,067 inspections of railway work sites and installations were undertaken by railway employment inspectors. The work load this year is similar.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the regularity of the training programme for newly recruited railway inspectors.

Mr. David Mitchell: In recent years newly recruited inspectors have all had professional railway qualifications and experience. On recruitment they receive standard initial training in their duties as inspectors and thereafter receive continuation training relative to their individual needs. All inspectors are expected to keep themselves up-to-date by reading professional journals and attending and contributing to meetings of learned societies. The inspectorate arranges regular training conferences.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the level of expenditure on training in the railways inspectorate in 1986-87; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: In the financial year 1986-87 the money spent by the railway inspectorate on training fees or equivalent was £6,698. This sum does not include any salary costs for those under training.

London Underground (Train Doors)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects London Underground to report on the problem of train doors opening on the London Underground whilst trains are moving; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 30 November 1987. No time has been set for the report referred to in that reply, although London Underground Limited has undertaken to produce it as soon as possible.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints he has received since 1 January 1987 about aircraft noise at Gatwick.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: 1,947 between 1 January and 30 November.

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the results of his Department's monitoring of aircraft noise at night at Gatwick airport in 1985 and 1986.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The table shows the number of infringements of the night noise limit of 102 perceived noise decibels for subsonic jets on take-off from Gatwick. The noise is monitored by Gatwick Airport Limited at four noise monitoring points. Information on infringements is given to the airport consultative committee and to the airlines.

	Number of infringements	Percentage of total jet departures
1985	39	1·07
1986	11	0·26

The Department has also commissioned a survey of night noise in the vicinity of the airport year by year, starting with summer 1987. The results of the first survey will not be ready for some time. We shall make the results of this and future surveys available in the form of noise contours, as explained in our consultation paper on proposals for night flights at Gatwick from 1 April 1988.

Airspace (London)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why the London terminal manoeuvring area has not included the operations of civil airlines operating out of Stolport in east London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible for air traffic management through the National Air Traffic Services (NATS). The authority has told us that NATS is not at present able to introduce procedures to include safely London City airport traffic within the London terminal manoeuvring area (LTMA). Moreover, it could not yet be handled there without an unacceptable effect on Gatwick and Heathrow traffic. This was made clear during the planning of London City airport. It is unlikely that NATS will be able to implement the necessary changes so as to include London City aircraft within the London terminal manoeuvring area before the end of 1988.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what statistics are kept of air movements by all flying equipment within the London terminal manoeuvring area;

(2) what is the current capacity of the London terminal manoeuvring area; and what is the maximum capacity for aircraft movements.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible, through the National Air Traffic Services (NATS) for all aspects of airspace management. The authority has told us that the practical capacity of the London terminal maneouvring area is 130 aircraft movements per hour and the theoretical capacity is 147 movements per hour.

During 1986 the number of aircraft movements within the LTMA were as follows:

	Number
North west sector	122,954
North east sector	147,184
South west sector	178,198
South east sector	146,071

These figures cannot be aggregated to form a total movement rate because aircraft may fly in more than one sector.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from civil airline operators on the use of uncontrolled airspace by flying equipment over the London area in the last three months.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: None.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he has any plans to seek to alter the reporting procedures for near misses or other incidents involving civil airline aircraft and other flying equipment in the Stolport area of London;

(2) if he will call for a report from the Civil Aviation Authority into each of the near misses and other incidents reported in the Stolport area by pilots and others.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible, through the National Air Traffic Services (NATS) for all aspect of airspace management. All airmiss reports in United Kingdom airspace are investigated initially by the joint airmiss section of NATS. They are then examined by the joint airmiss working group, which is comprised of representatives of civil and military aviation bodies. In order to ensure full and complete reporting by all concerned, the results of an airmiss investigation are not made public. There are no plans to alter airmiss or other incident reporting procedures in the United Kingdom.

One airmiss report has been filed by the pilot of a London City airport aircraft and is currently under investigation by NATS.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement as to the powers and responsibilities of Civil Aviation Authority aircraft controllers in southern England in relation to the operations of civil airlines flying in uncontrolled airspace in the vicinity of Stolport;

(2) what information he has on procedures for notifying civil airline pilots in uncontrolled airspace in the vicinity of Stolport of the presence of other flying equipment including hangliders, parachutists, microlights, helicopters, balloons and private aircraft.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible, through the National Air Traffic Services, for all aspects of airspace management. The Authority has told us that the air traffic services and procedures available for pilots of aircraft flying in uncontrolled airspace are set out in the United Kingdom air pilot. These include radar and non-radar services. Responsibility for the decision whether or not any particular service is required rests with the aircraft pilot.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement as to the responsibilities of the civil airlines for aircraft control movements in uncontrolled airspace in the vicinity of Stolport in east London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A civil airline operator's responsibilities are set out in part V of the Air Navigation Order 1985—S.I. 1985/1643. It is the responsibility of the aircraft commander to satisfy himself before the aircraft takes off that the flight can safely be made, taking into account the latest information available as to the route and aerodrome to be used, the weather reports and forecasts available, and any alternative course of action which can be adopted in case the flight cannot be completed as planned.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to on how many occasions, since the opening of Stolport, radar equipment at Heathrow, Gatwick or West Drayton has failed to function in tracking the flightpath of civil aircraft flying under 2,500 ft within 30 miles of Stolport in east London.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible, through the National Air Traffic Services, for all aspects of airspace management. The authority has told us that the Thames radar service specifically provided for London City airport aircraft has been fully available. A complementary lower air space radar service provided by Gatwick airport for aircraft in uncontrolled air space has been available 66 per cent. of the time. Use of the service is not mandatory and it is provided on an on-request basis, subject to the capacity of the air traffic unit.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether he will institute an inquiry into the dangers that arise from flying in uncontrolled air space over London;

(2) what is his policy for the future control of air movements in uncontrolled air space over the London area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. The Civil Aviation Authority is responsible, through the National Air Traffic Services, for all aspects of airspace management. Any decision to institute an inquiry into flying in uncontrolled airspace over London is a matter solely for the authority.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether flights by non-passenger military aircraft are permitted in uncontrolled airspace over the east London area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Yes, in accordance with the Rules of the Air and Air Traffic Control Regulations 1985—S.I. 1985/1714—and military flying regulations—joint service publication 318.

SCOTLAND

Shipbuilding Industry (Redundancies)

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the total number of redundancies in the shipbuilding industry in Strathclyde during the period from 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1986.

Mr. Lang: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The number of redundancies involving 10 or more workers which were confirmed to the Manpower Services Commission as due to occur in the shipbuilding industry in Strathclyde in the period from 1 January 1979 to 31 December 1986 totalled 11,912.

Abortions

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list, by each district health authority, the cost of abortions in money and as a percentage of all health services expenditure, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not available centrally. Health board accounts do not show separately the amounts spent on abortion.

Cytopathology

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of cytopathology records in Scotland are held on (a) computer and (b) manual records; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information requested is not centrally available.

Fluoridation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the amount of funds allocated in 1986 and 1987 for the purposes of water fluoridation; and how much will be allocated in 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There are currently no water fluoridation schemes in operation in Scotland and it has not been the practice in the past to allocate funds to health boards specifically for this purpose. In general therefore the position is that health boards should expect to meet the cost of any future fluoridation schemes from within their normal allocations, but in the light of what is said in the Government's White Paper "Promoting Better Health", I shall consider whether there is any scope for giving them further support.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each postal code area and local authority ward in East Lothian district the number of people who were unemployed in October 1987, October 1986 and October 1983.

Mr. Lang: Postcode sectors do not necessarily match district boundaries. The number of unemployed claimants within postcode sectors in East Lothian district in October 1983, October 1986 and October 1987 is shown in table 1. The number of unemployed claimants within each ward in East Lothian district in October 1983, 1986 and 1987 is shown in table 2. Figures for October 1983 are not comparable with those for October 1986 and October 1987 because of changes in the coverage of the count.

This information is available in the Library.

Hospitals

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the estimated number of patients on in-patient waiting lists by speciality, in Edinburgh.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not centrally available. Information relating to Lothian health board is, however, published in table 6.5 of "Scottish Health Statistics 1986-87", a copy of which is available in the Library.

Doctors' Lists

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many rural practices will be affected by the decision to increase the list size to qualify for full basic practice allowance.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The White Paper "Promoting Better Health" stated that the Government intend to tighten the qualifications for basic practice allowance by increasing the minimum list size and the average number of hours spent per week in surgery sessions. We intend to discuss the new criteria with the medical profession.

Community Service

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the funding of community service orders.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend is prepared in principle to offer local authorities 100 per cent. funding for community service orders with effect from 1 April 1989.

Water Supplies

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will report the progress made in dealing with public drinking water supplies in Scotland which do not yet meet the standard for lead set in the European Directive relating to the quality of drinking water; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish water authorities — the regional and islands councils — are responsible for implementing EC directive 80/778/EEC in relation to public water supplies as part of their statutory duty to provide a supply of wholesome water for domestic purposes.

At the Government's request, the water authorities carried out surveys to identify those supplies which did not meet the directive's standard for lead concentrations at the consumer's tap. The surveys revealed that, when the directive came into force in July 1985, 103 water supplies in Scotland did not comply with the directive. The Government therefore applied to the European Commission for a delay in complying with the lead standard under article 20 of the directive in respect of those supplies and others in the United Kingdom.

The Scottish water authorities are making good progress: 18 of the 103 supplies have already been improved to the directive's standard and at least 47 more will comply by the end of 1989. By that stage, only about 15 per cent. of the Scottish population will be living in supply areas which do not comply fully with the directive: and the proportion who actually receive drinking water with lead levels in excess of the directive's standard will be very much less than this—probably around 3 per cent. These remaining supplies, which serve small remote rural areas, will take a little longer to improve. My Department is pursuing, in discussions with all the water authorities concerned, the aim of reducing lead concentrations to the directive's requirements by the end of 1989 or soon thereafter.

Lennox Castle Hospital

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland by how many the numbers of long stay mental handicap patients at Lennox Castle hospital have fallen since1979; and how much of this fall can be attributed to (a) the death of patients, (b) the non-admission of new patients and (c) planned resettlement of patients in the community.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: [holding answer 24 November 1987]: The specific information requested by the hon. Member is not available centrally, but the following tables show residents in and discharges into the community at 31 December of each year from Lennox Castle.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Stealing from Shops

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many men and how many women, respectively, have been charged with stealing from shops during each of the past 10 years for which records are available; how many and what percentage of such persons have pleaded guilty and not guilty, respectively; how many and what percentage have been found guilty; and how many and what percentage of the trials of such persons who have been found guilty and not guilty, respectively, were before magistrates courts and on indictment, respectively.

Mr. Hurd: Information on the numbers found guilty or acquitted for offences of theft from shops are published annually in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables", copies of which are in the Library, in table S1.1(A) of volume 1 for proceedings at magistrates' courts, and table S2.1(A), for proceedings at the Crown Court, under offence classification 46. Reliable information on pleas is not available.

Carlisle

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Cumbria as to how many crimes have been reported in the Carlisle city sub-division for each year since 1977.

Mr. Hurd: The information that is collected centrally is of numbers of notifiable offences recorded in each police force area. These are published each year in Command Paper "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"—tables 2.4 to 2.7 of the issue for 1986—(Cm. 233), a copy of which is in the Library.

Speeding

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions for speeding there have been of drivers of (a) coaches, (b) lorries and (c) private cars in each of the last five years.

Mr. Hurd: No reliable information is available for specific types of vehicle. The available information relates to findings of guilt for all speed limit offences and is published annually in the Home Office statistical bulletin "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales" — table 7 of issue 36/87. Further details are published in supplementary tables to this bulletin—table 5 of the issue for 1985. Copies of both publications are in the Library; the issue for 1986 will be published very shortly. In order to reduce the burden on the police of statistical collection, as from 1 January 1987 these further details ceased to be collected.

Lindholme Prison

Mr. Michael Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to implement the August 1987 review of manpower at Her Majesty's prison Lindholme; and if he will make it his policy that no increase in the number of prisoners at Her Majesty's prison Lindholme will take place until after that date.

Mr. Hurd: This review is part of the process of implementing fresh start. Consultation is still in hand, and implementation will take place as soon as agreement is reached. We can make no commitment as to the number of prisoners accommodated, which will depend in part on changes in the prison population.

Firearms

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many shotgun licences and firearm certificates were issued within the Easington constituency within the last three years.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information available centrally on the issue of shotgun and firearm certificates relates to individual police force areas. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile) on 5 November at columns 827-8.

DNA Testing

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what funds his Department has provided for the work of Professor Alec Jeffreys at Leicester university on DNA testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Department has not funded Professor Jeffreys for his work on DNA profiling. We have, however, agreed to pay him £2,500 for his assistance with pilot trials involving DNA testing in immigration cases.

Entry Clearance

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many refusals of entry clearance there have been for each year since 1983 in each of the five countries for which visa requirements apply; what is the current average delay between refusal of an application and the decision on an appeal against refusal; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The information available centrally is given in the table. Information on entry clearance applications in Nigeria in 1983-86 is not available. Nor is information available on the delay between a refusal of entry clearance and the appeal being listed for hearing.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Social Fund

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the proposed operation and role of the housing benefit scheme when the new social fund regulations come into effect in April 1988.

Mr. Portillo: For information on the operation and role of the housing benefit scheme, I refer the hon. Member to the speech of my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and the Disabled during the debate in the House on the Housing Benefit regulations on 19 November at columns 1241-50. In general the reformed housing benefit scheme will not be affected by the operation of the social fund. Housing benefit will continue to be a passport to social fund funeral payments and local authorities will therefore be asked to confirm in a small percentage of cases that housing benefit is in payment.

NHS Pay

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the amount of expenditure to be met by (a) the Government and (b) the National Health Service as a result of the national pay awards for National Health Service workers which have been agreed for the current financial year.

Mr. Newton: For the review body awards for staff working in the hospital and community health services the information requested is as follows:

	£ million (England)
Estimated cost	488
Cost covered by allocations to health authorities	464
Difference to be met by authorities from their cost improvement programmes	24

Pay increases of around 5 per cent. have been agreed for a number of non-review body staff groups. Others have yet to settle. Authorities will be expected to meet the cost of these awards from the resources available to them, including resources released by their cost-improvement programmes.

St. Ann's Hospital, Tottenham

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of nursing posts at St. Ann's hospital in Tottenham are currently unfilled; and if he will make a statement about what the Government are doing to resolve the shortage of nurses at St. Ann's and other hospitals which are similarly affected.

Mrs. Currie: The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of Haringey health authority for the local information he seeks.

This Government established the independent review body for nursing and midwifery staff and have implemented all four reports of that body. Since 1979, nurses' pay has increased by about 30 per cent. in real terms.

Health authorities, which are responsible for recruitment, have been asked to improve recruitment and retention by increasing male recruitment, making greater efforts to recruit mature entrants, organise "back to nursing" campaigns including refresher training, establish nurse banks and give more opportunities for flexible working arrangements, part-time working and job sharing. They have also been asked to make the best use of available staff by better matching of staff to work loads and better deployment, more use of performance indicators, review their skill mix, provide better support for trained staff and more use of five-day wards.

Current central activities include consultations on new nurse training proposals (Project 2000) of which one aim is to improve recruitment and retention; a feasibility study on the use of YTS as a means of training support workers in nursing and other professions and possibly provide for some an avenue to nurse training; a joint NHS/DHSS working group on equal opportunities for women which is aiming to find better ways of retaining existing staff; the nursing and midwifery staff negotiating council are reviewing the nursing clinical grading structure with the aim of making a more flexible structure which can recognise individual skills and responsibility; the regional health authority chairmen have commissioned a study to examine factors influencing recruitment and retention and suggest improvements; and a career development project group has been set up to examine the scope for more attractive career goals for nurses.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement about the proposal to close two operating theatres at St. Ann's hospital, Tottenham; when the theatres were opened; and at what cost.

Mrs. Currie: This is a local matter and the hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of Haringey health authority for the information he seeks.

North East Thames Region (Expenditure)

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the 1986-87 half-yearly overspend-underspend position of the North East Thames region, broken down into districts.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not held centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of North East Thames regional health authority.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received a copy of the statement issued by all chairmen of the district health authorities in the North East Thames regional health authority on 11 November on the regional health authority's financial difficulties and the need for extra funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We have received a copy of the statement from the chairman of North East Thames regional health authority. We expect to meet a group of chairmen from the region soon when this will be one of the subjects on the agenda.

Population

Sir William Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in order of percentage change the increase or decrease in population in the United Kingdom between 1957 and 1981, broken down by counties, as they existed prior to 1 April 1972 where appropriate, with the relevant percentage changes for the United Kingdom, England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland, respectively.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at a disproportionate cost. However, census figures for 1961 and 1981 for counties within England and Wales and for the regions and Island areas of Scotland provide a good approximation. These figures are given in the table.

NHS Consultants (Merit Awards)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of merit awards to National Health Service consultants in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Darlington (Mr. Fallon) on 24 November at column 163.

Family Planning

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a table showing the number of patients registered with general practitioners for National Health Service contraceptive services in England in 1986;

(2) how many general practitioners are registered to provide a National Health Service family planning service to their patients in England; and how many premises are involved.

Mr. Newton: In 1986 approximately 2·5 million women received contraceptive services from general medical practitioners in England. At 1 October 1986, 23,928 general medical practitioners in England under contract with family practitioner committees provided contraceptive services.

I regret that information as to how many premises were involved is not held centrally.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the total cost of the general practitioner provision for National Health Service family planning services to patients for 1986 in England.

Mr. Newton: The total cost of family planning services provided by general practitioners in England is estimated to have been some £48 million in 1986-87. This includes fees paid to general practitioners and the cost of drugs, but excludes practice expenses directly reimbursed to general practitioners.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will publish a table showing the fees claimed per patient per year from the National Health Service centrally by general practitioners for providing each of the available contraceptive methods;

(2) if the fees claimed from the National Health Service centrally by general practitioners for providing each of the available contraceptive methods per patient per year are standard for all areas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Newton: The fees payable to general medical practitioners for the provision of contraceptive services under the National Health Service are published in the "Statement of Fees and Allowances Payable to General Medical Practitioners in England and Wales". Copies of the statement are held in the Library.

The fees represent payment for services provided over the course of 12 months. The intrauterine device fee (£33.15) is payable where the doctor inserts the device and gives any necessary after care. The ordinary fee (£9.90) is payable for the provision of all other types of contraceptive services including any necessary after care. These fees are standard for all areas in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for each year since 1979 showing the comparative cost of providing family planning services by general practitioners and family planning clinics per patient per year.

Mr. Tony Newton: Figures are not available to allow costs to be given on a comparable basis.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish figures for each year since 1979 showing the number of people receiving family planning services from (a) general practitioners and (b) family planning clinics.

Mr. Newton: The figures are contained in the table which relates to England only.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to refrain from imposing charges for family planning services: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Peckham (Ms. Harman) on 26 October at column 157.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why family planning services were not included in the White Paper on primary health care (Cm. 249); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no proposals for changes related specifically to family planning, though our plans to improve the responsiveness of primary care provision generally to consumer needs should benefit those using family planning services provided by general practitioners.

Rating Reform

Sir Barney Hayhoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects (a) the necessary operational details of the proposed community charge rebate scheme to be available and (b) sufficient data to be available centrally to set up the appropriate models to determine the parameters of the poverty traps which would be created by the proposed community charge; and whether he will specify the main aspects of the proposed community charge rebate scheme which have yet to be decided.

Mr. Scott: We hope to publish draft community charge rebate regulations in the spring or early summer of 1988, following consultation with the local authority associations. Information on the effects of the rebate scheme will not be available until further decisions have been made.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of homosexuals presenting themselves for treatment at sexually transmitted disease clinics in London is found to be HIV positive.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects his Department to be in a position to make estimates of the number of AIDS infections in the United Kingdom in 1991.

Mr. Newton: A group of experts is currently looking at the monitoring and surveillance of HIV infection and AIDS and will be making recommendations on how present systems can be improved. It is hoped that the improvements will produce better data which can be used as a basis for forecasting numbers of future cases.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the relative concentration of the HIV virus in the various body fluids of infected persons.

Mr. Newton: HIV can be detected in some infected individuals in a variety of body fluids. Precise quantification is not possible, although it is apparent that even in the same individual the reliability with which virus can be isolated can vary from time to time. Those fluids which commonly contain enough virus to transmit infection are blood, semen and vaginal fluid.

Waste Paper

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services to what extent his Departmemt uses recycled paper or provides paper for recycling.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available. Paper products are procured through Her Majesty's Stationery Office which obtains the most suitable materials at the best possible price. If it is appropriate to purchase items with a recycled paper content Her Majesty's Stationery Office will do so on the Department's behalf. Some paper waste is disposed of to contractors who make material available for recycling, but figures are not available.

Hexachlorophene

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the maximum permitted concentration of 2,3,6,7—tetrachloro-dibenzo dioxin in the antiseptic hexachlorophene.

Mr. Newton: The licensing authority for medicines has undertakings that hexachlorophane used in the preparation of medicinal products contains no more than 15 parts per 1,000 million of 2,3,6,7 tetrachloro-dibenzo dioxin.

Drugs

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the annual National Health Service net expenditure on drugs; what proportion is estimated to be attributable to the drugs manufacturing industry; and if he will make a statememt.

Mr. Newton: Expenditure on drugs in the National Health Service in England in 1986-87, including fees and remuneration, was £1,957 million. It is not possible to apportion this amount among remuneration, the manufacturing and the distribution industries.

Benefit Adjudication Officers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many supplementary benefit adjudication officers have less than six months experience of adjudication work; how many are also section supervisors; and if he will provide this information separately for each of the former metropolitan county areas and for Greater London.

Mr. Portillo: Statistics are not collected on the information requested. It is regretted therefore that the information could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer of 19 November, what were the total numbers of disallowances of unemployment benefit made by the adjudication officers at each benefit office in Newcastle upon Tyne for each year since 1980, broken down by reasons for disallowance that permit reconciliation with the summaries in the annual analysis of decisions of adjudication officers.

Mr. Portillo: Adjudication work for unemployment benefit in Newcastle upon Tyne and district is centralised and covers six offices in Newcastle and eight outside. The available information for this group which cannot be broken down further is:

Abortions

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list and name the number of doctors who performed abortions at 18 weeks and after in licensed clinics and nursing homes in 1986 according to the following bands, performed (a) one to five abortions, (b) five to 50 abortions, (c) 50 to 100 abortions and (d) over 100 abortions.

Mr. Newton: No. Information on individual doctors is not released for reasons of maintaining confidentiality, and is not recorded on the abortion computer files.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list, by each district health authority, the cost of abortions in money and as a percentage of all Health Service expenditure, in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: The accounts submitted by the health authorities to the Department do not show separately the amount spent on abortion and I regret therefore that I am unable to provide the information requested.

NHS (Administrative Staff)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many administrative staff are currently employed in the Health Service; and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Norfolk, North (Mr. Howell) on 30 November at column 443.

Cytopathology

The Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of cytopathology records in England are held on (a) computer and (b) manual records; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that the information requested is not available centrally.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will show, for the 12-month period to 30 June, the decisions of adjudication officers on doubtful fresh claims, renewal claims and reviewed claims for unemployment benefit giving the numbers allowed, disallowed, referred to a local tribunal, revised in favour of claimants, revised adversely to claimants and not revised in the following categories of questions: (a) employed to full normal extent, (b) engaged in employment, (c) availability, (d) restricted availability, (e) leaving voluntarily, (f) for misconduct, (g) neglecting to avail of employment, (h) refusal of employment, (i) refusal or premature termination of training, (j) refusal to carry out written recommendations, and (k) Restart.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is shown in the table:

Fluoridation

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, what funds were allocated for the purposes of water fluoridation in 1986 and 1987; and how much will be allocated for 1988 and 1989.

Mrs. Currie: The central funds allocated to English health authorities to assist in the implementation of water fluoridation schemes amounted to £262,000 in 1986-87 and £433,000 in 1987-88. As stated in the Government's White Paper "Promoting Better Health" it is intended to increase further the amount of money to fund schemes in the future. The allocations for the financial year 1988-89 will be made shortly.

Heart Surgery (Children)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his reply of Monday 30 November, to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East, he will make it his practice to collect information on the number of children waiting for heart surgery.

Mr. Newton: Waiting list statistics are assembled at three-monthly intervals, and relate to the number of patients waiting on a particular day. For relatively small groups, where the position could fluctuate greatly from day to day, such figures would mean little. I therefore think it is right to continue to collect figures centrally by specialty, not by individual condition.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, if he will give (a) the number of supplementary benefit recipients and (b) the number of elderly people in receipt of supplementary pensions from each of the local offices servicing Edinburgh for each year since 1979.

Mr. Portillo: The table sets out the information requested for each of the five local offices which serve Edinburgh.

Swiss Cheese

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much Vacherin Mont D'Or cheese which he believes may be contaminated has been imported into the United Kingdom from Switzerland.

Mrs. Currie: The Swiss "Vacherin Mont D'Or" is a seasonally produced cheese (October to December) and, I understand, is imported into this country in small quantities. It is estimated that no more than 30 or 40 kgs of this season's production reached this country before the Swiss authorities stopped production and export. It was because of the uncertainty over the volume of sales in this country that we decided to issue a general warning to the public on 25 November concerning listeriosis.

NHS Employees (Press Statements)

Mr. Denis Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the freedom with which National Health Service employees may speak to the press on matters of patient care; and if he will dismiss any health authority chairman found to have threatened employees with dismissal if they speak to the press on matters relating to patient care.

Mr. Newton: Unless specifically forbidden by their employment contract or terms and conditions of service, National Health Service employees are free to speak to the press on matters concerning the National Health Service including matters of patient care in general. Medical information relating to an individual patient should not be disclosed without the patient's consent. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind perhaps he would care to write to me about it.

Dependants (Benefit)

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what he has done to ensure that arrears are paid to those people affected by the commissioner's decision which held that an increase of social security benefit can be paid in respect of a non-working dependant with an occupational pension.

Mr. Scott: We have carefully considered the implications of the commissioner's decision which brought to light inconsistencies in the provisions in the Social Security Act 1975 governing dependency increases paid with social security benefits and subject to an earnings rule. We propose to remove these inconsistencies by clause 9 in the Social Security Bill now before the House. Where records of previous claims can be readily identified and show that a dependency increase was wrongly disallowed the appropriate arrears will be paid. We estimate however that we shall be unable to trace about 1,000 wrongly decided claims. The Department will be writing in the next few days to those who represent the interests of occupational pensioners with a request that those affected are alerted to their possible entitlement to a payment of arrears.

Mersey Regional Health Authority

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the level of funding to the Mersey regional health authority in each of the last eight years expressing year-on-year changes as a percentage in both cash and real terms.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 December 1987]: The table shows the percentage growth in gross revenue expenditure between 1978-79 and 1986-87 — the latest year for which outturn data are available.

Health Districts (Funding)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the level of funding for (a) the Crewe, (b) the Chester and (c) the Halton health districts in each of the last eight years, expressing year-on-year changes as a percentage in both cash and real terms.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 December 1987]: The table shows the percentage growth in gross revenue expenditure between 1982-83 and 1986-87 the latest year for which outturn data are available. District level information is not available prior to 1982-83.

Health Districts (Medical Staff)

Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) doctors and (b) nurses were employed in (i) the Crewe, (ii) the Chester and (iii) the Halton health districts in each of the last eight years.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 December 1987]: Such information as is available centrally is shown in the table. I am sorry that I am unable to provide all the information requested.

Figures for doctors and dentists in Crewe, Chester and Halton health authorities, which formed part of the Cheshire area health authority before the NHS reorganisation, are not centrally available prior to 1982.

From 1982 we have figures for all doctors and dentists employed in the district health authorities except for senior registrars and consultants, whose contracts are held by the regional health authority. The district health authority where those staff work cannot be identified centrally. There will therefore be more doctors and dentists working in the Crewe, Chester and Halton health authorities than are accounted for in the table.

Figures for non-medical staff are not available prior to 1982 on a comparable basis with those for later years due to the effects of the 1982 National Health Service reorganisation in the Cheshire area health authority.

Mr. Cope: Since the enterprise allowance scheme began in 1982, more than 300,000 unemployed people have been helped to start their own business. During that period the number of self-employed people has risen from 2·2 million to 2·7 million. The scheme has contributed substantially both to the fall in unemployment and the increase in self-employment.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment of the entrants to the community programme in the 12 months to (i) April 1986, (ii) July 1986, (iii) October 1986, (iv) December 1986, (v) April 1987, (vi) July 1987, and (vii) October 1987, what proportions were (a) full-time places, (b) men, (c) single, (d) aged over 25 years, (e) unemployed for over 12 months and (f) former benefit claimants.

Mr. Michael Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will, using figures from the 1987 labour force survey, publish a table for each Great Britain region and Greater London, by male and female and claimant status, the numbers of people who had looked for a job in the four-week reference period and were available to start work within two weeks;

(2) if he will show, from the 1987 labour force survey, by region including Greater London and by male and female, the numbers of people who were (a) without jobs and who looked for work in the four weeks before their labour force survey interview and were available to start work within two weeks, who wanted full-time jobs, the number who wanted part-time jobs and the number who had no preference, (b) unemployed according to the standard labour force survey definition who were looking for full-time jobs and the number looking for part-time jobs and the number who had no preference, (c) in part-time jobs who were looking for a different job with longer hours or looking for an additional job, (d) looking for a different job with shorter hours, (e) claimants not unemployed by the definition using broad International Labour Organisation guidelines on the grounds that they were employed, and (f) claimants not unemployed by the conventional labour force survey definition on the grounds that they were employed;

Mr. Cope: Results of the 1987 labour force survey are not yet available.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in each parliamentary constituency at the most recently available date, how many unemployed claimants were (a) aged under 25 years, (b) aged under 25 years and unemployed for 12 months or more, and (c) of all ages and unemployed for 12 months or more.

Mr. Cope: I am sending the hon. Member the requested information, which is also available in the Library. The table shows the numbers of unemployed claimants aged under 25, those aged under 25 and unemployed for 12 months or more and those of all ages who have been unemployed for 12 months or more, at 8 October 1987.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will show by region, including Greater London, and by male and female, the number of self-employed people in June 1979, June 1983, June 1984, June 1985, June 1986 and June 1987, and by similar categories, the number of people in the working population in June 1979, June 1983, June 1984, June 1985, June 1986 and June 1987.

Special Employment Measures

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the latest estimated percentage register effects on the unemployment count of each of the following measures (i) the community programme, (ii) the enterprise allowance scheme, (iii) job release scheme and job splitting scheme, (vi) the new job training scheme, (v) the young workers' scheme and (vi) community industry.

Mr. Cope: The effect on the unemployment count of employment measures cannot be calculated precisely. The people engaged in (ii), (iii) and (v) in the question are all engaged in ordinary work in the mainstream of the economy and have left the unemployment count in the same way as other unemployed people who find a job. The community programme (i) also provides real work for long-term unemployed people. Taking account of this and other factors the best estimates we have of the percentage effect of the employment measures listed is as follows:

Estimated effect on unemployment count (% of those on Schemes)

Employment Measure	Per cent
Community Programme	93
Enterprise Allowance Scheme	32
Job Release Scheme	88
Jobshare[1]	95
New Workers Scheme[2]	28
Community Industry	97

[1] The Jobsplitting Scheme was relaunched as Jobshare on 1 April 1987.
[2] The New Workers Scheme replaced the Young Workers Scheme in April 1986.

The job training scheme is a training programme and not an employment measure.

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the currently estimated gross and net costs for each financial year since 1982-83 for the following special employment measures (i) the community programme (ii) the enterprise allowance scheme, (iii) the young workers' scheme, (iv) community industry, (v) the job release scheme and (vi) the job splitting scheme.

Mr. Cope: The gross and net costs are:

Mr. Cope: The number of people interviewed under the restart programme, and the numbers referred to the various menu items by region are shown in the table. We do not know how many of those selected for interview are ultimately placed in a job or in a training scheme or programme.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Special Sales

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what special sales have been approved by the management committee of the European Economic Community over the past 12 months; and if he will publish a table showing the amount of each sale, the country to which the food or wine was sent and the sale price in pence per pound.

Mr. MacGregor [holding answer 30 November 1987]: At any one time CAP arrangements provide for a number of sales schemes. These tend to follow established patterns, but the following sales to non-EC countries, agreed over the past 12 months, have distinguishing features:

Commodity	Date	Quantity (tonnes)	Country of destination	Sale price p/lb equivalent
Wheat	November 1986	375,000	Algeria/Egypt	[1]2·0
Wheat	September 1987	650,000	USSR	[1]1·6
Wheat	November 1987	975,000	USSR	[1]2·1
Barley	September 1987	850,000	USSR	[1]1·3
Butter	February 1987	35,000	USSR	[2]6·5
Butter	February 1987	65,000	USSR	[2]6·5
Butter	March 1987	181,500	USSR	[2]6·0
Butter	April 1987	18,500	USSR	[2]6·0
Butter	November 1987	200,100	USSR	[2]6·0
Beef	December 1986-November 1987	12,000	Peru	[3]28·2-36·4

[1]The price is calculated from the dollar equivalent of the price actually paid by the purchaser (including MCAs), converted into sterling at the spot rate at the time of the sale.

[2]The price is the actual sale price out of intervention (exclusive of MCAs) and converted into sterling at the green rate.

[3]The price is the sale price (including MCAs) that would have obtained if the beef had been exported from the United Kingdom, which it was not.

Unilever Merger

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications for Government policy towards competition, regional development and regeneration of the inner cities of the decision by Unilever to merge Batchelors plc with Brooke Bond Oxo plc, and to relocate Batchelors headquarters from Sheffield to Croydon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 30 November 1987]: I am aware of the decision of these two Unilever subsidiary companies to merge, to strengthen their future competitive position and help improve the security of some 4,500 employees countrywide. The choice of location for the joint head office is one for management. I understand that Batchelors Foods has announced that there will be no enforced redundancies before next October, opportunities will be available in the merged business for employees affected by the move, and external counselling will be provided to help find suitable alternative employment in cases of redundancy.

Any consideration of this merger under competition legislation would be a matter in the first place for the Director General of Fair Trading.

Improvement Grants

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is the average and total value of grants made under the national agriculture improvement scheme for each county in England and Wales in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) how many grants were made under the national agriculture improvement scheme in each county in England and Wales in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Gummer [holding answers 2 December 1987]: Grant payments in England and Wales under the national element of the agriculture improvement scheme in the 12 months from November 1986 to October 1987 were as follows:

Average value per payment	1,765
Total value of payments	5,184,000
Number of payments	2,937

I regret that a break down of this information on a county basis is not available.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether grants made under the agriculture improvement scheme are categorised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 2 December 1987]: The various categories of grant available under the agriculture improvement scheme are set out in the schedules to SI. 1985 No. 1266, the Agriculture Improvement Regulations, and in schedule 1 to SI. 1985 No. 1029, the Agriculture Improvement Scheme.

Salmon (Disease)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any evidence of disease being spread by farmed salmon escaping in British rivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 3 December 1987]: I have no evidence of any outbreak of fish disease in wild salmon as a result of escaped farmed salmon. The fisheries Departments continue to regard the control of fish diseases very seriously.

Seals

Dr. Godman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is carrying out into the harmful effects of marine pollution on seals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 24 November 1987]: The primary responsibility to keep under review the status of United Kingdom seal populations rests with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland under the terms of the Conservation of Seals Act 1970. Advice on these matters is taken from the sea mammal research unit of the Natural Environment Research Council and I understand that latest surveys indicate that the numbers of seals in United Kingdom waters are being maintained at healthy levels.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 123

SESSION 1987–88

23rd November–4th December 1987

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speakers rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
